Dedicated Crew Deserves Credit

By LAURA FORTUNATO

The air was damp and windy. The lights of the city still shown in the barely lit dawn. The only remnants of the first crew boat which passed by were the ripples upon the water. At the same time another boat prepared for departure.

V.U. Crew practices on the Schuylkill.

Within 15 minutes, the sun rose above the Philadelphia Art Museum, warming the air and illuminating the outline of each member of the boat. The water glistened in the sun's rays. Except for the coxswain's voice, the world was silent as the team continued onward, smoothly gliding through the murky waters of the Schuylkill River.

Each morning at 5 o'clock, the Villanova Rowing Club (men and women) arrives at the Schuylkill boathouse for a two and a half hour practice. For the non-rower this might be considered "crazy." But for the rowers, this is only a fraction of the sacrifices which they make for the sport. "Rising at 4:15 each morning, they devote an uncommon amount of dedication and sacrifice," exclaimed Head Coach Tully Vaughan.

The sport of rowing requires a great deal of coordination and strength by each member of the boat. The boat itself is large, but very unstable; handling it is a delicate responsibility. The shell contains a narrow gunnel, a sliding seat and an oar. Propulsion is based primarily on physics, requiring that each rower of the shell (made for four or eight persons) row in synchronization with the others. The team must also work together carefully in transporting the shells from land to water. With each boat costing $8,000 minimum, damaging a small hull could cost as much as $300. The coxswain is responsible for instructing the rowers as they transport the boats and as they proceed in a backward fashion through the 1,500-3,000 meter course.

The rowing club has been training since September. With the onset of winter, the boats were left hanging on the racks and dryland conditioning began. The program consisted of running 4-6 miles a day, weight training on Universal machines and various flexibility exercises.

The Professional Fitness Counseling Corporation, from New Jersey, came to test the rowers for upper-lower body strength, endurance and flexibility. From the results, the FCC prepared personally designed training programs for each athlete. The FCC in the past has been responsible for testing the Olympic teams.

Returning to the water in February, the crew remained at Villanova during spring break. Training twice a day, they rowed over 24 miles daily. Dryland exercises continued, with various trips to the University of Pennsylvania's rowing tanks for technique concentration.

Tully Vaughan, head women's coach, has brought to Villanova 35 years of rowing experience. Aside from coaching, he sits on the Board of Directors of the National Rowing Association of the United States. This is the national governing body of all rowing in the United States. He also serves as secretary and treasurer of the USRA. As a licensed referee, Vaughn will serve as Director of Officials for the Dad Vail Championships in May.

Vaughan's assistant Rick Pollack has a great deal to offer also. He has been an expert on women rowers for the last eight years, and has consistently sent rowers to the National Championships. Pollack is also coach of the Bachelor's Bar Rowing Club in Philadelphia.

Although Tully, as he is most often called, assumes title of head coach, he believes that Pollack is more an equal partner. The two as co-workers and co-coaches have found a special relationship. "It is unusual to be able to work as partners, but we know each other well and respect each other," commented Tully. Together Tully and Rick provide 40 hours a week each to the women's program, while Brendo Lynch and Gerry Henwood provide the same for the men's program. None of the coaches are being paid, they all have other professions, and they believe this is an unfair situation. "It is an injustice for the coaches. We weren't really looking for the job, but when the program was almost abolished in November, we decided to provide our services. If the University were to make a commitment to the program, I personally would consider making more of a commitment for next year," said Tully.

Why does he coach? "Besides being crazy," he chuckled, the fulfillment one receives from working with young people who are clearly benefiting, is worth it. To positively effect one person's life is so meaningful."

Tully's philosophy is to provide a valid platform from which they can grow mentally and physically. He believes that winning is a measurement of where you are, a goal, but the other lessons one learns is even more important. "I promise a great deal of mental and physical pain each morning. But I guarantee that they will grow as people and mature," added Vaughan.

Instituted in 1964, Vaughan feels that the program has not progressed as it could because of the lack of funds and circulating interest. "The rowers compete with first rate, major universities. They are a Class A intercollegiate power," said Tully, "Villanova is sitting on a gold mine, but they cannot run this caliber of racing on a shoestring budget," he added.

Both coaches expressed the confidence that Villanova could become a nationally recognized powerhouse as a varsity sport.

Already on their way to that goal, Villanova captured the regatta races against Iona and Lafayette, March 26. The women won first and second places in the Women's Eight event. The Men's Novice Eight won first place while the Varsity Four finished second. The team foresees a bright future in gearing towards the Dad Vail Championships in May. "In the future we will consistently produce world class rowers, time and time again," assured both coaches.

Avengers Throw Their Hat Into the New Music Ring

By CATHY GROODY

The Avengers are not just another new wave band nor are they a pop band of the '80s. They are a group of local college students who play together to create their own style and image of what they consider to be a variety of modern music.

The group is comprised of rhythm guitarist and lead singer, John Yannacone, lead guitarist, Chris Traini, drummer, Joe Nacchio, bass guitarist, Nick Anastasio and keyboard and saxophone player, Anthony Asmann.

In October of 1982, Yannacone decided to form his own band. He had played in other bands before and he saw the music business opportunity to make good money. He and two other band members, Nacchio and Traini set out to create a band with a New Wave image, yet one that was not restricted to only the music of The Clash, Elvis Costello and The Stray Cats.

"Our musical roots are in the '50s and '60s rock and roll music although we try to play mostly '80s and New Wave rock and roll," said Yannacone. "We are not a 'Top 40' band, although we can handle almost any request."

With the help of their manager Ken Bull The Avengers have been able to play at several bars in Delaware and in area universities. They have played at fraternity parties at Drexel and Temple University.

"The alcohol policy has killed our chances of playing at Villanova," said Yannacone. As a result of such restrictions, The Avengers have lost several opportunities to perform on campus. They will however, in the near future be playing at the local bar, You Bet Your Life.

The Avengers will be participating in an upcoming Villanova event; Battle of the Bands during Spring Fever Week. During this event, five or six bands will be performing mini-concerts in front of Kennedy Hall. The Avengers are planning to perform newer material such as "The Wall Came Down," by The Call and the current hit, "I'll Melt With You" by Modern English.

Right now, the group is writing some of their own music. Group members have gotten copyrights from songs they have written in previous bands. This summer, they plan to work out their originals as well as produce a videotape of the band.

"We'll see how it goes," said Yannacone when asked about the future of the band. "If we work for it, we will be as successful as we want to be. The talents are there, we just have to develop it. But we also have to stay in touch with reality. We are not full-time musicians nor do we expect to be. But, we still have the same passions. We're just going to take the band as far as it goes."

Balloon Day 1982

By MICHAEL NOLAN and STEVEN TIMBRESAS

This Tuesday, April 19, we invite you to join us in a celebration of springtime and to share in a visible expression of the value of caring.

In this tenth anniversary of Balloon Day, our goals and intentions are twofold; it is a day when we will rejoice in the coming together of our community, both within the Villanova family and beyond the University boundaries into the surrounding community. We unite on Balloon Day in a demonstration of our concern of our neighbors. We aim to make visible that Philadelphians do live in a "city of brotherly love." All funds from this event will lend a helping hand to the homeless and hungry folks in our backyard.

Balloon Day is more than a party or festival. It is a day when a special happening will be experienced by all who partake in the celebration. Such an experience is born from the energy of people who have devoted themselves towards a common altruistic goal.

For all those striving to create the Balloon Day experience, Tuesday will be an emotional day of satisfaction, pride, and elation. The persons who have united to make this happen, unlike cogs in a cogwheel, will come to a heightened understanding of the value of their person. They have seized on the opportunity to give and care for others. They also act as mediators in bringing together the Villanova community. Perhaps such community builders and the sharing of common goals should be a more frequent occurrence in our lives.

This is our opportunity to reach out to those less materially fortunate than ourselves. We are not talking of those who simply do not have a car or even a pepperoni pizza at midnight. We are referring to those who have no roof over their heads and walls to surround them. By nature, we are insensitive; by this we do not mean apathetic or negative, but generally unaware of what it is to have nothing except that which you can keep in a paper bag. Is there any way to comprehend the fact that if you took the undergraduate population of Villanova, added 2,000 people to that group, you would be able to begin to grasp the number of homeless people in Philadelphia. To be without a home is to be without a dwelling, but more importantly it can mean to be without love. We, the Villanova community, will enjoy Balloon Day; we will get into the music, laugh at the comedians, and fill ourselves with food. Take a minute during the day, however, to think about the food you ate, the games you played, the balloon you bought and person you dunked in the dunking pool. Reflect upon those you helped by participating in this day. You have joined with the community of which you are a part in helping to feed, clothe and give shelter to a person less than 20 miles away.

Stack Speaks on V.U. Issues

By MICHAEL MORAN

May will mark the ninth anniversary of the ordination of the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A. as a priest in the Order of Saint Augustine. It also marks the end of his first academic year as Dean of Students at Villanova.

When the Rev. Robert Martin, O.S.A. vacated the position last year, the Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A. appointed Stack as the new dean of students. Up until that time, Stack had been teaching part time here at Villanova and serving his vocation by recruiting prospective seminarians, an occupation very different from his present one.

Stack feels that his position as dean of students is much more hectic than his previous duties of recruiting people for the seminary. Now he must deal with problems on a daily basis. Many of these problems are inherited as well as new. Perhaps the two most controversial topics he must deal with that came with the post are the football question and the alcohol policy.

On the subject of football, Stack believes that students had their priorities mixed up during football seasons of the past years. This is evidenced by the discrepancy between the attendance at the tailgates in the parking lot, and the attendance at the games themselves. This factor plus the cost of the program contributed to the decision to drop football at Villanova.

"I would like to see football again," he says, "but only if the students go to the games in support of Villanova football, not just parking lot parties."

On living in a dorm as opposed to the Monastery, Stack states that there are both advantages and disadvantages. The best thing about living in Delurey Hall, which he calls the "best dorm on campus," is that he remains in close contact with the students. On the other hand, after dealing with some of the problems that go with his job, close contact with students can be a bit taxing.

In dealing with the recent controversy of many students having to move off campus, Stack explains that several problems contributed to the decisions that were made concerning students being forced to relocate due to the lottery.

In recent years, Stack believes, Villanova had three categories of students: commuters, residents and off-campus residents. Students were given residency based on high school academics and how early they applied. Next year, all incoming freshmen will be offered residency, forcing many students to move off campus.

Also contributing to the problems of residency is a decrease in commuter applicants and an increase in applicants for residency. The University has been increasing its admissions in recent years, but is cutting down acceptances for next year. This is despite receiving the largest number of applications in Villanova's history.

In the future, the new dorms will help alleviate some of the problems with getting housing for upper classmen. In answering the complaints of students who say it is difficult to find apartments in the area that allow students to lease, Stack suggests that these individuals see the Rev. Frank Farsaci, O.S.A. or Eileen Masterson. Farsaci is the advisor for off-campus residents and his office is located on the second floor of Dougherty Hall. Masterson works in Residence Life.

Dean of Students Rev. John Stack, O.S.A.

All in all, despite having to deal with problems, both petty and serious, and a very hectic schedule, Stack enjoys his job. He says that most students here at Villanova are serious about academics and are good cooperative people. This and the fact that he graduated from here in the class of '71, helps to keep Stack on a one-to-one basis with the Villanova Community.

Alumni Enjoy Coming Home

By RUTH THOMAS

As days become warmer and longer a certain madness creeps into the blood which is often referred to as "Spring Fever." People fall in love, students miss classes, the summer athlete feels a need to stretch his or her limbs, and old Villanovans come back to Villanova. It is not a "homecoming" as in the fall but an abandonment of the demands being placed upon them by the "real world" and a return to those simple days that we never really believed would end. To top things off, Villanova men's basketball team had made it to the playoffs and they needed support. This is the tale of a few grads that reappeared for the weekend to watch a game and a few other things.

They arrived on a Friday evening, after a few beers, at the home of a friend who was still among the ranks of Villanova undergrads. Their accommodations were meager but they had not been expected. Saturday would be a big day so they huddled under their raincoats on a mattress on the floor (no heat, of course) and attempted to prepare themselves for the weekend ahead.

Bright and early Saturday morning they made their way to campus. Showers had not been provided by their host so towels and soap were borrowed from various sources and they worked their way to the showers in Sullivan Hall. The sweet sensation of nostalgia overtook them — old reflexes came back to life. Two showers were all they needed but out of old habit they turned on five extra showers to coerce the burners in the basement to produce a modicum of hot water. They were not in the shower more than a minute when old reflexes once again took their toll.

"Lookout!" one screamed to the other and they quickly jumped out of the showers to avoid the searing results of a toilet having been flushed in the next door bathroom.

Showers taken care of, redressed and ready to go, the boys set off for Kelly's — a ritual location for spectator participation in Villanova sports. I had decided to accompany the boys on this part of their adventure partly to watch the game but also to help shield them from any of the shocks which might be invoked upon them by two years away from this infamous drinking establishment.

"Kelly's, what a concept! Do they really serve food here?" Mike was quite taken aback by this new discovery.

"To think, we could have been eating OLESLAW all along and I thought they were only kidding about that menu sign. What is OLESLAW anyway and why is it only $1.25?"

I tried my best to respond to their inquiries. I had been checking up on other grads who had made the return to V.U. and they confided in me that it is quite natural for former Villanovans to know only what is on tap in Bryn Mawr and Ardmore and not who served what to eat. They assured me that I should not be alarmed by my friend's reactions.

MTV was, however, even more of a shock. Technology had arrived at Kelly's and my friends were a tad startled by this new addition. Mark was more than delighted at the prospect of watching Elvis Costello in these new surroundings. But, they were both disappointed that these new amenities were not enough to coax the resident fox out of hiding and down to Kelly's. Their search for her would continue later.

Saturday night was spent in a binge of partying — I lost track of my friends somewhere playing TV trivia but I was not afraid for them any longer. It appeared they were aptly prepared though a little rusty for the events of a typical Villanova weekend.

On Sunday it was time for a road trip to McDonalds to get us motivated to head back on our seperate ways — me to classes and they to their respective occupations. When we left Sheehan for the car we were quite unprepared for what awaited us.

"O'B.," I gasped, "you have a parking ticket!" The disbelief was all encompassing but short lived and was quickly replaced by frivolity as we glanced ovr the charges listed below and the cheerful inscription of "THANK YOU, VIOLATOR" emblazoned in red ink across the bottom of the ticket. We were so illegal, so intriguing, surely the resident fox would be interested in Mike now.

The day was drawing to a close. It was a beautiful sunny Sunday and my friends and I were innocently strolling across campus when we came into view of a mob scene in the quad between Sheehan and Sullivan.

"At least we know nobody does work on Sundays, still," Mike pointed out.

"Yeah, but frisbees flew higher and farther when we were here. And where are the cookouts in the quad?" Mark lamented.

We could also recall a few other things that had flown out the windows of Sullivan in their day thanks to the strong arm of some former football players. We decided to steer from the subject of football immediately and enjoy the inter fraternal conquests taking place in the quad. Maybe the resident fox would make an appearance.

Goodbyes were sad and said too often. It was unrealistic to picture these former students walking off into the sunset so we dismissed the thought. They were happy and sad about their weekend here but it was something that had to be done, a rite of passage. They took with them new memories of fun moments as well as their old memories for a place that was and will be so much a part of their lives for many years, Villanova University.

Newly Discovered Relief for Acne

By
DR. ANDREW K. POLLACK

Question: I have recently heard about a new medicine for acne that supposedly cures the disease. Is this true and, if so, is it presently available?

Answer: 13-cis retinoic acid (Accutane), a drug chemically related to vitamin A, does appear to be a revolutionary discovery in the treatment of acne. The drug is currently available by prescription at local pharmacies and is indicated for patients with severe cases of acne or acne resistant to other forms of treatment. Evaluation of patients who would greatly benefit from this medicine is best determined by an experienced dermatologist.

It appears that Accutane works by inhibiting the function of sebaceous glands which are important glands in the cause of acne. In this way, Accutane has been shown to result in complete and prolonged remission of acne. In previous investigational studies it has been found that most patients require one course of therapy — fifteen to twenty weeks — and that improvement of their condition generally begins within the first four weeks. After the course of treatment has ended, patients usually continue to improve with many demonstrating complete clearing of their acne.

Although side effects are common, these are usually not serious and are reversible after discontinuation of the drug. Most commonly, patients note drying of the skin, lips, mouth, nasal passages, and eyes. Patients who wear contact lenses may note that dryness of the eyes temporarily prohibits them from wearing their lenses. It should also be noted that Accutane cannot be given to pregnant women or patients with elevated blood fat levels.

Overall, 90 per cent of the tested patients who did not respond well to other treatment improved significantly with Accutane. Therefore it is easy to see why dermatologists consider this new medicine to be a turning point in acne management. If you should have additional questions contact your dermatologist for advice.

Dr. Pollock graduated from Villanova in 1975.

The Naked Civil Servant Speaks Out

By BRIAN C. BALSAMINI

Quentin Crisp came out of the closet on the streets of London as a self-confessed and self-evident homosexual. From there was born "The Naked Civil Servant." Crisp first became known in America through the TV dramatization of his life, which won an international Emmy. Born in 1908 in London, Crisp today resides in New York City.

I had come across this man while watching "Late Night with David Letterman." His carefully worded replies to Letterman's often sarcastic questions told me that he knew the rules of the game played between host and guest. He also mentioned to Letterman that his phone number was listed in the Manhattan phone directory. My interview was born.

I was to meet Crisp at the corner of East 3rd St. in Manhattan, not exactly Park Avenue. The interview would take place in a quaint diner down the block.

One would never have had to have met Crisp to recognize him. At 75, he still dons the attire of what he is as a human being. Resplendent in light eye shadow, mascara, a long black coat and fedora-like hat, Crisp looked ready to take on the world, a world which only recently had somewhat accepted him.

As we entered the diner, it was obviously a place where Crisp was a regular, familiar with the surroundings. This was becoming "My Dinner with Andre."

For close to two hours I spoke to this man; I was fascinated by what he had to say. Of course, there were the obvious references to his homosexuality, for the man has become a symbol of struggle and unacceptance, but there was more. Crisp has traveled much and has lived in England for most of his life. What started out as an interview changed into a discussion of cultural differences between the United States and England and other various subjects, all of which Crisp was opinionated on. Most of the time, I sat attentive, not unlike a young child listening to a storytelling grandfather.

Crisp moved to New York City several years ago and immediately fell in love. "When the English ask if you have been to America, they mean New York. If they inquired as to whether you have been to New York, they mean Manhattan," Crisp explained. "The reason I love America is that everyone is your friend." Crisp is an idealist and would look at the proverbial glass as being half-full. He cannot comprehend that New York is as liberal as it is, and a virtual welcome mat for people of all shapes and sizes.

In fact, Crisp is totally enchanted with America. In England, he acknowledged all people under 25 wish to be Americans, dressed in full western garb. Most of them have never even seen a horse in their life, but they don't mind.

Crisp stated, "If you go to England as a female, you would not be as well-treated as in America. English men do not really like the society of women and this does not mean that they are all queer. It is just that the girls speak in a different language, practically. The men compliment the women all the time, which is their manner of avoiding conversation. It is the most boring thing you would ever want to see. The women never get a chance to express any of their views or feelings."

As for comparisons with England, Crisp felt that the American man-woman relationship was a bit cozier. "In England, the men call their wives 'old girl,' " Crisp elaborated. "Who wants to be called 'old girl?' In America, the wife is called honey or dear or baby."

Crisp also mentioned that the food in America was very rich. "Americans eat too much," Crisp said. "In England the people could live on the food thrown away here."

When Crisp says that, he means it. Later on, I was to enter what Crisp calls his "humble" living quarters, in order to secure the accompanying picture for this article. Humble, is an overstatement. Crisp lives in a one-room, $65 a month apartment. As I cased the room, the first thing that caught my eye was the dirt that blanketed the room. "After four months it doesn't get any worse," Crisp proclaimed. One interesting aspect of his dwelling, was, that neatly stacked in the corner of his room were his excuses for not cleaning, a year's worth of finished New York Times' crossword puzzles. Crisp seemed to have no desire for any exercise, other than for his mind.

Television was one medium that amused Crisp quite a bit. His views were unorthodox but rather thought-provoking. "Television is survival of the glibbest," Crisp said kiddingly. "Everyone who appears on television is a virgin. Every sin is forgotten. That woman who allegedly administered the drug that killed John Belushi is now a 'TV star.' People, especially her friends, will say, 'I saw you on TV last night,' conveniently forgetting why she was on," he added. "Elizabeth Taylor, she has been married six or seven times. Who cares? She can't be a slut, she is a television star," he concluded.

Crisp felt that today's supposedly sophisticated society is not that at all. "Homosexuality is not better understood today; it's just put up with a little better. People care less," Crisp noted. "Most moral values have indeed eroded in today's world, ' e reason being that the young are rich. This is why there is more sexual freedom and, in essence, this is the problem," he reasoned.

Crisp does feel some satisfaction from his most famous (?) book The Naked Civil Servant. "I was sitting on a bus and a man said, 'I was thinking of killing myself until I read your book.' " Obviously Crisp was pleased that his writing had not been written in vain.

" People see in me a person totally without qualifications, affluence, laudible attributes, or influence who has somehow become a successful failure. And they see that anyone can do it. And the best thing is, they can."

As for an epitaph, Crisp does not want to be bothered. "The people who care what is on their tombstone, are the same people who think they will be able to look down from the clouds and count the people at their funeral. Of course they won't — they'll be dead," he laughed.

The Meaning of Laughter

By MIKE NOONE

Have you ever wanted to know the reason you're here, and the answer to the question of life? If you have, then perhaps Monty Python's latest movie "The Meaning of Life," can help. Once again the Pythons have put their witty heads together to produce more of their unique satirical style and madness. "The Meaning of Life" is an angry comment on the ills of society and, while it is funny, it is not as hilarious as earlier Python movies such as "The Holy Grail." The movie is made up of several short vendettas, each depicting a different aspect of life including birth, middle age and death.

Although the Python's last films, "The Life of Brian," and "The Holy Grail," poked fun at history and our view of it, "The Meaning of Life" deals with modern problems and more closely resembles their earlier television shows. As usual, nothing is sacred or secure enough to escape the attacks of the Python gang. Among other things, they poke fun at religion, medicine, education, the British Army, big business, and Americans.

It never ceases to amaze one how these six men, with no formal acting training, can convincingly portray waiters, philosophers, priests, and women with ease. The Pythons take a stab at religion by examining the life of a working class Catholic man, who is forced to sell his multitude of children for medical experiments, for he can no longer support them. While the man is exposing the sacredness of childbirth, his protestant neighbor, across the street, reduces his church's philosophy to the use of condoms.

Since explicitness has long been a characteristic of Monty Python's material, "The Meaning of Life" is no exception, for it is full of gore from beginning to end. In one scene, a liver is removed from an unfortunate man who is still using it. In another scene, by far the most popular, an obese man stuffs himself in a restaurant and, in his gluttony, he explodes.

"The Meaning of Life," has no plot or central characters, and scenes are often abrubtly interrupted by ridiculous interludes. These breaks keep the audience in a continual state of shock and maintain spontaneous humor throughout. The movie is a masterful work of comedy with both subtle and silly humor, though it is not as lighthearted as earlier works by the Pythons. Of course the Pythons don't expect to win any awards, but the movie is worthwhile for its freshness and boldness. Because the movie is under the complete control of the Pythons, they are not afraid of insulting anyone and continually push the boundaries of comic expression.

Keeping Up With 'The Beat'

By MIKE NOONE

Recently, this writer saw The English Beat and The Thompson Twins at the Irvine auditorium. This is the second time The Beat has toured the U.S. and, while the group has long been popular overseas, this tour is bringing them some wide attention in the States for the first time. Their latest album, "Special Beat Service," has been on the charts for twenty weeks and is receiving good airplay.

The Thompson Twins opened for The Beat with a set lasting just over an hour which was composed of their synthesized dance tunes. The sold-out crowd was very receptive to both bands and obviously were out looking for a night of dancing. The Thompson Twins played the majority of their set from their latest album, "Side Kicks." Their style relies heavily on percussion and synthesizers, but they manage to create catchy tunes like "Lies" and "Love on your side" which were true crowd pleasers. The most interesting aspect of their set was the use of shadow scenes and complicated lighting effects. Although the Thompson Twins played "Lies" twice, the crowd never tired.

The Beat came out onto a simple, plain stage set, reflective of their straightforward musical character. The band started out with several songs from their first album, which was heavily influenced with Ska, including "Big Shot," "Mirror in the Bathroom" and "Twist and Crawl." They then proceeded to their latest album, which includes the hits "Save it for Later" and "I Confess."

The Beat was formed in 1979 by lead singer and chief lyricist, Dave

'Betrayal Bedazzles the Mind

By JAYNE M. STUART

Take any ordinary theme such as adultery, work backwards from end to start, and use only three characters and what have you got? "Betrayal," but it sounds kind of bland. Well, "Betrayal" is anything but boring. It is a fabulous movie with thought-provoking dialogue, effective close-ups and a touch of humor.

"Betrayal," directed by Sam Spiegel, is centered around a married couple, Robert (Ben Kingsley) and Emma (Patricia Hodge) and Robert's best friend Jerry (Jeremy Irons). Emma and

Jeremy Irons

Jerry are having an affair which has been going on for quite some time. Emma and Robert think themselves rather clever but they really aren't as careful as they think. But I'm not going to tell you the whole story. Anyway, it doesn't matter because it starts from end and works its way to the beginning. A new technique, undoubtedly, but very effective. Harold Pinter's play was adapted wonderfully to this strange method.

It somehow makes the story all the more interesting because the audience is "playing" the role of the gypsy with the crystal ball. Moving backwards elicits unusual emotions. Since you already know the outcome, you tend to pity the doomed lovers. At the same time, the expected feeling of sorrow for the husband-best friend character is a constant throughout most of the movie.

It would be difficult to focus on the foremost aspect of this movie. However, the dialogue is simply brilliant. Each character rarely has a sentence of more than ten words, but being typically Pinter, each word rings in your ear long after it has been spoken. Another effect of this brevity of speech is that each character may be thinking about something other than what is being said.

The other outstanding feature of "Betrayal" is the close-up shots. On stage it is the prolonged silences which produce the enormous tension and mood. On film, the close-ups of each character's face depicts the anxiety, anguish, fear and joy, which each character feels.

This movie is unique in that it portrays the three different viewpoints and emotions of the people involved in a "love triangle." It brings to life the intensity of a relationship between two men and the extent of forgiveness one can have for one you love, while at the same time sheltering this well of forgiveness from someone else. "Betrayal" runs the gamut of thoughts and emotions the people involved in this situation must have.

Fine performances are given by the three main characters. No one person is noted as the star but Kingsley comes closest to stealing the show. He is the perfect English aristocrat: distant, intelligent, witty and deep. He has burst onto the American movie scene with a display of truly fine acting abilities. In contrast to his role in "Gandhi," Kingsley takes a 180 degree turn. With this role, he solidifies his position as one of today's great actors.

Jeremy Irons also turns in a superb performance. His every gesture is appropriate, yet comes naturally. He is dutifully torn between his lover and his best friend but hides it from both of them, while displaying this anxiety to his audience. He is the stereotypical lover yet gives this character a unique and likeable personality.

Hodge delivers a fine performance. In a manner of speaking, she has the most difficult role. From the start she is portrayed so matter-of-factly that she does not elicit sympathy from the viewer. At film's end each piece of the puzzle is put into place. Interesting, because apparently there is more to it than meets the eye.

"Betrayal" is both daring, and unique, while the acting is simply wonderful. It's an enjoyable film from finish to start.

Coppola Film is a Waste of Time

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

"The Outsiders" directed by Francis Ford Coppola, is a dreadful movie that supposedly depicts the problems and obstacles of growing up.

Back in 1965 in Tulsa, Oklahoma, a teenage boy got beaten up on his way from school. Ryan thus S.E. Hinton wrote her novel of the same name. Her book was touching and insightful, and something in which youth can identify with. The main theme is a clash between poor boys without (greasers), and the affluent youths (the socs).

In Coppola's film, there is not any of the passion of Hinton's novel.

I wonder if Coppola spent any time in putting together this movie. What year is the film set? The Chevys would tell you 1957, but the modern buses say 1983! The hairstyles say 1965, but the modern, rounded popcorn cups also say 1983. If this sounds picky, it isn't, only because there are flaws throughout the film.

The film's star Matt Dillon portrays Dallas Winston, a greaser who is supposed to be tough and tired of running. Quite profound. The only thing is, the audience is tired of hearing the greaser's stories while they are beating up people and reciting Robert Frost.

Dillon is not a good actor. In fa he is rather mechanical. But Co pola is intent on making him th next James Dean.

Overall most of the actors i this movie look so young that yo end up laughing as they smok and make their various hooliga remarks. Fake backgrounds an ridiculous situations are only few of the other atrocities in th film. The movie just never ad dresses one thought throughou and becomes very tedious.

Matt Dillon, C. Thomas How ell and Ralph Macchio

Francis Ford Coppola's Zo trope Studios recently went unde due to financial difficulties. "Th Outsiders" isn't about to help pa the bills.

Squire Turns the Volume Up

By SUE BREHM

Boston-bred Billy Squire brought his brand of pop-oriented rock music to the Spectrum March 29, marking his debut as a major headliner. Squire proved that he has as much class as his namesake describes.

The Billy Squire Band consists of Squire (vocals, guitars and sundries), Alan St.Jon (keyboards, synthesizers and backing vocals), Jeff Golub (guitar), Doug Lubahn (bass and backing vocals) and Bobby Chouinard (percussion) who plays some of the heaviest pop-rock 'n' roll to be heard today.

In the past few years Squire has become a Philadelphia favorite. His polished rocking style, dynamic stage presence and unique vocals have proven to be enormously successful. The audience enthusiastically welcomed them as they opened with "Everybody Wants You," from Squire's new album and third solo collection "Emotions in Motion."

Sticking to the studio versions they continued to perform a selection of songs from Squire's long line of commercial hits, including "Whadda You Want From Me," "I Need You," and "Learn How to Live." Clad in sexy, athletic wear, Squire shed his guitar and energetically fronted "My Kinda Lover." He provocatively strutted around the stage teasing the hearts of his young, female followers.

As songwriter/singer/lead guitarist and completely in charge of his sound and destiny, Squire released his solo debut "The Tale of the Tape" in April 1980. The album earned raves by the press and radio alike.

His second LP, "Don't Say No" (April 1981) was a double platinum and produced three hit singles.

Billy Squire was recently at the Spectrum.

"Emotions in Motion" (July 1982) was spontaneously written in just 22 days and contains timely material garnered from immediate experiences. Lyrically, Squire has managed to retain a fresh perspective and prefers to create a situation in which the listener is as much a participant as an observer in the statement being made. The sixth number "Too Daze Gone" was repetitious, as were "She's a Runner," "Emotions in Motion," and "Listen to the Heartbeat."

The crowd reacted wildly as they closed the set with "In the Dark." Their music contains no thematic complexity, however it is melodic and tightly performed. The sound is refined.

They came back on to play two well-known tunes. The first song "Stroke" was clearly constructed with commercial potential in mind. During this song Squire smoothly executed a seductively choreographed dance. They ended with "Keep Me Satisfied."

Opening the show were the energetic British heavy-metal rockers Def Leppard. These five talented rock-crazed lads are touring to promote the recent release of their third album "Pyromania" — which is currently burning up the charts.

Leppard's action-packed set consisted of eleven of their most popular songs and included their four hits: "Wasted," "Bringin' on the Heartbreak," "Rock! Rock! (Till You Drop)," and "Photograph," respectively.

A Good Old Fashioned Time

By JOHN F. LYNCH

Houlihan's Old Place is a fine escape from the everyday restaurant/cafe, which many of us find when we go out to have an enjoyable meal, and at the same time seek a place to dance.

Although Houlihan's is a chain of almost ten, spread out over the Northeast, they can boast of a homey atmosphere that is both comfortable and impressive. The menu is quite extensive with everything from hamburgers to quiche. The special surprise is the French onion soup which is really a meal in itself. Salads at Houlihan's are fresh and generous. You can see the pride and concern in satisfying the customer when you see how neatly the salads are arranged.

The entrees offer something for both seafood and beef lovers alike. The prime rib is a hefty portion and the seafood is fresh and once again, well prepared.

The service is generally good; however, on the weekends, you could find yourself having to wait a bit longer due to the popularity of the establishment. Reservations are not accepted at Houlihan's, which can also add to the waiting.

The other aspect which makes Houlihan's so popular is the bar/disco area, which is elaborately decorated with murals and different posters of celebrities and models. Although the drinks are expensive, the dancing is exciting to participate in and enjoyable to watch. The dance floor could be a little bigger but no one seems to care once the music begins. The disc jockey is usually good, piping the proper mix of both disco and new wave music.

The dance area is surrounded by small tables for two which supply a place to just sit and talk and enjoy a drink. During happy hour, a free buffet of vegetables and meat balls is offered to those interested.

Houlihan's is indeed a good place to spend an evening where you can enjoy good food and at the same time have dancing and drinks available for your pleasure. Houlihan's Old Place is located in the Court of King of Prussia. It is open daily from 11 a.m. till 12 midnight on week nights and until 1 a.m. on the weekends. Dinner is served until 10 p.m., but the bar closes at 10:30 p.m. on Sundays. Be prepared to go home with an empty wallet after a night at Houlihan's, but rest assured that the money was well spent.

Wakeling, in the midst of a Ska revival in England. However, they are not strictly a Ska band, as evidenced by their latest album. They blend punk and reggae together, to produce a fast dance tempo. The Beat seem destined for sucess after the reception of the Clash earlier this year. While the Clash are more idealistic, the Beat offer a down-to-earth message against the problems facing modern industrial communities, with a blend of lightheárted songs about the politics of love. Wakeling himself offers this explanation for The Beat's latest success, "All of a sudden, songs like 'Get a job' are about America, whereas, two years ago, they were about England . . . The musical climate has changed as well as the social climate . . ." The truth of this statement was shown at the huge audience participation in each song.

Wakeling introduced "Stand Down Margaret," a protest song about Margaret Thatcher, as "England's version of stand down Ronald." Toaster Ranking Rogers' continual dancing and toasting got the crowd moving from the beginning of the concert to the end. Wakelings' continual comments and jokes regarding each song enabled The Beat to get their message across, without being overbearing. The band was originally composed of three black members and three white members, but because of health problems, the sixty-two-year old saxophone player, Saxa, was replaced. A younger member (and the former road manager), Blockhead,was added as a full time keyboard member. The mixture is a success. The Beat's set was full of music from beginning to end, often running two songs together, allowing the crowd no time to relax. Throughout the concert one gets the feeling that the Beat are trully enjoying themselves and care for the audience. You won't find any aspirations of superstardom in this band; they are only interested in playing fun music and pleasing the audience. All of this they accomplished with ease. Each of the band members has a unique personality and is a pleasure to watch, but the true genius of The Beat is their ability to mesh together to form a tight, kinetic dance band with an important message. This band's style, energy and raw fun is a welcome change from most of the "mush" circulating around the music business today.

Ginsberg Again Makes a Statement

By BARBARA SIMON

And the "Beat" goes on. Continuing with the same avant garde style manifested in the '50s, poet Allen Ginsberg released a record album of his poems set to music. "First Blues" is a conglomeration of diversified music. Included are ragtime ballads and harmonium songs, gospel, improvisations, renaissance lyrics, Blake hymns, bluegrass, country and western, dirty dozens and new wave. Yes, this double album is that varied in content. What remains the same in every song is Ginsberg's deep voice and his vocal presentations; he barely pauses between lines producing a long-line effect. Ginsberg's poetry attempts to express thoughts as if they were being read — "We think rapidly, in visual images as well as works, and if each successive thought were transcribed in its confusion . . . you get a slightly different prosody than if you were talking slowly," says Ginsberg.

Influenced by Biblical rhetoric, 18th-century English poet Christopher Smart, Whitman and Blake, Ginsberg wrote "Howl," which is a document of the beat movement of the 1950s. The familiar disconnected phrases from this long prophetic poem are heard on "First blues," but the sentences are shorter, and there are countless repetitions; auditory expression is not new to Ginsberg since he has been giving lectures and poetry readings at universities, concerts and festivals since the '60s.

In 1976 Ginsberg attempted to record an album but CBS considered the songs obscene and disrespectful, and they refused to release the album. Producer John

Hammond said, "I am thrilled to finally be able to present Allen on my own label; not only the 1976 sessions but those from 1971 and 1981 as well. I will present "disrespectful" music like this as often as possible."

Some songs are indeed as distastefully crude and as blatantly gross as the wit of George Carlin's motifs. Songs like "Guru Blues," "You are my Dildo" and "Hardon Blues" are peripherally pornographic. However, his intellectual messages masterfully override the dirty words; the poems are anti-capitalistic, anti-nuclear weapons, anti-nicotine and anti-establishment. The lyrics are imperative statements against all that is wrong in the world, according to Ginsberg. In "Capital Air" he states that capitalism and communism are synonymously bad systems — "Everybody's lying on both sides Nyea, nyea, nyea/The bloody iron curtain of American image of Russia's red Babel-Tower."

While Ginsberg condemns the materialistic world he also condones peace and spiritual truths in "Love Forgiven" and "Father Death Blues." "Gospel Noble Truths" expounds the beliefs of Buddah followers — the celebration of suffering and the Four Noble Truths.

Bob Dylan and other poet friends of Ginsberg jammed, improvised and rehearsed before putting together "First Blues." Listening to Ginsberg is a jolting experience (shocking if one does not use the word damn in one's vocabulary), awakening emotional,political and social ambiguities of today and yesteryears. Ginsberg's statements are reminiscent of Jack Kerouac and the "Beat Generation" of which Ginsberg was once a part. "First Blues" is indeed Ginsberg's personal and most controversial musical poetry. It is more sacrilegious than religious and equally bureaucratic as it is pro-individualistic. It's alright for Ginsberg to be forceful and appropriately rude in his messages for worldly health and harmony. After all, Ginsberg is older, intelligent, liberal and above all, he says it with a chant.

Women's Lacrosse Loses Twice

The Villanova women's lacrosse team was again beat when they were at the hands of neighboring Bryn Mawr College.

The Cats were playing a fine game [illegible] a 3-1 lead at the [illegible] of Bryn Mawr's [illegible] and eventually took a three goal lead into the locker room at halftime. The Cats matched Bryn Mawr goal for goal in the second half but were unable to come any closer, losing the game 13-10. Junior Robin Lucarini, in her first game this season, produced a three goal effort. The ten Wildcat goals were the most scored by the team in a game this season.

In more recent action, the Wildcats took to the road to take on the strong team from Swarthmore College. Swarthmore started things off right away, scoring twice off Nova goaltender Mindy Levengood before Lucarini put the Cats on the scoreboard with her fourth goal of the year, making the score 2-1. Swarthmore continued to dominate play and intimidated the Wildcat players. They scored nine times to take an 11-1 lead at halftime.

The Wildcat defense played somewhat better in the second half allowing just six goals. However, the Wildcat offense was nowhere to be found as a zone defense by Swarthmore completely shutout the Cats.

The loss dropped the Cats' record to 0-4. The Wildcats will be on the road for their next game, to be played this afternoon at Haverford College.

College Basketball Review

by Al McGuire

Welcome to Miller Time NC State! Houston was the odds-on favorite, but Albuquerque's sun finally smiled on the Wolfpack. Tobacco Road got its double pack — two NCAA titles back to back — from North Carolina and now the Wolfpack.

The game was decided, I think, when with a six-point lead, the Cougar's went to the hanky-panky. In all fairness, it was a good move strategically by Guy Lewis, who was trying to give his aircraft carrier a breather. But it also reminded me a lot of what happened in 1977 when North Carolina also gave up its momentum... and Marquette won the championship.

If a new star was born, it was Houston's seven foot center, Akeem Abdul Olajuwon. And if the baton is passed on from Ralph Sampson, it now is a push as to whether Patrick Ewing or Akeem will receive it as the new Empire State Building of college basketball.

While North Carolina State had a nice mixture, its bench strength appeared as a likely soft spot. But Valvano is a maestro who orchestrated a Beethoven's Fifth Basketball Symphony, a Park Avenue performance. A toast to Valvano is definitely in order for playing his subs to perfection.

One of Houston's problems, I think, might have been its mental attitude which carried over from Saturday night's game. In the press core, there was an undercurrent that the championship game had already been played Saturday night against Louisville, and this might have affected the Cougars as well. There's no doubt Houston has an NBA front line, and Guy Lewis did a great job bringing 'em out of the Southwest Conference, but I think Clyde Drexler's four fouls early hurt them more than anyone realized. All in all, NC State was sharper.

And as in so many earlier games in the NCAA tourney, the opposition gave NC State one more chance. After that, it was Valvano ordering his kids to foul the weak man, Whittenburg's last javelin toss, and Lorenzo Charles soaring high in the Carolina sky to stuff the title away in the Wolfpack's pocket.

Tennis: Inexperience Hurts

Gallen Leads Young Squad

By LAUREN SEAVER

Last month, the Villanova men's tennis team began its season, and out of 15 scheduled matches, only eight were played. The cause: rainouts, cancellations and forfeits. Thus far, the team's record stands at 3-5.

"The team has a very tough season," said senior captain Paul Fitzsimmons. "We're playing better schools."

The Wildcats battle mainly against Division II clubs. Among the more challenging opposition is Millersville, St. John's, Bloomsburg State (nationally ranked in Division III) and Haverford.

"This year is going to be a lot tougher," Fitzsimmons commented. "We've lost two starters to graduation and two other starters are injured." These starters played numbers two, three and six singles last season. Because there is no one really to replace them, last year's number five performer has been moved into the number two slot.

According to this year's number one singles player, sophomore Larry Gallen, "The team is inexperienced." While last year only six players saw action, this year 12 are suiting up.

This season's new singles starters include junior John McNulty, sophomore Scott Miller and freshmen Jim Mattutat and Pete Russell. Returning are Gallen and Jon Lee in the top two singles slots.

As for doubles, Villanova's best combination is also Gallen and Lee. They are followed by Mattutat and McNulty, then Miller and Russell. Normally, Fitzsimmons teams up with Gallen, but an elbow injury has sidelined him momentarily.

No doubt, Gallen is this year's standout. The Memphis, Tenn., native has already chalked up six victories in seven outings. A nationally-ranked junior in high school, Gallen is noted for his high speed serve.

"He has one of the fastest serves in the East," said Fitzsimmons. "His serve is about 115 m.p.h. while the average is about 90 m.p.h."

Gallen goes through many games with aces because his serve is so difficult to return. Against Millersville, he beat Miles Grey, one of the top college players in the East.

"So far I've had a good season," Gallen said. "But I feel I'm not playing that well — just well enough to win."

Lee, another outstanding performer, has been a three-year starter and is noted for his top-spin ground strokes.

"He's had some big wins against Lehigh and St. John's," said Fitzsimmons.

Thus far, the Cats have lost to NYU (1-8), Franklin and Marshall (2-5), Fordham (0-9), Lehigh (2½-6½) and St. Joseph's (4-5). The Wildcats have posted wins against Kutztown, Trenton State and Rider College.

According to Fitzsimmons, the team is "getting a lot of experience but we haven't gotten many breaks. We anticipate about a .500 season."

The upcoming Rider Invitational should be one of the season's highlights. Last year the Wildcats captured the title. "We want to win this the most," said Fitzsimmons.

COURTING SUCCESS: Villanova's tennis team hopes agreeable weather will aid its efforts to improve upon a 3-5 season mark. The Cats were only able to complete eight of their first 15 scheduled matches due to poor weather and forfeits.

Beisel Wears Two Hats for Cats

By TOM REUSCHE

Once again, it is time for Villanova basketball trivia. Question: Name Villanova's first team All-Big East Conference guard. Hint: This athlete wears number 10, and is the school's all-time assist leader. Answer: No, it is not Stewart Granger. It is Kathie Beisel.

When Beisel concluded her college basketball career last month, the four time All-Big Five selection left this legacy behind: Villanova women's basketball's all-time leader in assists, steals, games and minutes played; second in scoring; and third in rebounding.

"She is probably the epitome of why our program has been successful the last few years," said Harry Perretta, women's basketball head coach.

Beisel was voted the area's Outstanding Women's Basketball Player by Philadelphia sportswriters this season, but basketball is only one of her sports. When the hoop season ends, she trades her sneakers for cleats and heads to the softball diamond.

"There's not as much pressure involved in softball," said Beisel, comparing the game to basketball. "It's just fun. I'm out there to enjoy myself."

Playing left field may be "fun" for Beisel, but opposing pitchers see no humor when she steps to the plate.

Last season, she led the team with a .419 batting clip and posted the highest totals in doubles, triples, homeruns and runs scored. In 43 at-bats, no pitcher struck her out.

As a sophomore, Beisel played volleyball as well as basketball and softball. In all three she sported the number 10, a personal habit that dates back to her freshman year at St. Hubert's High in Philadelphia.

Number 10 was Perretta's first recruit as Villanova's new coach, and the basketball program has developed around both of them.

"I've seen him grow as a coach," said Beisel, "just as I have grown as a player. We've both grown a lot."

Despite her enormous contributions to the program, Perretta is not overwhelmed by Beisel's career.

"I saw that in her in high school," said Perretta. "I put very high standards on Kathie."

Still, he admires her determination, playing all-out on knees constantly bandaged.

"There were games," said the coach, "where she just dragged her leg up and down the court."

Concentrating in criminology, with a minor in religion, Beisel last spring earned a 3.3 cumulative average. Not a bad achievement, considering at the time she was helping her basketball team to the AIAW Final Four, playing on the Big Five All Star team and starring in softball.

Laxmen Net Two Wins

By CAROLYN MILLER

The Villanova men's lacrosse team had two victorious games over Lehigh and Montclair last week, giving them an impressive 5-2 record.

The laxmen defeated Lehigh 15-10 and Montclair 17-11. Top scorer for both games was Budweiser Athlete of the Week, sophomore John Haggarty, with six goals against Lehigh and five goals, one assist against Montclair.

The team's other top scorers, sophomore Mike Cortese and junior Ken Crowley, also contributed goals and assists to each game.

Goalie Drew Cunningham broke his previous records with 25 saves in the Montclair game, which according to Coach Randy Marks, was "an outstanding achievement." Teammate Mark Bruno was awarded the "game ball" for the Montclair game. Marks feels the defense for both games was very good.

Villanova's defenseman Gold allowed Montclair's Kevin Oxley to score only one goal.

Commenting on the team's overall performance, Gold feels, "The turnaround in the offense has been remarkable, even though last year's top scorer Ken Delgatto was injured." Gold also stresses the fact that, "The total team effort this season has been great. The midfielders have been very helpful."

Marks feels the highlight of the season thus far was their opening win over Western Maryland, since they had never before beaten them. That victory was the first as a college coach.

Marks' long term goals for the team involve improving their playing potential to the greatest extent. Also pleased with the team's effort and performance, he remarked, "As the team has had a number of previous losing seasons, they had to start believing that they were a good team."

Marks added that the laxmen have "a chance for an outstanding season." According to Gold, his goal for the team is "to have a season record of 10-2."

Rowers Triumph

By TOM REUSCHE

Villanova's best-kept sports secrets, the men's and women's crew teams, continued their winning ways on the Schuykill River last weekend. The men defeated Stockton State, George Washington, Drexel and Washington College, while the women/novice rowers set back the varsity teams from Washington College and Stockton State, as well as La Salle.

The success of both teams pleases Tully Vaughan, head coach of the crew program, but the apparent obscurity this club sport dwells in chagrins the coach.

"We are woefully underfunded and undersupported," said Vaughan, also the executive secretary and treasurer of the United States Rowing Association.

Club sports do not enjoy the glamor or funding of major varsity sports. Still, Vaughan's 46 highly motivated and dedicated crew members are gearing up for national and international competition.

The Dadvail Regatta, regarded as the national championship for small to medium (in size and funding) rowing programs, is slated for May 13-14 on the Schuykill. Villanova will compete in a field of over 2,000 rowers from 115 schools, among them Notre Dame, San Diego, Alabama and Toronto.

Competitions like the Dadvail and the Canadian Henley Regattas develop Vaughan's student-athletes, and reflect the coach's philosophy: "To provide for the students a vehicle of psychological and physical development through rowing."

With an internationally experienced coach, and their "home river" located in the USRA's national headquarters, Villanova's crew program is a major event waiting to happen.

"The University," said Vaughan, "is sitting on a time bomb waiting to go off. Support is desperately needed from students, alumni, faculty, administration and the press."

Tracksters Tune-Up at Dogwoods

By JOE BAGLEY

One of the best kept secrets at Villanova this year is that the men's track team finished second in the national indoor championships with more first places than any other team. And just last weekend at the Dogwood Relays in Tennessee the team took long strides towards qualifying for and winning the national outdoor title.

Freshman John Keyworth finished second in the Invitational Mile with a 4:01.92 clocking. He was defeated by a semi-professional from the New Balance Track Club by 4/100s of a second. His time was good enough to qualify him for the IC4A Championships. Coach Charlie Jenkins, though, thought even this was not enough.

"The NCAA is not taking mile times, it is taking 1500-meter times (as qualifying standards). I disagree with that. John went by the 1500 meters in 3:45, whereas the NCAA qualifying standards are 3:43," said Jenkins. What the NCAA qualifying standard fails to take into consideration is that a runner will begin kicking faster towards the end of a mile run, but the qualifying standard for the shorter 1500 meters will never include that kick.

Jenkins did not assemble his most formidable relay squads in order to allow key runners such as Carlton Young, Mike England and Keyworth to chase NCAA qualifying times in individual events. In contrast, the week before, at the Martin Luther King Games Villanova ran its best relay teams in order for them to qualify. Jenkins is shifting runners in different events and relay squads now, because he feels the team has so few meets in which to qualify for the nationals.

"It's because you get to a meet like the Big East, and athletes are not as fresh because you're trying to win a championship. In that situation it's not as easy to qualify for an NCAA because you're running just fast enough to win so that you get points for the team. The same thing applies to the IC4As. And the Penn Relays."

That leaves only eight meets in which the runners may qualify for the nationals. Villanova, after only two outdoor meets, has three national qualifiers: Keyworth in the 5000 meters, Rodney Wilson for the 110 meter hurdles and Craig Morris for the 400 meter hurdles. Coach Jenkins has stated that the team's goals are to qualify "a mile relay team; Carlton (Young) in the 400 meters; Keyworth, England and Marcus O'Sullivan in the 1500 meters; and John Marshall in the 800."

The recent relays in Tennessee provided nothing in the way of qualifying marks, though some performances stood out. The relay team of J.J. Clark, Ken Lucks, Brian O'Keefe and Marcus O'Sullivan beat out Indiana by three seconds to capture the 4 x 1500 meter event. Chip Jenkins continued his upward curve of success by recording a 47.2 split in the Distance Medley Relay, breaking his personal best for the second straight week.

Look for continued success and more qualifying tomorrow as both the men's and women's track teams travel to Georgetown for the Hoya Invitational.

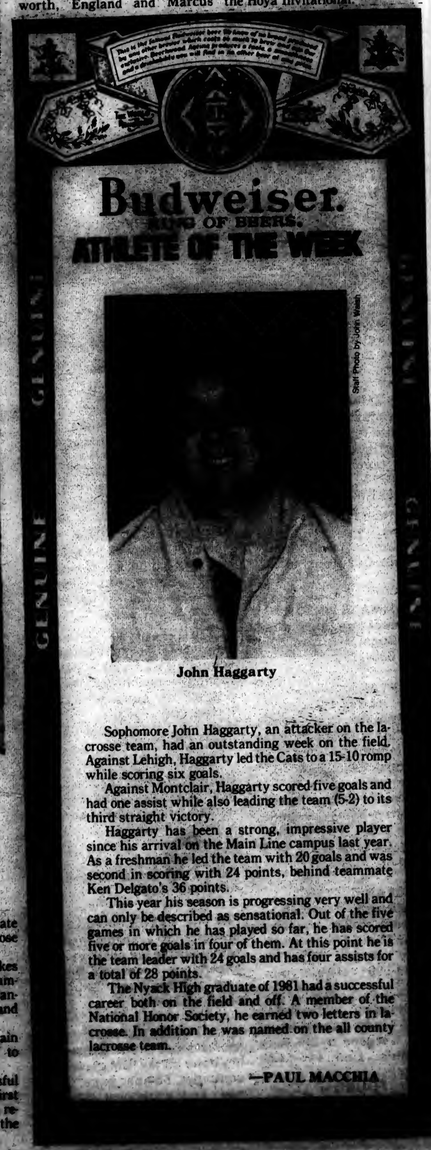
Villanova's Marcus O'Sullivan is one of many Wildcat tracksters who hope to carry the team's indoor success into the outdoor season.



John Haggarty

Sophomore John Haggarty, an attacker on the lacrosse team, had an outstanding week on the field. Against Lehigh, Haggarty led the Cats to a 15-10 romp while scoring six goals.

Against Montclair, Haggarty scored five goals and had one assist while also leading the team (5-2) to its third straight victory.

Haggarty has been a strong, impressive player since his arrival on the Main Line campus last year. As a freshman he led the team with 20 goals and was second in scoring with 24 points, behind teammate Ken Delgato's 36 points.

This year his season is progressing very well and can only be described as sensational. Out of the five games in which he has played so far, he has scored five or more goals in four of them. At this point he is the team leader with 24 goals and has four assists for a total of 28 points.

The Nyack High graduate of 1981 had a successful career both on the field and off. A member of the National Honor Society, he earned two letters in lacrosse. In addition he was named on the all county lacrosse team.

Women Excel on Tobacco Road, Qualify Ten for Easterns

By BEVERLY REILLY

Flying south last weekend, the women Wildcat tracksters attempted to recapture their 4x400 meter and distance medley relay titles at the 21st Annual Carolina Relays. The Cats were successful in maintaining their title in the distance medley relay. The team of Joanne Kehs, Sharon Margaretha, Vickie Brown and Mary Ellen McGowan pooled its talents to capture the gold. The Wildcats broke the tape in 11:42.96.

Partly due to a mishap in the baton exchange zone, Nova was unable to recapture the 4x400 relay title.

Junior Patty Bradley and freshman Kehs both gained individual honors as well.

Bradley won the 400 meter hurdles with a time of 60.19. In the 100 meter hurdles, Bradley broke her own school record with the new time of 14.39. Kehs captured the 800 meter run, crossing the line in 2:09.13.

Other key talents shone in the 1500 and 5000 meter runs. Brown ran a strong race to capture second place in 4:29.3, just 2.4 seconds short of first. Teammate Mary Ellen McGowan was a close third in 4:30.7.

In the 5000 meters, Jan Yerkes took third in 17:09.7, while teammates Eva Marie Berardi and Janice Rau followed in sixth and seventh places respectively.

In the field, senior captain Peggy Stewart jumped 5'8¼" to grasp second place.

The trip proved to be successful as the Wildcats totaled three first place finishes, one Villanova record and ten qualifiers for the Eastern Championships.

Leahy Wins Presidential Race

By LINDA BOND

Patrick J. Leahy, capturing 45 percent of the undergraduate vote, was elected president of the 1983-84 student government on April 14.

Out of the 2422 ballots which were cast in the presidential race, Leahy drew 1090 votes, while Mary Beth Bogan received 732 votes, Laura Moreno received 389 votes, and Joe McColgan received 211 votes.

Arts senatorial seats went to Dan Capodilupo, who received 369 votes, Patrick Connell, who received 261 votes, and Chris Dunn, who received 243 votes in a competitive race in which 10 candidates vied for three positions.

Commerce and Finance senators are Tom Sullivan, who received 308 votes, and Mike Ryan, who received 275 votes and will assume his second term in student government.

Newly elected science senator is Claire Strobenau who received 122 votes. The nursing senator will be Janine Alfano who took 130 votes. Jon Meisel won the engineering seat drawing 106 votes.

All terms begin May 1, 1983, and continue through May 1, 1984.

President-elect Leahy said, "After I won, I was elated. My head was in a cloud. The first thing I did was run and call my grandparents.

"I'm very pleased that I received the vote of confidence that I did, and I will do my very best to live up to the expectations of the students. The past student government has done a good job. I want to do a better job."

The amount of money candidates were permitted to spend on campaigning was increased this spring from $100 to $125 for presidential hopefuls, and from $40 to $50 for senatorial stumping.

Because of past complaints from students, faculty and administrators about the annual deluge of campaign posters, the Elections Committee imposed quotas for their use on students. According to Student Body President Paul Tufano, this was also intended to free up money for spending in other areas.

There were no reported violations of campaigning rules as occurred last year. Tufano commented that "there were no problems and it was by far an improvement compared to previous years. There was a more friendly atmosphere among the candidates. I'm very pleased that we don't have to put time into grievances this year."

Election returns were delivered to a crowd of approximately 200 people in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall at 1 p.m. by Tufano, following a delay of one-and-a-half hours. During the interim period candidates were asked to take down their posters around campus.

"I'm concerned about a lack of experience," said Tufano about the new president. "It will require a good amount of time for him to learn about the Senate and its procedures, in addition to other issues that are pending.

Patrick J. Leahy, student body president-elect.

"He can be a successful president if he takes advantage of some of the inroads we have laid," said Tufano. "Pat certainly has a lot of energy. I'm cautiously optimistic."

Transition meetings are planned so that the present student government can meet with next year's representatives to review issues and Senate procedures.

Leahy said that one of his main goals was to make student government more accessible to students. Concerning his election, Leahy said, "I've had a fantastic response from students. The current student government has been helpful in arranging the transition meetings."

Leahy had a meeting last night with his senators-elect to discuss filling the vice-presidential positions.

Senate Approves Fall Break

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

A resolution to institute a week-long fall break was passed by a unanimous senate vote on April 8. The rational for the fall break, according to Student Body President Paul Tufano, is that it is a long haul from Labor Day to Thanksgiving weekend and it would be beneficial to provide a change of pace needed for the students and faculty alike.

Under lying support came from the University Academic Calendar committee.

For a fall break to be inserted, the administration set the criteria to be met as the fall break to be one week, keep the Wednesday before Thanksgiving a holiday, one reading day, six exam days and 65 class days, and have exams end on December 22.

The Rev. John P. O'Malley, O.S.A., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, supported the resolution by pointing out that the number of students who come to him with extreme anxiety on account of the demands and the intensities during the fall semester are increasing every year. "The possibility that this could be a University induced problem concludes that a fall break could eleviate these severe or complex problems," said O'Malley.

Senator Joseph Thompson supported the resolution since "the break would be beneficial to both the students, to catch up after mid-terms on their notes and papers, and also to the faculty, to catch up on grading midterms and papers."

The resolution did meet opposition from Senator Edward Wallo, who felt the week-long break in the fall would lead in the continuing negative solid academic direction the school has been heading in.

Procedure problems to be met refer to the date as to which week to have the break and whether it would interfere with the possibility of having to start school before Labor Day.

The motion to extend library hours has met final approval from the University President, the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., and the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for academic affairs. There will be extended library hours at the start of the examination period. "Roughly," the library hours will change from closing at 5 p.m. on Friday and Saturday night until 9 p.m., and on Sunday morning the library will open at 9 a.m. instead of at noon. On weekday nights, the library will stay open until 1 a.m. The new library hours will be into permanent effect in the fall of 1983.

Driscoll contended that the students part would be to work on a reduction in the noise level in the library.

It was advised that the Board of Trustees approved the budget for the 1983-1984 fiscal year, that the Senate approved at the March 18 meeting.

The Senate recognized those faculty senators who are retiring from service on the Senate. Among the senators acknowledged were, Senator Robert Nally, for serving since 1977, Senator Theodore Kondolian, for his service, and Graduate Senator Joseph Paterson, for his two years on the Senate.

Tufano closed his second year on the senate with "a mixture of satisfaction, pride, sadness, and optimism." Tufano recognized the Senate's importance as an opportunity to discuss issues important to the successful operation of the University.

Faculty Senate members newly-elected are Dr. Benedict A. Paparella, selected to fill the Arts seat, and Dr. Lorraine J. Tulman, to serve on the Nursing Academic Policy Committee.

Lindback Awards Voting Procedures Questioned

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

Questions regarding the manner in which nursing students were asked to vote in the Lindback Awards nominations have stemmed from the unusually high participation of nurses in the balloting procedures.

Several University nursing students have said that they were told whom the faculty was going to vote for and that they were encouraged to "be aware" of that vote.

Dean of Nursing Louise Fitzpatrick spoke at the annual Nursing Conference in the Field House on March 21. The nursing students received the day off from classes and clinicals to attend the conference.

In reference to the Lindback Awards, a junior nursing student, who asked not to be identified, quoted Fitzpatrick as saying, "The nursing teachers were not represented for the past few years," and "if you are voting, Mrs. Maurer would be a good person to vote for." The student said, "Fitzpatrick went on to say that she thought this person was a good teacher to vote for and mentioned why."

At the lecture, according to Fitzpatrick, "I told the nurses to exercise their option to vote and to vote their own conscience. Information was shared on the faculty's vote, but I only encouraged the students to vote."

Another nursing student, a sophomore, said that Fitzpatrick stated, "By everyone voting, it would be a way for the nursing students to unite and come forth for recognition. Jean Maurer would be a good teacher to vote for," and then listed Maurer's qualifications, according to the student.

"I did not encourage whom to vote for," said Fitzpatrick. "I said the faculty decided to support Jean Maurer, but they (the students) were certainly being asked to vote, we did not say whom to vote for."

Fitzpatrick continued that she told the nurses "the faculty had decided to vote for Jean Maurer because she had been a nominee for the award before."

In campaigning for the Lindback, "It is a matter of taste," said Dr. Joseph George, Jr., chairman of the history department and chairman of the Lindback Awards, "and it is inappropriate to recommend a fellow teacher.

"It is tacky for one to say 'vote for me,' or 'vote for a fellow colleague,'" said George. He specifically pointed out that all voting is conducted by a secret ballot.

Assistant Dean of Nursing Rose O'Driscoll agreed that there was a concentrated effort in getting the nursing students to vote. "The dean had said at the conference that the nurses had to pass the voting booth and to exercise their opportunity to vote. The dean also did tell who we, as the faculty, are backing, but then said, 'you as a student vote for who you please.'"

In a letter sent to George from the Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for academic affairs, Gallen wrote, "After the lecture, the dean spoke to the students urging them to vote. She

Villanova "Men"

Congratulations to the winners of "The Men At Villanova Calendar For 1984":

Frank Dunne —	Cover Man
Steve Perrella —	January
Brian Peterson —	February
James Adams —	March
Joe Buggy —	April
Larry Goanos —	May
Ron Klass —	June
Michael Jones —	July
Tom Bennett —	August
Neil Murray —	September
Michael D'Arcangelo —	October
Tim Curran —	November
Luis Pedera Fuster —	December

Calendars will be available next fall.

Balloon Day Postponed

Due to the unspringlike weather this past week, Balloon Day is postponed until Tuesday, April 26, 12-5 p.m. The balloon launch will be at 3 p.m.

Softball

The raindate for the Pi Kappa Phi Softball Marathon will be April 23. This event will be co-sponsored by Miller High Life Beer and is a fundraising event to support the fraternity's National Service Project: P.U.S.H. The event will take place across from the Field House and will begin at 8 a.m. Food and refreshments will be served and all students are invited to attend.

Volleyball

Come out Sunday and watch the Villanova Men's Club team in their first home tournament. Play in the four team tournament begins at 9 a.m. Sunday and continues all day with the final at 3 Sunday afternoon. All play will be in Butler Annex.

Philosophy

On April 30, from 9:30 to 4:30 the Eastern Philosophical Association will hold a conference in the Wayne and St. David's rooms of the Connelly Center. A number of philosophical papers will be presented, followed by discussions. Full program details can be obtained in the Philosophy Department.

Ushers

Anyone interested in ushering for commencement contact Christine Storck at 645-7280, or come to the Villanova Union office no later than April 22.

Student Trainers

Applications are being taken for next year's work as student athletic trainers. Tuition waiver possible, previous experience desirable but not necessary. Must be willing to make a commitment to V.U. athletics. Contact Dan Unger at ext. 4125 in the training room.

Senate Positions

Any student interested in serving on a committee of the University Senate should pick up an application in the Student Government Office, 204 Dougherty Hall, next week.

Sunshine Day Thank You

A big "THANK YOU" goes out from Social Action Office to all of you who helped to make SUNSHINE DAY such a big success last Saturday. The involvement of the students (especially the fraternities — APO in particular — and sororities) gave the kids who came an experience of real caring and joy! Thanks go also to the others who made the day a good one by their efforts in preparing for it: The Villanovan, the people from maintenance and security, and food services and the Villanova band members who joined us to brighten spirits while the clouds were still in the sky. The whole day was proof that when each person contributes something of himself or herself, it all adds up to a REAL SUCCESS for all, and so THANKS TO YOU, FROM US!

Library Hours

The Library hours will be extended during exams as follows: Friday, April 22 — 8 a.m.-10 p.m.; Saturday, April 23 — 9 a.m.-10 p.m.; Friday, April 29 — 8 a.m.-midnight; Saturday, April 30 — 9 a.m.-midnight.

Special Olympics

Plans and meetings have been held by the newly formed Management and Games Committee for the 1983 Special Olympics tournament to be held October 15 and 16 on Villanova's Campus. 300 to 400 athletes are anticipated to attend this fall's tournament. In addition to the already popular frisbee and soccer competitions, a three kilometer and five kilometer mini-marathon will be held this year in an attempt to broaden the number of sporting events held. As with any expanding program volunteers are always needed and greatly appreciated. Registration for volunteer committees and "Huggers" will take place early next fall.

Astronomy

Villanova University will present two astronomy shows on April 22 and April 29 in its planetarium.

"The Comets: Primeval Messengers from the Outer Solar System" is the subject of the April 22 show.

"The Saturn Story," an astronomy show on the second-largest planet in the Earth's solar system, will be featured April 29.

Weather permitting, visitors will be able to make actual observations of the spring skies through the university's six-inch refracting telescope, following the presentation in the planetarium.

Both shows begin at 7:30 p.m. and will be held in the planetarium on the fourth floor of the University's Mendel Hall. Admission is free, but seating is limited. Call 645-4820 for more information.

Planetarium

On April 23, the Villanova Astronomy Department will participate in National Astronomy Day by sponsoring several activities. Starting at 6 p.m., tours of the department's facilities and films will be offered. Planetarium shows and observing through the department's Ginch refractor telescope will begin at nightfall. Refreshments will be served.

French Club

There will be an important meeting on April 26 at 12:45 in 201 St. Thomas. Elections will be held for next year's officers.

Communication Arts

There will be a mandatory meeting! Discussion concerning the future of the Communication Arts Society. April 28 at 4 p.m. in 14 St. Mary's. Refreshments will be served.

Parking Fines

The Security Department reminds all students to pay outstanding parking fines with the Security Office before the end of the semester. Non-payers will have the fines assessed against their accounts.

DTD Raffle

The winner of the Delta Tau Delta 50-50 raffle was Tricia Mallon of Sheehan. The winning ticket was drawn by Bob Novak, R.A. of Sullivan Hall, on April 16. Congratulations to Tricia.

Spring Concert

Spring has arrived! Come celebrate with the Villanova Women's Glee Club and their guests, the Villanova Singers; this Saturday night. The concert will begin at 7:30 p.m. in St. Mary's Chapel and a reception will follow. All are welcome to attend and admission is free.

Accounting Society

Congratulations to the newly elected officers of the Accounting Society for the 1983-84 school year: President — Paul Camparielli; Vice-President — Brian Connors; Secretary: Chris Carroll; Treasurer — Ron Bristol.

Also, a very special thanks to our past president, Kim Neifer for doing an outstanding job in coordinating this year's activities. Her hard work and dedication is greatly appreciated.

Career Plans

All seniors are asked to notify the Career Development Center of their career plans. If you have obtained a job or been accepted to graduate school, please stop by the Center in Corr Hall to complete a senior survey. If you have not finalized your plans, the Career Development Center is interested in assisting you through a job search program. Groups of graduating seniors from each college (living in the Philadelphia area) will be able to meet through the summer with a career counselor to develop job leads and sharpen placement strategies.

Please stop by the Center at your earliest convenience.

Summer Study

During the month of August, courses will be offered in France and Spain. For further information, please contact either Fr. Roman or Dr. Mongeau at the Department of Modern Languages (645-4680) before the end of the semester.

Summer in China

Rosemont College is sponsoring a Summer Program in China in collaboration with East China Normal University, Shanghai from June 3 to July 27.

The total cost is $2750 and includes tuition fees (3 units or 9 credits), Round-trip from New York City (JFK), room and board (3 meals per day, 2 in one room), and all excursions and 10-day visit of 4 cities.

Participation is limited to 15 students of all ages (or teachers).

For application and inquiries contact: Dr. Alfone Leagre, Program Director at Arts Division, Rosemont College, Rosemont, PA 19010 or call 527-0200 Ext. 323 or 525-7999 in the evenings.

Faculty Vote on Football Issue

By LEONARD J. LABARTH

A ballot has been sent to all full-time University faculty requesting them to vote on the possible reinstitution of football.

Conducted by the Villanova chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP), the faculty polling is the second step in an attempt to determine faculty sentiment toward football restoration. On March 21, the AAUP sponsored a faculty forum that featured a debate between several faculty members and an extensive question and answer period with the audience. Minutes from the meeting have been distributed with the ballot to the faculty.

Final tabulations are expected to be completed within the next week.

At the faculty forum, the six panel members: Ed Rideout, director of the Alumni Annual Fund; Warren Richardson, chairman of the communications department; Dr. Charles Cherry, assistant to the vice president for academic affairs; Dr. Joseph DeaJardins, who chaired the Senate subcommittee on the restoration of football; Dr. Ted Aceto, director of athletics and Student Body President Paul Tufano, all agreed that football should be reinstated but disagreed as to what level.

Ballot

What position should the faculty take on the restoration of Villanova football? Poll of full-time faculty conducted by the Villanova Chapter, AAUP. Check only one of the six blanks below.

1 ☐ I oppose the reinstitution of football at Villanova University.
☐ I favor the reinstitution of football at Villanova University on the following level:
2 ☐ Division IA — up to 95 scholarships.
3 ☐ Division IAA — up to 75 scholarships.
4 ☐ Division IAA — with no scholarships but with grants-in-aid based on need and talent.
5 ☐ Division II — up to 45 scholarships.
6 ☐ Division III — with no scholarships.

One of the main focal points that developed at the meeting was the need for an understanding of restoration at Division IAA — with no scholarships but with grants-in-aid based on need and talent.

For the faculty-distributed minutes, Aceto clarified several points about Division IAA with grants-in-aid.

First, prospective football players would have to apply through the Villanova financial aid office for state and federal grants and loans. Those receiving aid would not be taking money from other Villanova applicants because these funds have off-campus sources and the recipients would be eligible for this aid regardless of what school they attended.

The second stage would consist of prospective football players applying again to the Villanova financial aid office for additional monies. The additional funds would be made available from a special fund not yet created to finance football. The fund would consist of several sources: the $35 fee per student that students agreed to pay with yearly tuition; a yearly Wildcat Club contribution; the gate receipts from football games, part of which would be the 3,000 tickets per game which the alumni have pledged to buy; and some University contribution.

According to Aceto's clarifications, "prospective football players would compete only with one another for these funds that would be awarded on a basis of both need and talent. No student would receive more than he needs." Reapplication for grants will be necessary yearly with possible differences in the awards.

Villanova Road Sign Approved for Schuykill

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

Villanova University and Rosemont College will share a new road sign informing travelers of the Villanova Rosemont exit. After five years of persistence, PennDOT has agreed to approve Villanova's application for a sign, 15 feet wide and seven feet deep stating: Villanova University, Rosemont College, Exit 27, to be constructed between the Valley Forge tollbooth exit from the Pennsylvania Turnpike and the Gulph Mills exit 27.

"In all probability, the sign will be up before graduating ceremonies this year," said Eugene Ruane, director of Public Relations. PennDOT agreed to have the sign up in two weeks, but Ruane was hesitant in confirming that final construction date because "it was not to take five years for the application to go through," said Ruane.

"The years of delay are on account of the red tape, making it difficult to get a sign up," said Ruane. "PennDOT is particular on what signs go up on the Schuykill since it is a state expressway.

Ruane also pointed out that a large percentage of visitors to Villanova University come by the way of the Pennsylvania Turnpike, many of whom have never been to Villanova's campus before.

Ruane had to report to PennDOT that the sign would be beneficial to a large number of visitors and students. Through recording the volume of traffic to Villanova, conclusions revealed a majority of visitors and students travel to Villanova via the Pennsylvania Turnpike.

"The only students who would not come down the extension would be those coming from South Jersey," said Ruane.

The project will be financed by Villanova University and Rosemont College. Villanova had an application in since September, 1978, and later Rosemont applied for a sign of the same nature. Since the schools shared the request for a sign stating their exit, it was suggested that the two combine their appliction request to construct a sign including both schools' name.

PennDOT's decision on where along the spread of approximately three and a half miles the sign will be constructed will depend on their research of the reaction time a driver needs upon reading a sign before the exit, and other such safety measures.

"We are trying to get it up now because it would be nice for students to be able to tell their parents and friends coming for the first time to Villanova to exit following the sign rather than having them search for the Gulph Mills exit," said Ruane.

Commencement Schedule

The speakers for the 1983 Commencement ceremonies have been selected. In the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, the Commencement speaker for the Arts will be Paula C. Garell and the alternate, Paul P. Andrews. For the Sciences, Commencement speaker is Carlton J. Young with an alternate of Paul D. Banick.

Commencement speaker for the College of Nursing is Mary McGuinness.

The alternate speaker is Nancy J. Martin and the Graduate speaker will be Geraldine B. Connor.

In the College of Engineering, Robert Schmidt was selected to be the Commencement speaker and Daniel Berninger as the alternate.

College of Commerce & Finance Commencement speaker is Paul Tufano and the alternate is Jeffrey Straccia.

University College commencement speaker will be Max Levins, and Carol G. Knewstub is the alternate.

Commencement speaker for the Graduate school has been selected as Sr. Helena Mayer, S.H.C.J. and the alternate speaker as George P. Bross Jr.

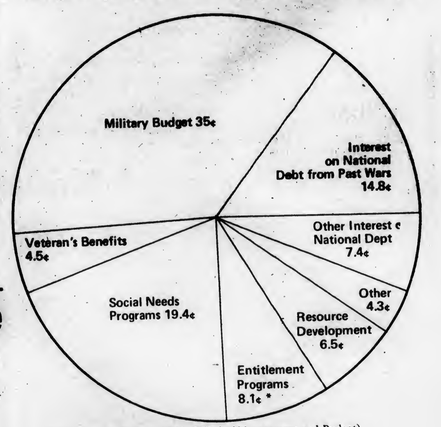
Taxes to Military

By TIM GALLAGAN

Ben Biber, staff member on the national Jobs with Peace campaign, spoke at a presentation sponsored by the Progressive Coalition for Peace and Justice and Campus Coalition for Central American titled "Jobs with Peace" held April 13 in the Connelly Center Cinema.

Through a speech and slide show, Biber tried to show how much money is being allocated to the Pentagon when it is needed in other social programs.



(Source: U.S. Budget, 1983, Office of Management and Budget)
*Social Security not included because it is not funded by tax dollars.

The Jobs with Peace Campaign, organized in San Francisco about five years ago, aims to have national referenda passed which will force the government to put money into the social programs rather than the military.

The biggest source of funds to these programs would be directly generated by a nuclear freeze between the United States and the Soviet Union. It has been estimated that $84.2 billion could be immediately saved as a result of a freeze, and an additional $87 billion by the mid-1990 s.

In the Philadelphia area alone, $278 million would be saved if there was a freeze and other extravagant military expenditures were eliminated. Biber said that this money could be invested in social programs such as: jobs and job training, housing, health care, education, human services, transportation and aid to the business sector.

Military does not efficiently create jobs, according to Biber. In a time of high unemployment, the investment of government money into the pressing social needs would create more than four times as many jobs than would be created by putting the same amount into the military. Biber continued, stating that the goods produced by the military will not be consumed unless there is a war. Since the government is always saying that they are trying to avoid wars, the money, therefore, put into the military does nothing to stimulate the economy.

Anyone may join the Jobs with Peace Campaign, and there are no membership fees. The Campaign has two main goals: public education on the need for Jobs with Peace and passing the referenda mentioned above.

Biber is a recent arrival from Iowa City, where he studied philosophy, political science and sociology. He worked in the New Pioneers' Cooperative Society, War Resisters League, and various student groups before recently joining the campaign.

Correction

In the April 15 edition of the Villanovan an error was made in the 'Draft Linked to Grants' story. Arthur Switzer, financial aid director said, "We would not insist on anyone signing the Selective Service affidavits. We will accept them if students have no objection to signing them, but we definitely will not insist that they be signed."

Experience Not A Consideration

An analysis of last week's student government elections reveals two interesting notes: student apathy still reigns to a degree at Villanova and those students who did vote last Thursday acknowledged that they aren't ready for a woman student body president.

Of the approximately 6400 undergraduate students at Villanova, a meager 2200 voted in the elections. Current student officials have said they are pleased at the turnout, which was one of the highest in recent years. However, their pleasure at 34 percent voter turnout does not cover up the fact that students obviously do not care who leads student government as student body president and acts as representative of the student consensus. It is the same students who do not take the five minutes necessary to cast a vote that reply ignorantly when asked what the function of student government is and what student government does for the student population. The question looms as large as ever: why do students ignore the importance of these elections?

With the election of Patrick Leahy to the post of student body president, a definite vein has been struck by the electorate. Popularity, not experience, determined this year's winner. Two candidates highly qualified for the position lost out to the popularity vote. A number of minor reasons can be cited for the final outcome of the election; however, one possibility is the most outstanding: Villanova is simply not ready for a female student body president. Regardless of outstanding qualifications, students would rather see a male, albeit inexperienced, as president.

The two female candidates, Mary Beth Bogan and Laura Moreno, brought to their campaigns extensive experience as senators in this year's successful student government. Both had worked diligently on a variety of issues confronting student government and one or the other would have made a competent student body president. Instead, the Villanova populous opted to ignore the more intelligent choice and voted for the inexperienced candidate.

Leahy cannot be begrudged his victory. His obvious enthusiasm at the chance of leading student government is infectious. Leahy seems sincere in his post-victory period as the president-elect and eager to represent the Villanova student body. But his effectiveness and potency will be severely tested next fall when the realities and responsibilities of the office start to weigh heavily on his shoulders. A smattering of experience would have aided a new student body president in his efforts. Now, it's just wait and see.

Our Newspaper

"The student press is a valuable aid in establishing and maintaining an atmosphere of free and responsible discussion and of intellectual exploration on the campus. They are a means of bringing student concerns to the attention of the faculty and the institutional authorities and of formulating student opinion on various issues on campus and in the world at large."

American Association University Professors (AAUP) Guidelines

We at the Villanovan have strived this academic year to present each and every article, editorial and advertisement fairly, competently and effectively. This requires a great deal of time, effort and ability from each student involved with the newspaper. A reward such as the one bestowed upon us last week by ASPA serves as our incentive for excellence.

It is easy for students to sit back, observe the University idly and take in only what they consider pertinent to their lives. This is not enough. All the news that might possibly affect a student's daily existence must be presented in a wide-ranging, informative and accurate manner to insure an aware individual. That is the purpose of the Villanovan and one to which we will continue to answer to in the future.

Since this is the last edition of the Villanovan, responses to any issues may be addressed in the first Villanovan in the fall.

Letters to the Editor

President Elect: 'Stand Together'

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all the people who contributed so much of their time and energy to our campaign.

As we direct our visions toward September of 1983, let us realize how much more we accomplish when we stand together. As we continue to project the positive elements of Villanova University, I pledge my continued support toward the interests of the students here. Together, we really can make the difference.

Patrick J. Leahy
Student Body President-Elect

Patience

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to extend my deepest appreciation to the students of Villanova who patiently came out and voted in last Thursday's election, particularly those students in the College of Liberal Arts. I would also like to extend my most sincere thanks to my brothers of Lambda Tau Delta Fraternity and also to the executive board members of the Pre-Law Society for their constant enthusiasm, support, and advice.

As for the Arts candidates I ran with, all could not have been more kind or respectful toward the others' campaign. I am proud to say that I was in their company, for the majority worked very hard, more than the average student might know.

In regard to the new election rules, I found them to be equitable guidelines which were necessary. In comparison to past elections, they served to reduce the unnecessary and often expensive nuisance of "wallpapering" practically every inch of campus.

In conclusion, this last week has been an experience I will always remember. Again, I would like to thank the students at the polls and also the members of the Elections Commission. As a final note, I assure you that I will do the best job I possibly can.

Daniel A. Capodilupo
Arts Senator-Elect

Residence Life: No Mistakes?

The following is offered as an insight into the Office of Residence Life, not as a personal vendetta against any of the people mentioned.

For an entire year, as president of Fedigan Hall, I've worked with the Office of Residence Life in trying to make my dorm a better place to live. I found this to be a very time consuming job, with weekly R.S.A. Campus Council meetings to attend as well as my own weekly dorm meetings to organize and run. At first, things went well. Residence Life was giving us a lot of support, the members of our House Council were enthused and cooperative, and it seemed as if the barrier between residents and the Office of Residence Life was slowly being removed. Then, one wrench after another was thrown into the works, the center started to collapse and I found myself just going through the motions with no support and little effect.

The first major problem we encountered was the infamous LCB. Last fall, we were planning our first Day Hop party when we were told that for a few weeks at least, no programs with alcohol would be allowed on campus. Now, I'm not naive enough to blame the Alcohol Policy on Residence Life, or even the University. This policy is simply the price we pay for being located on the Main Line. Moreover, I do not believe that successful events are dependent on alcohol. So, the members of our House Council decided to go ahead with the plans for our party, hoping the live band we hired would attract more people. We had a lot of money in our account as a result of our fundraiser and this seemed like a good chance to use it. To my knowledge, we were the only dorm to have the guts to hold a Day Hop party without alcohol, and those who attended did have a good time, but after all was said and done we had $400 less in our account. That took care of our parties for the fall semester.

At the beginning of spring semester, we were told that all events with alcohol would be cancelled for the rest of the year, except for "T.G.'s" in the individual lounges. Since Fedigan does not have a lounge, we decided to direct our efforts to other areas. Earlier in the year, we had put up a suggestion box and one of the students suggested we try to put a milk machine in our dorm. I personally spoke to Chris Janosik, director of residence life, who told me he didn't foresee this as a major difficulty as long as maintenance could install an outlet for us. When we came back from Spring Break, the outlet was installed, but as of this date I still haven't heard any news from Janosik concerning our machine. Again, this problem may not be the fault of Residence Life, but they could send me a note updating me on the situation or telling me why a milk machine is not feasible. Thanks to the general lack of communication at this University, the simplest projects become utterly complex.

I tried to take this all in stride, but I soon found out that the members of our House Council had become despondent and were fast loosing interest. Yet, as their president, what could I say? Things hadn't worked out as well as we planned, but I still didn't feel the year was a total loss and I could only hope that they felt the same way. Perhaps this was a situation where our advisor, head resident Daniel Berninger, could lend a helping hand. Unfortunately, Dan always seemed more interested in disciplining residents than showing a genuine concern for their well being, and as a result he was not very supportive. Our programming Officer, Bill Dunne, thought maybe an Atlantic City trip would be a good idea, so we called and made tentative reservations for a bus, but this idea panned out because not enough of the residents had the money. One frustration after another led us to put all our eggs in one basket, so we planned an off-campus cook-out with our remaining $250.

When we went to check on our money, we discovered that only $135 remained in our account. Janice Mauk, the assistant director for Residence Life, had approved for one of our hall representatives to take out $115 for an additional purpose. No one told either myself or our secretary that the money had been taken out. I firmly believe that it was unfair and downright "sneaky" for the money to be taken out without my being notified. When the secretary in the Residence Life Office told us this news, Mr. Dunne made a frustrated remark that the secretary felt was directed at her.

This all happened Wednesday afternoon, and we were told to have the form signed by Tara Austin, our coordinator, and to return the form as soon as possible. Tara was not in her office so we had to wait until the next morning. In the meantime, we had to quickly think of an alternate event for the weekend. We decided to have a simple "pizza party" for the whole dorm. On Thursday morning, Bill Dunne went to see Tara and she gave him the impression that the money was already taken out, but that we would have to meet with Mauk so she could approve it. Bill made an appointment to see Jan for 11:30 Friday morning.

When he went over to Mauk's office, he found the door locked. He asked the secretary where she was and was told "she's out for the day." Bill found me around 1:00 and I went over with him to see what was up. The secretary informed us that Jan was in fact in, and that we could see her. She was busy reading the newspapers but quickly put it down to speak to us. She wanted to know what we wanted the money for and after our explanation, she told us that we couldn't have the money until Tara had signed the forms, but there was a procedure to follow and we had turned in the forms too late. She said "I'm sorry, that's just the way it is," even though we told her it wasn't our fault the forms weren't turned in on time. Then she turned to Bill and told him that the secretary had taken offense at his previous remarks. Bill explained that they were not directed at her, but rather at the Office of Residence Life. Instead of asking for an apology, Jan continued to chide him like a high school kid would be chastised and said that maybe if we had followed the correct procedure, we would have our money, but "they weren't going to bend over backwards for us."

I'm not claiming to have done any great things for Fedigan Hall. I'm human and I make mistakes but I'd be a fool not to admit them.

an exciting summer employment opportunity.

Network Publishing is a young, dynamic company with a proven advertising concept. Our first publication was The Joy Of Not Cooking (a restaurant and take-out guide) which was inserted into weekly newspapers. The response was outstanding, and we are growing rapidly. Currently, we are expanding this publication and others in the East Coast suburban areas.

Here is where the students come in. We need salespeople to work out of their homes in the various communities during the summer months. Hopefully, many enterprising Villanova students will take advantage of this employment opportunity.

We look forward to hearing from you.

Thanks

To the Editor:

I just want to write a quick thank you to Villanova security. Last week, I was hit by a car while riding my bike to school. Thank God nothing serious came from it, but security was right there (outside the Field House), called an ambulance and the Radnor police and saw to my comfort.

I would especially like to mention Ed Butka and the women in the security office who treated me very kindly. Thank you.

Budget

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter with regard to an issue which is of importance to every Villanova student. It involves the budgetary process at this school and whether we are getting our money's worth. As a University, Villanova has a commitment firstly to provide its students with a formal education. Secondly, but just as important, is it's duty to helping us grow and mature into responsible adults. This aspect could be termed our informal education. I feel there is probably a fifty-fifty split between these two aspects of college life. Within that 50 percent area of our informal education we learn to live and get along with people we have not met before. We exchange ideas with our peers who come from different backgrounds. We learn leadership skills and group dynamics through joining different organizations.

Most of us have at one time or another been involved in a student organization where we learned to work with others, handled responsibility, and become involved in Villanova. We also derive benefits from these organizations through the activities they present to us, such as: movies, lectures, social gatherings, cultural events, concerts, trips, etc. . . . I would venture to say that these student organizations and activities account for about half of our informal education. Why then, for such a major aspect of our college experience, does this school make such a small commitment to these areas? I am referring to the 1983 activities budget for all student organizations. This budget totaled $150,000 this year out of a total University budget of approximately $62 million. This represents only 0.2 percent of the total budget! An area that makes up a quarter of your education receives only 0.2 percent of your tuition monies! It is true that we already have a good activies program, even though its effectiveness is limited by such a lack of funds. Consider then, how much more could be achieved toward the students' benefit if this budget was brought up to standards which Villanova students pay for and deserve. If it was tripled or just doubled, it would be a tremendous improvement for students.

It seems to me that when a University prides itself on providing a well rounded education and yet has serious shortcomings in such an important area, we are getting ripped off.

Males

To the Editor:

This is an open letter to all Villanova males.

It has become obvious to the women who attend school with you that most of you are under the impression that because a girl expresses an interest in you, she is contemplating dragging you to the altar. Don't Flatter Yourselves. Get off your darn high horse and take a good hard look in the mirror. What makes you think that you are worth the amount of time you think we spend thinking about you? Well, let me tell you honey, you are as far from the marker as you could possibly be.

You spend your time calling and courting us, and as soon as you get a positive response, we hear the infamous song, "I don't want a serious relationship." That song is getting as much airplay as Michael Jackson's "Beat It" on WCAU.

Where do you get off being so cocky? Give us a break. Did it ever cross your feeble little minds that we're interested in having the same fun that you are? Not all of us are looking for engagement rings after the first date. The marital glint is fogging Your eyes, not Ours.

So climb down off the pedestal you've put yourselves on, and get to know us as we really are.

The Bee's

Get It Right

To the Editor:

After reading last week's Villanovan, I feel that several points need to be cleared up in regards to the newly formed Environmental Awareness club here on campus. First and foremost, this is an environmental awareness group, not an environmentalism group, and there is a big difference. One point I thought I had made clear when being interviewed by the Villanovan writer was that the group, in general, will not take stands on particularly controversial issues such as nuclear power or methods of hazardous waste disposal. Both of these are very important issues, but we just do not know enough about them to come out with stands either way. We will certainly address these topics, but in a rational, sensible manner, and the only way to do that is to hear arguments from both sides. Once a group starts taking radical or sensational stands, it alienates people, perhaps even group members. This is simply not what we need, nor what the purpose of our organization is intended to be.

I feel that we have a right to know about the events or laws that are happening right now to affect the air we breathe, the water we drink, or the places we go to get away from it all. By means of this club, we hope to make such information available. This group was formed to try to help people to be more aware of what's happening in the world, not to go out and stop progress in its tracks. Progress and environmental concern can and do exist

Education Is Not Advocacy But Dimensions of Reality

Mr. M.T.H. Bourque's reading (cf. March 25 issue of this paper) of our article in the March 18 issue reflects a misunderstanding more serious than the failure to catch the metaphorical use of the word, "genocide", in the headline. One misunderstanding among others concerns the historical "movement" of convictions from religious to political existence.

1. We trace the origin of religious intolerance and the persecution of the Jews back to the original claim of early Christians to be in possession of absolute truth. The absolute truth, be it noted, no one had ever claimed to possess before, not in India, not in China, not in Athens (and nowhere in the Gospel is the reader told he will be in possession of it).

This claim to absolute truth, that it can only be one, that every other face to face with God and the world which is not in accord with it is false and must be eradicated, is already a rationalistic prejudice, and certainly a kind of totalitarianism. And when in the passing of history this conviction is transformed and transposed from religion to political ideology, the umbilical cord has not been completely severed. Moreover, this "movement" from one level of existence to another is not a question of a "natural progression," as Mr. Bourque suggests we imply. But that does not mean it has not occurred. No doubt, this transformation and transposition is a historical happening which cannot be documented, and which may escape the eyes of those who need a "text" before they concede it. Indeed, to suggest that it "happened" may very well enrage those who "know" that it did not. Nevertheless, it is an event which did happen, despite the absence of a text to announce and confirm it.

We repeat: "Christians sowed the seed that ripened into the present fruit." Mr. Bourque says: "I cannot agree that the present . . . Jewish repression is the fault of Christianity." We ourselves said nothing of Christianism (the teaching of Jesus), and find it difficult to discover just what it is to which Mr. Bourque is here responding.

However, the possession of absolute truth, while it certainly initiates intolerance, does not explain why the Jews were singled out, persecuted, and violated. What is so peculiar about them? Did they alone stand opposed to those who possessed the absolute truth? No, not alone, but most of all. To mention why they were singled out will not only show the historically sensitive how their persecution has been rolling on and on from its earliest to its latest variants, but how the tentacles of the original persecutions reach out and down to the present day.

Everyone knows it was proclaimed early (in patristic literature) that the Jews, all of them, are guilty, betray God, are cursed, and must be punished for their crime. And if this was not the almost universal conviction, conscious or unconscious, why did the church find it fitting to declare in 1965 that the Jews as a people are not cursed, and that not all Jews, then or today, are responsible for Jesus' death? Today, what is left of this is that the Jews are guilty and must be punished. If oblivion has removed other fantastic reasons for the punishment, publicity and the power of contagion still thrust the only two left into memory: one is guilty of being a Jew, and must be punished for it.

That is one point. And anyone who does not see how later anti-semitic attitudes are explosions of a past that comes toward us - not, of course, as natural effects , is simply a stranger to the world and history.

2. Mr. Bourque objects that our outrage should be directed less towards "the Villanova University decision not to attend the Soviet Jewry Council," and more the Soviet Union and its treatment of the Jews, that is, to what he calls the "Issues." Everyone who is politically conscious knows that the "Soviet Union is built on an exclusive ideology which suppresses not only Judaism, but Muslims, Christians and other minorities as well." Consequently, continues Mr. Bourque, "no amount of vocal protest will shake the Soviet Union from their absolute restriction on speech and religion, or their belief in the absolute truth."

What we need is the deed rather than the word, and the deed for Mr. Bourque consists in economic sanctions as a way to pressure the Soviet Union on human rights.

First of all, a little research will show that the treatment of Jews in the U.S.S.R. is not the same as other religious groups. Second, vocal protest has in some instances occasioned a change or a reversal of decision regarding some Jews in the past. Finally, even if nothing whatever in changed, this does not absolve one from the responsibility and the obligation to "Break the Silence" (a headline we prefer to the one given by the editor). We, as responsible intellectuals, have the duty of denouncing some instances of inaction as another form of action, and some instances of silence as another form of speech. Inaction and abstention are not only political acts, but political instruments, and may be another means of bringing about the same results as action (Karl Von Klausewitz).

3. Our critic observes that "the primary concern of the University is education not advocacy . . . Just as a University would not designate which courses of study their students must take, neither should it select certain social causes for mandatory action or concern."

How are we to understand what Mr. Bourque means by education?

The concern of a University is not to advocate! We say the opposite. Education is a summons. Certainly not to busying one's self with every minor and incidental cause, but to our humanity. And that means to human problems and the large issues of this century. A human problem that has reached the dimensions of the world-historic, and universities are not to be concerned with it? No. Education is something different. Genuine education, reading Plato, Aristotle, Shakespeare, does not transport us into "sweetness and light." They have something more important to tell us than how to keep reality out of our life - such prosaic things, for example, as a potato famine, or perhaps even the persecution of a people.

To claim, as Mr. Bourque appears to, that the University is politically neutral amounts to saying that it does not take a stand. This is itself politically significant.

And his final question: ". . . who can say our primary concern should not be the proliferation of nuclear arms, the armies of El Salvador . . ." We fail to see just what this has to do with our point.

did mention that the nursing faculty had decided to support Jean Maurer. She did not put any pressure on the students to vote for anyone in particular. She simply encouraged them to vote. I see nothing irregular in her actions."

Gallen had been asked to investigate the possible irregularity in voting, by George.

Another junior nursing student who attended the lecture felt "it would have been fine if she (Fitzpatrick) encouraged us to vote for a nursing teacher, but when she zeroed in on one teacher, I thought it was a bit strange."

The student further quoted Fitzpatrick as saying, "In voting for the Lindbacks, we, as the faculty, choose Jean Maurer. Keep in mind who we as the faculty are voting for." The nursing student said, "Fitzpatrick covered herself, but at the same time she did state reasons why she felt Maurer was a good teacher to vote for and told us to 'be aware' of who they (the faculty) were voting for."

According to ballot award tabulations, voting for the colleges on a whole decreased approximately 150 to 175 fewer than last year; however, votes from the College of Nursing doubled from 52 to 113. Engineering increased from 65 to 68, but Arts and Science decreased from 213 to 133, and Commerce and Finance decreased from 250 to 129.

Fitzpatrick and O'Driscoll both attributed the increase in nursing votes to the fact that the nurses coming from the Field House to the Connelly Center during the voting hours had to pass by the the voting site. "It was convenient, they were reminded, and they did it," said Fitzpatrick. "The whole College of Nursing was there."

Students Get Refunds From Bahamas Vacation

By RUTH THOMAS

The Villanova Union has reached an agreement with Inter-Collegiate Holidays, Inc. to refund monies due students after the company failed to provide all items agreed to in a spring break vacation to the Bahamas.

Inter-Collegiate had contracted with the Union to provide a $399 per person package trip to the Bahamas. The package included efficiency hotel rooms, two days car rental, a cocktail party and other items for seven days and nights.

However, one week before departure, Inter-Collegiate notified the Union organizer, Kathleen Kilroy, that all students would not be housed in one hotel as had been arranged. Upon arrival in the Bahamas, students found that arrangements at a second hotel were not firm. Students were later housed in two hotels, one several miles from the other.

The Union demanded that Inter-Collegiate refund a portion of the monies to some students. The company initially refused, and then agreed under threat of a suit to be filed by University lawyers.

However, Inter-Collegiate offered to pay $1900, while Union officials determined, through an itemized accounting of items denied to students, that they should receive $3000.

In a final attempt to get a complete refund, the Union threatened to report Inter-Collegiate to the National Association of Campus Activities, an east coast network of colleges. Inter-Collegiate conceded to the Union's demands, and students who were denied parts of the contract will be refunded between $30 and $60 each.

side by side, but they must be delicately balanced. I was particularly angered by the "motto" that the writer made up for our group. If we were to have any motto, I feel that the one the Sierra Club uses would be far more appropriate. "Not blind opposition to progress, but opposition to blind progress."

Presently, we are still in the organizational phase, but we hope to be a very active club on campus starting next fall. I feel that a group like this can be interesting to people from all majors since environmental topics are so far reaching and have real impact on all of us. The present membership comes from many diverse backgrounds and we're always looking for new members and new ideas, particularly from underclassmen. I think that a group like this can work. People are interested and concerned. We just need to know more, and this can be a great way. I hope that now this makes clear the real meaning of Villanova's Environmental Awareness Club.

Missed

To the Editor:

The article in the April 15 Villanovan concerning the new law linking federal student aid with draft registration (the Solomon Amendment) contained numerous factual errors which I would like to try to correct. Contrary to several statements in the article, this is not a proposed law, but one which Congress passed last summer and which the President signed in October. Unless blocked by court action, it applies to all Pell Grants, SEOG, work study, NDSL, GSL,PLUS loans and State Student Incentive Grants for the periods beginning on or after July 1, 1983.

What the law says is that any student who is required to register with Selective Service must certify that he has done so in order to be eligible for these forms of federal aid. In its regulations implementing the law, which were published April 11, the Department of Education would require every student applicant for financial aid — male or female, old or young — to state either that he or she is not required for some specified reason to be registered with Selective Service. The statement can be made at any time before the assistance period expires. At least for the next two academic years, the statements will be verified only by occasional, random spot-checks by agents of the federal Department of Education.

In a letter to all colleges and universities sent two weeks ago, however, the government has put implementation of this law on hold. The reason for this unusual action is that a federal judge in Minnesota, responding to a lawsuit filed on behalf of six anonymous students and the Ralph Nader-sponsored organization PIRG (Public Interest Research Group) and assisted by the ACLU, ruled last month that the Solomon Amendment is "probably" unconstitutional.

The judge said both that the law seems to violate the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination and that it was a Bill of Attainder — an illegal form of direct legislative punishment imposed without a trial. As a result, no statements of registration compliance are now being required from anyone, and a student's failure or refusal to fill out the statement should not disqualify that student from receiving aid.

Anyone, whether registered or not and indeed whether subject to draft registration or not, may have serious questions or concerns about this effort to use the student aid process to identify and punish the small number of conscientious nonregistrants who are not being intimidated by the government's clumsy and unsuccessful efforts at criminal prosecution. If so, people may wish to write their Congressional representatives and ask them to support Representative Bob Edgar's efforts to repeal the Solomon Amendment. Questions can be addressed to CCCO, 2208 South St., Philadelphia.

Criticism

To the Editor:

The recent Villanovan published a movie review that I cannot remain silent on. The review of "The Outsiders" was so poorly conceived and ineptly written that it would be a crime to let it pass without mention. Afterwards, it can subside undetectedly into the yellowing newsprint of history as folly.

On occasion, an author can make mistakes, but this one, Dean C. Balsamini has made a science of it. He has not missed a blunder. It seems the only thing he missed was the movie, or at least spent the first half of it searching the men's room floor for a ticket stub. Dean is more interested in exercising his rhetoric then (sic) reviewing a movie. For Dean, reviewing the theater seat cushions or the gum deposits beneath them was probable (sic) more important. His movie review concerns such things as popcorn cup geometries and bus vintages and the finacial (sic) status of the producing studio. I realize a story about kids growing up has so many complex factors, Dean, but what about the time honored standards like plot or character or even something so radical as theme? Now maybe popcorn cup geometries have importance, or maybe it is your major, but lets (sic) keep things in perspective. Your review of Cracker Jack may be unparalleled in prose, but a movie review is not the place to insert your personal interests.

I can imagine our author's review of an original sixteenth (sic) century production of Shakespeare. Imagine the faults he could find with the actors of these all male plays, "Juliet, thou are not even a proper woman," or "Forsooth and anon, Juliet's frock is but rags." Imagine what Dean could do with the fairies of "A Midsummer's Night Dream", or the ghost in "Hamlet". He would say they had "fake background and ridiculous situations". Shakespeare would not fare well at the point of Dean's pen.

He viewed "The Outsiders" with the same trite criticism and said it with authority - fools have such confidence in themselves. He even headed the review with a bold face (sic) attempt at intellecfualism, but he didn't fool us one bit by calling himself Dean. If your name were (sic) Cerebrum we still wouldn't think you were intelligent. You cannot judge a book by its author, and you cannot judge a movie by its popcorn cups and maybe we should not judge things at all, but you have and I have, and our criticisms are not very different - neither of us have criticized the movie.

Dean, this letter probably sounds as ludicrous to you as your review sounded to me. Perhaps you are literary (sic) and can read, but in your review you dispute the trivial while missing the obvious. With such trite criticism, you are checking grammar in Shakespeare or looking for spaghetti sauce on the chin of the Mona Lisa, but Juliet was a boy and the popcorn cups were round. If you crucify Coppola -- Shakespeare must be raised beside him.

Bruce Bradley

Editor's note: Dean Balsamini replies: "To elevate Coppola to the ranks of Shakespeare is absurd. There can be no comparison between 16th century theater and today's modern film technology. This modernism should have been reflected in choosing the props and scenery for "The Outsiders." It wasn't. Mr. Bradley, instead of checking Shakespeare's grammar, we reviewed your letter. We suggest you pay attention to your grammar.

Xenophobia

To the Editor:

I am a graduate student in the Computer Science department and a foreigner. I would like to give an account of the following incident that happened to me during the Graduate Social held on April 14 in the East Lounge, Dougherty Hall.

Well, I happened to attend the Graduate Social. I came in at about 9:30 p.m. and was waiting for a friend of mine to turn up. I was sitting at a table with some friends, a can of beer in my hand, and was kind of lost in my thoughts when I noticed a group of guys looking in my direction, making faces and yelling something. At first I didn't realize that their comments were directed at me, but soon I caught the words "Chinese! Chinese!" accompanied by more facial gestures, imitating slanting eyes, more pointing in my direction, and of course, big laughter. I honestly did not know how to react to this; I decided to ignore these graduate students. After a while, however, as the snickering continued, I must admit, I felt a rising anger and deep disgust. I know a lot of people would like to think of this as an indulgence, a kind of innocent fun, to be dismissed with a little frown and a shrug; after all, these guys were under the influence of alcohol.

I am certainly not generalizing anything. I am aware that this is an isolated incident.

Not A Fool

Since Residence Life is run by humans it naturally follows that they too make mistakes. Yet, they prefer to play the student for the fool and not admit to their inconsistencies and errors. Well, I for one will not be made a fool of and I refuse to be brushed aside or talked down to. I admit that we made a mistake in making frustrated remarks in front of the secretary. Both Bill and I went and apologized to her. But I also hold that the Office of Residence Life made some mistakes. They should not have taken the money out of our account without notifying me since I am "ultimately responsible." They should not have treated us as kids. Most importantly, they should have bent over backwards to help us get the money. We pay their salaries to insure that they will bend over backwards to help us.

I tried to do the best I could under the circumstances, I resent any implication that I am not doing my job and I strongly resent the way I have been treated. If the Office of Residence Life is to have any success next year dealing with a campus of mostly freshman and sophomore residents, they must first learn to trust the student with certain responsibilities, trust their house councils, and most of all, work with the residents on the same level. All I expected from Residence Life was a "fair shake." Instead, I wind up a victim of all the prejudices and misunderstandings that have always existed between students and the administration. A famous songwriter said it best: "It's a sad, sad situation, and it's getting more and more absurd."

Rally for Goode

By PAULA SOLLAMI

On April 14, a rally was held in front of the Connelly Center on behalf of W. Wilson Goode, Democratic opponent to Frank Rizzo in the primary race for mayor of the city of Philadelphia. The rally was pre-arranged by the Students For Goode Committee, a recently formed organization on Villanova's campus.

W. Wilson Goode himself was unable to attend the rally, but he sent Field Director Bill Miller, to speak for him. Miller discussed for about one half hour the importance of voting. He said, "If people do not vote, then there is no way his candidate (or any candidate) can win an election."

To the left of the podium, a table was set up where delegates from Philadelphia, Montgomery, and Delaware counties sat for the sole purpose of registering voters.

The Rev. John O'Rourke, O.S.A., of the communications department, also briefly discussed the responsibility of individuals to take part in the election process.

Approximately 100 students were on hand to take part in the event. Karen Storey, of the Students For Goode organization, stated, "I was disappointed the turnout wasn't larger." The members of the organization, sponsored by Pat Kobes, A.A.P. counsellor, and Dr. Teresa Nance of the communications department, all spent many hours preparing for the event.

One reason for the small turnout was the fact that student elections were held on the same day as the Goode rally. Through the day, there were activities in front of the Connelly Center as many candidates were engaging in last-minute campaigning. This caused many of Goode's supporters to be distracted. Interestingly, Miller seemed undisturbed by this chaos and, in fact, used it to his advantage. Miller said that voting in all elections, even student elections, is an obligation that all must meet. He even plugged a few Villanova candidates, by mentioning their names, upon request.

V.U. Commuters Answer Parking and Travel Survey

By DEBORAH SPINA

Students entering Villanova's campus on April 11 were asked to answer travel surveys designed to gather information "for planning purposes."

The University is currently planning two projects: building of new dormitories on the South campus, and building of a new athletic facility. The latter project has been delayed because the parking situation has not met with approval from Radnor Township officials.

In November, Villanova retained an outside company for consultation concerning their two projects. According to Rev. John McKenzie, O.S.A., director of planning, the University "needed outside expertise" which had standing according to Radnor officials. They hired the George Beetle Company, an engineering and consultant firm in the transportation business located in Philadelphia.

"The University is not a free agent," said Beetle. "They must go through a review and approval process." The Beetle Company observed the effects of traffic and campus parking and discovered heavy use on the parking facilities during the spring semester. They had insufficient data to know the reason for this and other circumstances involved. The survey was a result of their need for additional data.

The survey calculated: the number of cars in the lot each hour; what spaces were occupied and by whom; the turnover of cars from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m.; and the number of cars without valid permits.

Beetle remarked that the key problem is that the administration must "learn to better manage what space they have."

Radnor township officials have discussed the situation with the administration. Villanova must report to the township before the end of May. At that time they must meet present requirements, and show evidence for being able to sufficiently handle space in order for construction to begin on the new fieldhouse.

The Beetle Company was retained to confirm or deny the need for additional spaces. It is at present still calculating the surveys and studying the problem in order to give their report to the University by the end of May.

McKenzie commented, "Policy decisions will be made." Next year "a more stringent policy" will be advocated. There may be control dates to parking. Juniors and seniors may not be permitted to have cars. McKenzie is also almost certain the lot will be fenced. The results of the Beetle Company's report, along with the University's new policy decisions, may significantly change the parking situation.

Grant Funds Workshops

By TIM HANLON

Villanova has received a $40,000 grant from the state of Pennsylvania to teach elementary school teachers how to use computers in the classroom. Four Computer Literacy Workshops will be conducted where elementary teachers interested in learning more about computers can attend anyone of the two-day workshops and keep the computer to take back to their schools.

According to Dr. William Korba, Department of Education at Villanova, "Our focus in programming is important because some knowledge of computers is essential in today's world. A person is not literate at a computer until a person can use the computer as a tool, similar to the learning of a language.

An important issue that Korba reiterated is the question of who is in control; "Who's Programming Who?" Students learn little by only following the instructions the computer gives rather than actually programming the computer. "As a result of the workshop, teachers will be aware of the issues associated with computers in school and they will leave with some elementary programming skills in the BASIC language," according to Korba.

The computer that will be used is the Timex TS1000. By owning the computer, teachers should have enough skills to teach students, first hand, the BASIC language on their own. With computers like the Timex, there is a clear advantage because it is inexpensive and has instrumental advantages like a matte keyboard that enables students to learn and understand what they type into the computer.

Korba states that this program is also cost effective because out of the 80 teachers who learn programming, 2400 students will learn how to use the computer. That averages approximately $16.67 per child.

Korba sees two breakthroughs for the use of computers in schools. The first is the production of the Micro-Computer like the Altair. This brought the cost down considerably. The second happened last summer with the introduction of a "real" computer under $100. Korba feels that the second is a landmark that is greatly overlooked because now it is possible for everyone (who had the money) to purchase a computer, reap the benefits, and take advantage of its offerings.

The workshops are open to elementary teachers in the Philadelphia, Chester, Montgomery, and Bucks County areas who have no background in computers but wish to utilize their benefits.

Not Getting Older, But Better

By CAROLYN MILLER

"For age is opportunity no less than youth itself."

— Henry Wadsworth Longfellow

Not too long ago, an elderly, white-haired gentleman could be seen daily carrying a box of Dunkin' Donuts around campus, offering twisted crullers to lucky bystanders. His name is Joe Carroll. He can no longer offer doughnuts, since his doctor advised that he was getting "too fat." However, if fortunate enough to grace his presence, Carroll always brighten up a busy day.

Carroll is a familiar face on campus. As a senior citizen, he is part of a special group of University College students who bring variety, experience and wisdom to the Villanova community.

Villanova has a program which offers any person, age 65 years or older, a free education. These senior citizens, or "seniors," are registered as University College students and can choose any desired area of study.

According to University College secretary Barbara Dwyer, "There are approximately 60 'active' seniors enrolled here. We also have about 40 seniors termed as 'current,' meaning they do no attend class every semester but have been in a course within the past two years."

What makes senior citizens tick? Like every other student on campus, "seniors" bring to the University their own study interests, hobbies and diverse backgrounds. Carroll retired from SEPTA in 1975 after working there as a trolley conductor for 33 years. Upon attending Villanova, he felt the academic work was not too difficult. Mostly, he enjoyed his classmates' favorable reactions toward him. "They accepted me and I like that; they listened to my jokes," said Carroll.

This carefree 73-year-old has received his BA in communication arts and is now doing post-graduate work in history. Carroll plans to stay retired because he does not want "to put Walter Cronkite out of a job."

Anyone entering into the same course as Carroll has the opportunity of winning a bottle of champagne. At the beginning of each new semester, he puts all of the students' names into a hat and raffles off the "bubbly."

Howard Boyd

A "current senior" presently attending Immaculata College for music is Harriet McKee. She is a homemaker who decided to audit some courses once her family had been raised. Since the fall of 1978, McKee has been non-matriculating in theater at Villanova.

Since attending the University, she has had three children's plays copyrighted and two more are "in the works." The study required has not been difficult for her and her 4.0 grade point average proves this.

In her spare time, McKee teaches retarded children because, "I'm using what I've learned to enrich the lives of those children." A victim of lupus disease, her philosophy is "to help someone less fortunate than I."

Howard Boyd is a retired lieutenant colonel from the army who came to Villanova because it "gave me something to do." A senior liberal arts major, Boyd felt going back to college was terrifying. "I did not know what to expect, but it was gratifying once I discovered that I was treated like everyone else.

The Villanova community has become an important part of my life," says Boyd, who is president and founder of "Encore," the senior citizens group on campus.

Founded two years ago, "Encore" petitions all new "seniors" to join and invites guest speakers to their meetings to discuss current issues prevalent today. One thing Boyd stresses about "Encore" is that "it is not a restricted age group organization, anyone is welcome to join."

Lillian Bronstein is a former realtor who started at Villanova in the fall of 1981 because, "I've always wanted to go to college, and the benefit of a free education is great!" Working toward a degree in English, Bronstein felt very scared when she first started. Yet, she explains, "I have been received very warmly by both students and professors. It is a pleasure to attend this school." Upon obtaining her degree, Bronstein plans to go on to law school.

Perhaps it is best to end with Max Levins. His unique list of hobbies and interests separate him from other Villanova "seniors," but at the same time, his active life-style is representative of the "older" student.

Upon retiring from the lamp and shade business, Levins attended Villanova because "it is a good institute for higher learning." Last spring he receive a communication arts degree and is now in the graduate school for a masters in liberal studies. With a grade point average above 3.5, Levins will be the commencement speaker for the evening school on May 15.

Besides school work, his broad list of activities includes: playing tennis three times a week, broadcasting for the blind and enjoying a social life with his family.

The key which joins all "seniors" together is their attitude. Levins appropriately speaks for all of the "seniors" when he says, "I don't feel like a 'senior' citizen is supposed to feel. I do not fit into any stereotyped mold. I am an older person — yes, but I don't act like an old man."

The "seniors" of Villanova, with their vitality for life, are an inspiration to all Villanovans.

Benita Bedazzles Contest

By LARRY GOANOS

Likening herself to Kentucky Fried Chicken ("Because it's finger lickin' good"), sophomore Benita Wilson used a special recipe of vocal talent and provocative swimwear to earn the title of "Miss Villanova 1983" on Monday night.

A raucous crowd of 450 people filled the Connelly Center's Villanova Room with chants of "Benita! Benita!," while the Alumni Hall-sponsored entrant received the crown from her predecessor, Bernadette Mannix. It was a fitting finale for a wild evening of no-holds-barred competition.

Seven courageous females participated in the four-part competition before a vociferous crowd which would've booed the Pope if given the chance. After an initial question-and-answer period, the women took part in the evening gown, bathing suit and talent segments of the contest.

The event's master of ceremonies, Britt Gourley, fueled the unruly crowd right from the outset with innuendo-filled questions that elicited the desired racy responses.

He opened the competition by asking Delta Delta Delta's Ann Moody what her favorite sport was. "Skinny skating," was the revealing reply. "But," she added, "I get frostbite in some strange areas." The answers all went downhill from there.

When asked what type of man she most preferred, Sheehan's Marianne Dignan quickly retorted, "Any man that's got two legs and something in between." So much for discretion.

The next portion of the show, the evening gown competition, proved to be the tamest part of the night, even though the howling audience did its best to maintain the atmosphere of a pro wrestling match.

Entrant Annabel Annastacia made the strongest showing here with an elegant white gown, while Good Counsel's Jeaneen Knaughton foiled her chances for the crown by appearing in a Reynold's Wrap creation.

Following the evening gown competition was the eagerly-awaited bathing suit segment of the event. Although none of the participants satisfied the crowds' desire to see a bikini, most of the women wore fashionable one-piece suits. There were two exceptions. Wilson opted for a bath robe, declaring that, "If you want to see what's under here you'll have to arrange for a private audience." Knaughton decided to bag it, as she came forth in a smartly tailored plastic garbage can liner.

This year's Miss Villanova, Benita Wilson

The evening's final portion was the talent display, a segment of the show during which the audience offered up enough insults to supply Don Rickles for years to come.

The highlights included Wilson's a cappella singing, first runner-up Michele Hill's soliloquy from "The Glass Menagerie" and Annastacia's clarinet solo. Moody also did a fine job, singing "Second Hand Rose," while Andi Fanelli supplied a talent act staple, the old strip-tease routine. Dignan announced that she was going to cut a man's hair and it turned out she wasn't joshing.

The judges took a few minutes to tally up their scores and soon Gourley announced the decision to the delight of the charged-up crowd.

"I gave it all I got," said a happy Wilson after her triumph.

As for her newly acquired fame, Wilson feels it won't change her at all. "I'm going to do the same things I normally do — socialize big time. Now I can socialize with a title."

Colonel Sanders wouldn't have it any other way.

Is it really the third week in April? The snowstorm that began on Tuesday and continued through Wednesday had the University questioning the seasons.

Bio Majors Win

By CHARLENE PARDOE

Two weeks ago, two Villanova biology students captured second prize in a science research contest held at Thomas Jefferson University. David Chen and Dan O'Neill, both junior biology majors, entered the contest together. This event, which was sponsored by the Sigma Chi Fraternity, was open to encourage student research in any scientific area.

The decision to enter this contest, however, was not actually planned by these students in the beginning. In fact, the paper they entered began as a required research project for their Developmental Biology Course, back in the spring of 1982. After they began working on the paper, they became more and more interested in the topic, and worked on it over the summer.

Dr. Mary Desmond, of Villanova's biology department, who was their course instructor and advisor for the project, eventually encouraged them to enter. To start out, they had to submit a summary of their report which could be no longer than 250 words. Once this summary was approved, they were eligible to enter their project on a poster no larger than four-by-six feet. On April 6, after their poster was finally judged, they were evaluated by a panel of judges on questions related to their project.

Besides undergraduates, this contest also had two other openings, for both graduate and medical students. The papers were only judged in their specific categories, however. Chen and O'Neill's paper, entitled "The Inhibition of Wing Growth in Chick Embryos by Diazepam", dealt with the problems of diazepam, or valium, causes in young chick embryos. Valium, which was first introduced in the U.S. in 1963, became the most frequently prescribed drug in this country after nine years, with 50 million prescriptions being filled annually. They illustrated that valium can cause cleft palates, closure of the neural tube, and poor heart development in baby chicks. They also found that the embryos injected with valium showed comparably shorter wing lengths overall than those that were in the control groups.

Both Chen and O'Neill agreed that entering the contest was a "very good learning experience," which, through the long hours of time and effort they put into it, "helped in developing responsibility." O'Neill suggested, also, that "it is a good experience for someone going into science." Although this fair was only open to students, the two did receive a lot of extra help and support from Desmond.

The contest is held each year, and is open to undergraduate and graduate students in the tri-state area. This is not the first time that students from Villanova have won. Last year, Margot Schwag also received second place in the same category. Overall, six prizes are given out each year. Prizes are only awarded for first and second place in each of the three categories; and, for second place in each of the divisions, the recipients are awarded fifty dollars.

V.U. Volleyball Club Formed

By BOB HERMAN

Dig it, bump it, set it, spike it, block it!!! These are some of the commonly used terms each Saturday during the Villanova University Volleyball Club's practices in St. Mary's Gym.

The club was organized by senior co-captain Joe Silvestri in January. When asked why he initiated the team, Silvestri said, "Our goal in starting the team was to facilitate volleyball as a club sport at Villanova."

Silvestri has been aided in his efforts by the Director of Student Activities, Lucy Gorski, who has helped to set up a constitution for the club as well as to provide some funds and by Lou Ferry, Assistant Director of Intramural Athletics, who has helped reserve court times.

The team is presently comprised of 20 members and will be looking for new members in the fall. The club contains a men's tournament team and next season there are plans for a co-ed tournament team. This semester there are four females on the team. Two women from the Villanova varsity women's team have helped the club (Maura Kelly and Christine Gac) set up practice drills and the line-ups for the tournament team.

The team uses a six-two offense which means there are six hitters and two setters. Hitters are responsible for simply getting the ball back over the net while setters are responsible for setting up good shots for the hitters. The offense is centered around middle-hitters Silvestri and junior, Jim Hurley. The centerhitters are surrounded by strong-side hitter, Alec Reyer and weak-side hitter Jon Walheim. The two setters are sophomore Larry Staab and freshman Joe Minal.

Silvestri added that this is the first time that the organization can play volleyball seriously at Villanova under U.S.V.B.A. (United States Volleyball Association) rules.

The team will play in its own tournament Sunday with three other local colleges starting at 9:30 in the Butler Annex; the finals will be Sunday at 4 p.m.

By MARGIE KERNICKY

"The seed that falls on good ground will yield a fruitful harvest." We as handicapped Christians who are struggling on our journey to be with God for all eternity, must truly believe these words found in St. Luke's Gospel and in the song, Psalm 65.

During my life, I have gone through numerous developments in my self-awareness. I will share a few of them with you. Having been born with cerebral palsy, my world was very often made safe and secure. At that time, kids with disabilities did not have to go to school, and from where we lived there was no way that I could get into Philadelphia where there was a special school equipped to handle disabled children. I attended our parish parochial school. There were no ramps and there were very few physical adaptations made by the school itself. For example, the first few years, once I would be seated at my desk, I did not move, for the simple reason that I could not walk. The Sisters were good, to my understanding, but also patronizing at times. I did not know at that time such a word existed, nor did I know its meaning. Children are honest and say things the way they see them. Very often this honesty can hurt and unknowingly kids can be cruel. I remember coming home from school crying and telling my mom that some kid called me a cripple. I knew that I couldn't walk as well as the other kids, but this was the first time that I was labeled. The word cripple was taboo in our home. Now that I'm older, I find this very interesting. A simple descriptive word found throughout the New Testament, and yet some of us have problems referring to disabled persons in terms of a cripple.

I am physically disabled, due to a physical malady that occurred during birth known as cerebral palsy. Disability prevents us from accomplishing certain tasks because we lack coordination or mobility and physical dexterity. Handicaps, on the other hand are the excess baggage that we put on ourselves. We can get rid of our handicaps or we at least try to overcome them, but disability is something we must live with and reach out to others and accept our limitations. I have many handicaps such as my ability or inability to cope with people and certain situations that arise in daily life.

During my life I became aware of all of the injustices that the able-bodied majority were putting on the disabled person whom they felt were less than whole. I love my church and I'm thankful that I received a good education with a firm religious background. But, let's face a few facts — there are very few churches accessible to people in wheel chairs, on crutches or in braces. Not to mention the people suffering from crippling arthritis or persons with heart conditions. During such a traumatic time, I expected to find solace and an inner strength from my church. Instead, because of the insurmountable steps that had to be climbed, I was barred from entering the house of the Lord.

Sometimes society treats the disabled person as though he or she were a piece of fragile china, always afraid that they may shatter. For years I was told that I couldn't do many things; after awhile I began to retreat and I became passive, believing what I was hearing. A social worker and a number of people discouraged me from continuing my education after high school. The reason given, even if I earned a degree what would I do with it? The same was true in regard to finding employment. These are some of the handicaps we receive from our family and society in general. Believe me, some of these are damn difficult to handle, but handle and overcome we must.

The incredible handicaps that the paralyzed man had to go through so that he could get near Jesus to be healed, boggles my mind. Imagine the throngs of people around Jesus, blocking the doorway and the windows. Those who were carrying this crippled man, came up with an ingenious idea! Why not lower him from the roof? Picture this in your mind, people looking above seeing a portion of the roof being torn off to allow access to Jesus. This tops the phrase: "Guess who's coming to dinner!" There were architectural barriers even in Christ's time. When Jesus saw the tremendous faith of this man, he said to him, "Your sins are forgiven, my friend." The scribes and pharisees began to talk among themselves. No one can forgive sin; God alone can. "Is it easier to say, 'Your sins are forgiven, or to say, get up and walk?' " At once the man rose up, took up his mat and went home, praising God. The crowd cried out, "What marvelous things we have seen today." Luke, Chap. 5, Ver. 17.

Jesus who came into the world unblemished as a beautiful baby went to his grave broken, maimed and truly disabled. When he resurrected into heaven, his radiance was blinding and he was perfectly whole as he ascended into heaven. Yes, this is what has been promised to all of us, if we take up his cross and follow him.

This fall, I returned to the academic world at Villanova University. I took an evening course in English and this semester I'm taking English Literature and Composition. There are days when I'm ready to throw in the towel and chuck it all. The barriers and my own handicaps often get to me. The time factor is one of my biggest barrier and handicaps.

Circumstances and attitudes can and will change. It's up to each and every individual within his or her community to help implement changes for the disabled community that we're a part of and to make things easier for the ones to follow. Christ said, "Ask, and it shall be given to you; seek, and you shall find; knock and it shall be opened to you."

Special Kids Make Day Shine

By CATHY GROODY

"Mickey Mouse is looking for me," said little Marci Rosin, a nine-year-old girl from the Pathway School. "I know what he must be thinking. He's probably saying right now, 'where's my friend Marci, I have to find my friend Marci.' I know he's looking for me."

Maybe Mickey Mouse was too busy at the moment to find his new friend Marci, but he, along with the Smurf, Big Bird, Donald Duck and many other Villanova volunteers were not too busy on Saturday, April 16 to participate in Villanova's fifth annual Sunshine Day.

"Sunshine Day really did bring sunshine into the lives of many people despite the rainy and cloudy weather," said Sister Therese, service coordinator of the Social Action Committee. This year, 140 Villanova volunteers showed up at St. Mary's gym to greet the children.

"Villanova students really went out of their way by welcoming the children and by being patient and creative in finding ways to entertain our guests," said Sister Therese.

Volunteers entertained a child for the day or organized games such as basketball, bean bag toss or spin the wheel.

Whether the volunteers were assigned to recreation or one to one, SunshineDay became a day of instant friendships. One student actually spent the entire day holding up and walking one of the severely handicapped children. "This student volunteer actually walked the child around the gym all day long to make him feel accepted and more at home in the surroundings," said Sister Therese.

"This year, there were five institutions of emotionally and socially disturbed children who participated in Sunshine Day. They were The Pathway School, St. Mary's in Ambler, St. Joseph's House for Boys, St. Joseph's Hall for Girls and Southwest Community Center. Unexpectedly, the Woodhaven School also arrived that morning with an additional 25 children.

Pam Rogers was this year's Special Projects Coordinator for Sunshine Day. "Pam did an outstanding job," said Sister Therese, "along with Jim Condolff, the resident magician, and the APO brothers who were a lot of help that day."

Sunshine Day was a rewarding day filled with prizes, surprises, hugs and kisses, happy faces, painted faces and mostly a lot of love. It was a memorable event both for the volunteers and the children. So worthwhile that little Michael Tacalowski got so excited that he ran off the bus that morning and came running through the doors with his arms stretched and yelling, "Hi E.T., I didn't know you would be here!"

Team Tries to Sail Smooth HANOVER

By MARK FRANCES

The Villanova Sailing Team competed in the Mid-Atlantic Intercollegiate Sailing Association (MAISA) Area three and four eliminations at the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland on March 26 and 27. Team members Tim Robinson (captain), Yvette Doan (vice-president), Joe Croasedale (president) and Mary Frances Shubert raced for Villanova, placing fifth in the regatta. This qualified Villanova for the America's Trophy, the Mid-Atlantic Championship.

The America's Trophy regatta will be held at SUAY Maritime Academy on May 14 and 15 on Long Island Sound. This is a qualifying event for the North Atlantic Championships. On April 23, the sailing team will be racing on the Delaware River at Penn's Landing in the University of Pennsylvania Spring Minor. Penn's Landing is the sailing team's home waters, so both V.U. and U. of Penn are favored to win.

In addition to their spring season, the Villanova Sailing Team also has a more extensive season in the fall. This includes both small and big boat regattas at schools from Maryland to Connecticut. The sailing team is open to all students with previous competitive sailing experience. New members are always welcome.

University College

Villanova's University College will begin a paralegal education program this June, it has been announced by Dean Angelo Armenti, Jr.

Applications are now being accepted for admission. "Applicants must have a bachelor's degree and strong communication skills to be admitted," according to Dean Armenti. The program, offered through the continuing education division of Villanova's University College, will award continuing education units, not college credits.

University College officials are planning to implement a "high caliber" course of study that will have American Bar Association approval.

A Philosophy Professor Awarded ACLS Fellowship

By BARBARA SIMON

Dr John D. Caputo, professor of philosophy has won one of the prestigious awards from the American Council of Learned Societies. The Ford Foundation, Rockefeller Foundation and the National Endowment for Humanities are the other three nationally acclaimed foundations that award grants to the best scholars in the best colleges and universities in the U.S.A.

Caputo competed with 760 applicants and was one of the 65 winners of a fellowship from the ACLS, which was founded in 1919. This type of grant is a post-doctorate award given to support humanities or research projects with a predominantly humanistic emphasis on the social and natural sciences. The purpose of this fellowship is to provide opportunities for scholars to engage in humanistic research. This grant enables Caputo to spend next year (not teaching) writing a book, "Retrieval and Deconstruction: An Essay on the Recovery of Man," which will be his third book. Caputo's first two books have dealt with the affinity of the contemporary German philosopher with the great Western mystical and religious tradition. Caputo argued that "Despite their obvious differences, (anthropocentric) Heidegger shared with this (theocentric) tradition a profound sense of reverence towards all things." The new book will further develop and trace the resources of Heidegger's philosophy and his traditions in order to confront a current issue in the philosophy of interpretation.

Dr. John D. Caputo

Dr. Caputo acknowledges the support and encouragement of the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., and Dr. Bernard J. Downey, the dean of graduate school.

Caputo said, "In the past few years, Dr. Downey had been working hard for the faculty to apply for these types of fellowships. He has performed an important role in motivating Villanova's faculty to continue in academic research."

Summer grants are available to professors who are doing research on the condition that they apply for outside funding to continue the projects in the future.

Caputo's award is an inspiration and an example to humanity professors at Villanova. Future fellowships are attainable and Caputo is applauded in appreciation and recognition for winning such an honorable fellowship.

An Inside Look at News Reporting

By JOSEPH MARUSAK

At first glance, the careers of John Chancellor and Walter R. Mears may seem worlds apart. Chancellor, seen by millions, is a commentator for NBC's "Nightly News." Mears, read by millions, is vice-president and Washington bureau chief of the Associated Press.

Despite their different trades — television and newspapers have not exactly been the best of friends — Mears and Chancellor have at least one thing in common: both are veterans of news reporting.

John Chancellor

In The News Business, they combine their many years of White House press conference and national political convention experience to provide an enlightening look at their sometimes frustrating, most times rewarding, craft.

The book traces the development of the news story, from the writing of an effective lead — "the lead sets the theme and points the way" — to the delivery of copy by telephone or camera. As such, it is a fine work for students of journalism.

In fact, the book is geared toward such an audience. The final chapter explores the problem of getting started in the business, and the authors create no illusions. "The quandary is that you can't get a job in journalism unless you've got experience and you can't get experience unless you have a job."

"For me," says Mears, "the writing I'm still able to do is like recess. That's why I got into this line of work in the first place."

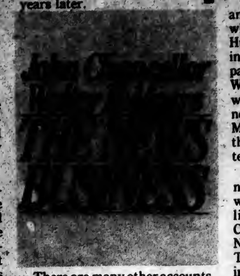
The book is full of assorted tips: "the goal is to make the copy sound conversational" and, "if you don't have a good story, all the color in the world won't dress it up."

But this work is much more than an instruction manual. For most, there is a certain mystery surrounding those White House conferences, those party conventions, those presidential jets. Here is a look from those who have been there day in and day out.

Some of the stories are indeed revealing. In 1965, the stock market plummeted and interest rates skyrocketed, all because President Lyndon Johnson tried to nail a reporter, Douglas Kiker. Johnson tried to embarrass him by leaking a story about visiting economic advisers to another reporter on Kiker's paper, the New York Herald Tribune.

But at the same time that the advisers were to appear, the consumer price index was reaching a record high. The advisers now looked like trouble.

Then the New York Times caught wind of it from Kiker's colleague. "The Times put it on the front page, coupled with the bad news about consumer prices. The story was played as though Johnson had panicked over the threat of inflation." Every story has its ironic twist: Kiker never found out about the whole episode until years later.



There are many other accounts. We are taken to Crete, where Mears almost comes to blows with an associate. We travel to Jordan where Chancellor meets King Hussein. Also, we find ourselves in Vietnam, where getting copy past the censors is a skill in itself. We meet, too, many of the writers who have shaped the news business. Murrow, Dimbleby, Will, McGrory, Reston, and, of course, the two great news analysts, Walter Lippmann and Arthur Krock.

We might also include the names Mears and Chancellor as well. Mears has written ten Publitzer Prize-winning stories; Chancellor has anchored "NBC Nightly News" from 1970-81. They are experts in the field, and in The News Business they pass on their knowledge in a fresh perspective.

A Pair of Thrilling Albums

By BOB HERMAN and MIKE MORAN

More than five months after the release of "Thriller" it is evident that Michael Jackson has broken the AOR (album-oriented-rock) color barrier which has existed for so many years. Jackson has done this while at the same time achieving critical acclaim and incredible success.

"Thriller" follows Jackson's last equally successful album "Off The Wall" by being his second consecutive release that has sold more than one million copies.

One reason for Jackson's recent acclaim is the tightness and maturity of his sound achieved by producer Quincy Jones, who also has received many awards for his work.

Jackson's latest album achieves the difficult action of breaking the color barrier of many classic (predominately white) AOR radio stations. The cut which accomplishes this is "Beat It." This track features dynamic rhythm work by a member of Toto and a blazing guitar lead by heavy-metal superstar, Eddie Van Halen. This opens up the possibility that not only will Jackson attempt other work targeted at this market, but that many other artists will follow his lead.

Jackson's recent successes have made him one of the hottest commodities in a long time. Presently he is pursuing many ventures — he is being sought after for movies and additional roles in working with children's-oriented material (he recently narrated E.T. Children's Storybook). Producer

Steven Spielberg indicated that Jackson was perfect for the role because he breaks down momentarily when E.T. dies; this is in a similar fashion to the way Jackson emotionally gives of himself in 'Off the Wall" in the song "She's Out of My Life."

Jackson's recent release has put him in great demand with other artists. His tightness with Paul McCartney in the song, "The Girl is Mine" lends credence to this. At age 24, Michael Jackson is sitting on top of the world.

Straight off the smashing success of their debut album, "Business As Usual," Men At Work are primed for more acclaim and popularity with their new LP, "Cargo." As if winning a Grammy for "Best New Artist," having "Business As Usual" quadruple platinum and winning three major NARM awards was not enough for the five man band from Australia, their latest single "Overkill" is currently racing up the charts. After three weeks, the song is at number fifteen and rising fast.

Without giving the public time to breathe, Men At Work follows up with much of the same type of material which launched "Business As Usual" onto the charts forty-three weeks ago.

"Cargo" can only help the commercial success of "Business As Usual." It is very possible that the group could have two albums in the top ten by next month, which is no easy feat.

It is evident that Men At Work, like many groups, had more than enough material for their first album. Most groups use their best cuts for their first release in order to establish an audience. Men At Work, however, seem to have saved their more substantial material for "Cargo." Already, six out of the 10 songs on the album are ringing through the radio airwaves, with lead singer Colin Hays's distinctive vocals leading the way.

Men At Work is significant because they are able to sell albums without taking a particularly commercial approach. Barring a breakup, artistic lapse or commercial sellout, this Australian phenomenon will be the best five man group to emerge since the Rolling Stones.

The Return of Neil Simon

By DILIP JAIN

"Max Dugan Returns" is another in the catalogue of enjoyable movies from Neil Simon. It is the story of a young woman, played by Marsha Mason, who is a small-town school teacher trying to support her 15-year-old son on a meager salary. Her life is a routine of going to school in her beat-up car, dropping her son (Matthew Broderick) off at his school and coming back, day in, day out. She takes life as it comes to her, whereas Matthew is more of a dreamer. Her car is stolen and she becomes involved with the detective (Donald Sutherland) sent to take the report on her car.

Her life changes suddenly when, after seven years of desertion, her father Max Dugan (Jason Robards) returns, with a bag of dollars, a heart bent on showering riches upon his daughter and grandson and a penchant for the high life. He had disappeared some out of business in Las Vegas and is now sought by both gangs and police.

The story proceeds with Max Dugan changing his family's life each day by treating them to numerous gifts such as a car, redecorations for their home and an array of gadgets. He also spoils them with personal gifts such as a diamond necklace for his daughter.

The movie ends with Mason's detective friend getting suspicious of her sudden riches and Dugan fleeing after spending two of the most wonderful weeks of his life with people he loves.

This movie has elements which everyone can identify with. Everybody, no matter how rich or poor, has a fantasy in which they obtain things they always desired but could not get on their own. Therefore, they dream up a fairy or someone who can fulfill this desire.

Donald Sutherland gives his usual fine performance as the detective, but at times looks disinterested. Jason Robards gives a touching performance as Max Dugan. He is quite lovable and is everyone's grandfather. Whenever he is on the screen, he exudes nothing but charm.

Mason with Simon.

Overall, director Herbert Ross has made this movie a vehicle for Jason Robards to shine. Marsha Mason and Donald Sutherland's dependable acting help make for an entertaining film. Chalk up another one for Neil Simon.

Townshend Tapes A Who's Who Collection

By BILL SANTOS

Pete Townshend has compiled a group of recordings from his archives of personal tapes. Entitled "Scoop," the double album contains various Townshend songs performed by and for himself. Some of the songs have a bootleg quality due to their age, whereas others are studio recordings that never found their way onto an album.

Songs recorded by The Who are performed here by Townshend on primitive equipment such as Vortexion monotape machines and Tannoy monitors. The Who songs are more acoustic than the studio renditions. One interesting note, a song called "Popular" appears on side two and as this song progresses, one notices what this song really is. It's the opening strains of the Who song "It's Hard."

Other songs or song fragments are intriguing. "Unused Piano" from the film "Quadrophenia," "Barr," an instrumental tune that never found words, "Dirty Water," a song designated as too simple for a Who album (Townshend sang this song while lying on his back), and songs later performed by the Who and sung by Roger Daltrey — "Squeezebox," "Bargain," "Behind Blue Eyes," "The Magic Bus," "Cache, Cache" and "Love Reign O'er Me." The Who songs take on a slower tempo than the studio versions.

The twenty-five songs on the two albums provide a cross section of Townshend throughout his career with the Who, songs range from 1964 to the present. Most of the reproductions are of quality sound but some have a muffled tone as if recorded on old, non-stereo recorders. Songs such as "Circles" and "Things Have Changed" take on an early Kinks quality in content, as well as that familiar mono-sound.

Townshend states in the LP why he has put together such an album. "In the past, people have stolen, copied and bootlegged a few of the tapes I have made at home. Those enthusiasts of Who music and the part I played in it will probably welcome this record to add to their stockpile of obsessive memorabilia. The best thing about this collection to me, is that, compiled as it is, for someone who is in no way a Who fanatic, it emerges as being a fine example of how home recordings produce moods and music, innocence and naivete that could not be arrived at in any other way."

Pete Townshend's "Scoop" is just what it says — it's a scoop and "isn't meant to be a definitive collection." Do not let that deter one from venturing into the past and finding out why The Who has been so successful throughout the years. Townshend is the foundation that has supported the group and contributed to the band's popularity. "Scoop" is just a segment of the vast array of tapes that Townshend has in his possession. It is clear by listening to these recordings that Townshend is a master in his own right and knowing that this is only a miniscule portion of his many recordings, one can only hope for more of a scoop in the future.

'Renaissance' Rejuvenation

By MICHAEL MORAN and PAUL DAINORA

Renaissance: Time-Line

The phrase "You've come a long way, baby," was perhaps never more appropriate than it is when referring to Renaissance and their latest album release "Time-Line." The change the group has undergone is, at first, very surprising.

From their auspicious beginning as a "spin-off" of the Yardbirds in the early '70s, through a temporary break-up in 1979 and the present, Renaissance retains a musical ability second to none. Guitarist/songwriter Michael Dunford, premier vocalist Annie Halsam, and possibly the best bassist in the world, Jon Camp, have survived various personnel changes and image changes over the past ten years.

When Renaissance emerged with "Camera Camera" in 1981, many fans were dismayed by the absence of keyboardist John Tout and drummer Terence Sullivan. But if they were upset at that, they were probably shocked at the music on the album. The tunes bore very little resemblance to the semi-classical epics which appeared on "Prologue" and "Turn of the Card" and the British pop sounds on "A Song For All Seasons." Actually, the songs on "Camera, Camera" and now on "Time-Line" could be classified as "new progressive" music.

As on virtually all Renaissance albums, there is one cut which is exceptionally pop sounding, designed to be the single. In this case, it is a catchy tune called "Richard IX."

The major change in the group's sound came with Camp's evolution as the primary songwriter. With Dunford's extensive, baroque songs taking a backseat to Camp's equally complex, but more uptempo, neo-new wave tunes, Renaissance has plunged into the 1980s with a look of rejuvenation.

Martin Briley: One Night With A Stranger

Due to the close-minded programming on commercial radio, you probably won't hear too much, if any, of Martin Briley's new album "One Night With A Stranger" over the airwaves. It's not that Briley is inaccessible, it's just that he has yet to develop a name for himself.

The most unique aspect of the album is Briley's voice, which, at times, sounds like Peter Gabriel when he was with Genesis.

Unfortunately, a few songs get cliched, but if you want an album where the content and musicianship is superior to much of what is found on commercial radio, Martin Briley could have the album for you.

ZZ Top Hits Rock Bottom

By MIKE NOONE

Among the many new album releases this spring, is a new album from "that little ol' band from Texas," ZZ Top, and four-song Ep from a relatively unknown Australian named Ignatius Jones.

ZZ Top has been together as a group for over thirteen years, pleasing audiences with their electrifying blues-rock style. Their latest album, "Eliminator," is the eighth in a strong collection. "Eliminator," is a disappointment for the album does not contain the unique sound of ZZ Top's earlier work. Their style is a straight forward, "kick ass" rock and roll, which any number of bands could produce.

However, what made much of their earlier music enjoyable was the unique bite and rawness of the guitar work of Billy Gibbons and the vocals of both he and bassist Dusty Hill. Although "Eliminator" closely resembles the sound of "Tres Hombres," somewhere in the mixing of the album, the "bite" was lost.

No one can question the musical expertise of this trio, after the display of talent on "Eliminator" and previous albums. The beat is hard driving, complimenting the unique bass and lead riffs. The final sound is where the flaw lies. The distinctiveness of the solos are lost in a mush of fuzzy, overdriven instruments. Certainly there are highlights to this album, including, "I Need You Tonight" but, the vocals are no longer special. They could have been sung by the Eagles or Kansas with no effect on the final sound. What keeps the album from becoming a flop, is the excellent guitar work of Billy Gibbons, making it a must for guitar fans.

In striking contrast to ZZ Top, is the electronic pop of Ignatius Jones. Jones is yet another in a long line of Australians out to prove that they can perform as well as the American or English bands. AC/DC challenged heavy metal fans, Men at Work recently hit the Top ten, and now Ignatius Jones is challenging the electro-pop movement with his Ep, "Like a Ghost." Jones relies entirely on synthezisers and percussion to create the music. But he offers nothing that has not been previously done by such bands as Depeche Mode and Fad Gadget. His lyrics are neither striking or insightful.

The single contains two different mixes of the title track "Like a Ghost," which are both quite similar. The other two songs "Seductive Ways," and "Its No Reason," are also both similar. Eventually, this four song Ep becomes tiring, which must explain the reason for not releasing an entire album.

Rusty Scupper Offers Mouthwatering Food

By JOHN F. LYNCH

The Rusty Scupper is a fine restaurant which offers a varied selection of seafoods along with an adequate amount to choose from in terms of meat and poultry.

one's lips water when glancing at the fresh seafood bar. The shrimp and clams are prepared here, and one cannot help but be impressed by the elegant preparation of the seafood appetizers.

If clam chowder is your passion, then you can't pass up the Scupper's version of this New England tradition. The clams are in abundance and the broth is both creamy and delicious.

As for the entrees, the Rusty Scupper's specialties include baked stuffed shrimp and seafood casserole. The bread crumbs in the shrimp are lightly seasoned and add to the scrumptious flavor of the dish. The seafood casserole is filled with a wide range of delicacies such as lobster.

From the beef category, one can select entrees ranging from prime rib to chopped sirloin. The prime rib is a fairly large portion which will be sure to satisfy the largest of appetites.

On the second floor of the Rusty Scupper is a spaciously decorated bar/lounge which is both impressive and relaxing.

The Rusty Scupper is located in Wayne on Sugartown Road. They are open Mon.-Thurs. 11:30-2:30 for lunch and open again from 5:30-11 p.m. for dinner. Lunch is not served on Saturdays and dinner lasts from 3-9 p.m. on Sundays.

Dear Rotors, Klemberg, Joycee, Nergs, Gleese, Guido, and Margie, Since none of you can find jobs, you might want to look into these alternate career fields. Rotors — town drunk (obviously), Klemberg — tour guide at the Washington Monument, Joycee — Den Mother for Jerry's kids (you've had practical experience with the Rainbow crowd), Nergs — Sex H.O.T. Line Operator (can I help you?), Gleese — Film Critic (any man who likes "Eraserhead" and "Eating Raoul" is born to it — right?), Guido — professional gigolo (it's that vulnerability), and Margie — Cigar Store Indian.

Good Luck, Carlos

Study Programs in France and Spain

SUMMER SCHOOL IN MADRID

ESPAÑOL EN ESPAÑA—SUMMER IN MADRID is a four-week program offered by Villanova University in Madrid during the month of August. This program is designed to help students of the Spanish language broaden their knowledge of all aspects of Spanish culture, language and literature.

ELIGIBILITY

This program is open to all college students and high school seniors who have completed the equivalent of one year of college Spanish.

COURSES OFFERED AND CREDITS

Span. 1121-1122: Intermediate Spanish (6 credits)
Span. 1127: Conversation and Composition (3 credits)
Span. 2130: Hispanic Civilization (3 credits)
Span. 3256: La Españia de Cervantes (3 credits)
Span. 3282: La Novela Madrileña del Siglo XIX (3 credits)

CULTURAL ACTIVITIES

As part of the program, the students will visit Toledo, Segovia and La Granja, Escorial and Valley of the Fallen. These towns are of great significance in Spain's history and have high architectural values; each of these towns constitutes in itself a lesson on art and a pleasant experience. In addition, visits to Prado Museum, Royal Palace and the Archeological Museum will be organized.

RESIDENCE

Students will live at the university residence Colegio Mayor Marqués de la Ensenada. All classes will be held at the Colegio Mayor. Sport facilities on the premises of the residence include swimming pool, tennis and a basketball courts, and a soccer field.

COST

$1,500.00. This price includes: Transportation from J.F.K. Airport to Madrid and return, room and board, fee for the courses, three one-day excursions and medical insurance.

FALL/SPRING SEMESTERS IN BARCELONA

ESPAÑOL EN ESPAÑA FALL/SPRING SEMESTERS IN BARCELONA is a program of studies offered by Villanova University in cooperation with Colegio Santa Clara, an international private school in Barcelona. Modern classrooms and staff offices are located in Colegio Santa Clara. Classes will be made up of American and Spanish students so that American students can form their own personal ties with Spanish students. The program begins on September 12 (Fall semester) and January 9 (Spring semester) and it lasts 13 weeks each semester.

ELIGIBILITY

This program is open to college students who have completed at least two semesters of Spanish at the intermediate level and have an adequate conversational ability in Spanish.

COURSES OFFERED AND CREDITS

Span. 1128: Conversation and Composition (3 credits)
Span. 2134: Survey of Peninsular Literature (3 credits)
Span. 3212: History of Ideas in Spanish Literature (3 credits)
Span. 3230: Masterpieces of Medieval Literature (3 credits)
Span. 3261: Prose of the Renaissance (3 credits)
Span. 3283: Generation of '98 (3 credits)
Span. 3286: Twentieth-Century Drama (3 credits)
A.A.H. 1101: Art History: Beginnings to Renaissance (3 credits)
A.H.A. 1102: Art History: Renaissance to Contemporary World (3 credits)

Both semesters begin with an intensive three-week review course. This course concentrates on developing oral and written language skills.

Grades, based on class performance and examinations, will be granted by Villanova University. Successful participants will receive up to 15 credits per semester.

CULTURAL ACTIVITIES

Excursions and cultural activities will be organized to introduce the students to the cultural resources of Barcelona and nearby cities. It will include three one-day trips to Gerona, Tarragona and Montserrat, visits to museums and points of interest, attendance to plays and movies, etc.

COST

$3,500.00 per semester. Included in this fee: round-trip air fare New York—Madrid and train or bus ticket Madrid—Barcelona. Tuition for the courses. Three one-day excursions. Room and board in Barcelona at a college residence or in private house. Lodging during the three-day visit to Madrid. The open-ended return air ticket will permit one to stay in Spain longer if he/she wishes to do so.

SUMMER SCHOOL IN PARIS

LE FRANCAIS EN FRANCE-SUMMER is a three-week program offered by Villanova University in Massy, a suburb of Paris, during the month of August. This program is designed to help students of the French language broaden their knowledge of all aspects of French culture and language.

Tracksters Dominate Hoya Meet

Bradley Takes Two Firsts for Women

By BEVERLY REILLY

Battling the strong, gusty winds last Saturday, the Wildcats whipped up some fine performances at the First Annual Hoya Invitational.

Seemingly unaffected by the conditions, junior Patty Bradley led the team in individual honors. Bradley ran 2:08.4 in the 800-meter run to capture first place, while teammate Joanne Kehs followed in a close second with 2:11.1. In the 400-meter hurdles, Bradley broke the tape in 1:00.8 to grasp the gold.

In the distance events, road runner Jan Yerkes won top honors in the 5000-meter run. Lashing into the wind, Yerkes easily won the event with her time of 17:34.5. Janice Rau also ran a strong race to place second in 18.18.0.

In the field, senior captain Peggy Stewart gained individual honors by clearing 5'8¼" in the high jump. In other field event action, sophomore Sue Cronin made a successful debut. Throwing for the first time this year, Cronin captured second place in the javelin. With her throw of 115'10½", Cronin set a new school record.

Back on the track, sophomore Mary Ellen McGowan also broke the school record in the 3000-meter run. Placing third, McGowan ran a 9:50.0 to shatter her own prevjous record.

Other fine performances took place on the track. Freshman Vickie Brown captured second in the 1500-meter run with her time of 4:38.0. In the 400-meter run, sophomore Veronica McIntosh took second in 58.3 as teammates Sharon Margaretha and Tracey Carter followed in third (59.0) and fourth (59.9) places, respectively. Combining their talents in the 4x100 relay, Margaretha, McIntosh, Carter and Judy Palmer captured second in 49.2. In the 4x400 relay, the team of Margaretha, Kehs, Beth Lyons and Bradley placed second in 3:56.4.

Coach Bob Shoudt remarked about the meet, "Considering the windy conditions, I was pleased with most of the performances. Bradley did an outstanding job with her performances in both the 400-meter hurdles and the 800-meter run."

Editor's Note: The author of this article, Beverly Reilly, is herself a member of the women's track team. This past weekend she finished second in the Penn Relays marathon with an impressive 2.57:51 clocking. "I'm very pleased with her performance and feel she has a chance at the Olympic Trials in the marathon," commented head coach Bob Shoudt. And who knows, if the senior from Bricktown, N.J., isn't there to compete in the games, maybe she'll be covering them.

Men Capture Four Events

By PAUL MACCHIA

Last Saturday afternoon the Villanova men's track team competed in the First Annual Hoya Invitational at Georgetown University. The weather conditions were sunny, about 45 degrees and windy, which affected the times of performances.

Villanova performed spectacularly in both hurdle events. Senior Rodney Wilson easily won the 110-meter high-hurdles in a time of 13.6 seconds. Martin Booker finished a strong second in 13.8. Booker later went on to compete in the 400-meter hurdles, which he won by a landslide in 51.9. Junior Craig Morris brought the one-two punch to the Wildcats as he finished next to Booker in 54.2.

Freshman John Keyworth continued to shine on. After demolishing his personal best last week by close to five seconds (a 4:01.92 mile which was decided in a photo finish), Keyworth won the 1500-meter run in 3:49.7. Teammate Brian O'Keeffe placed fourth, running a 3:56.1.

In the longer distances, sophomore Anthony O'Reilly won his first track race at Villanova, covering the 5000 in 14:39.2, six seconds over the nearest competitor, Tom Hughes of St. Joseph's.

Freshman Chip Jenkins tied for fourth place in the 400-meter run with a time of 49.3. The finish was a close one as the first five competitors crossed the line within a half second of each other.

In the 800-meter run, junior Ken Lucks finished in sixth place at 1:53.6. Lucks is on the comeback trail after having surgery on his right achilles tendon sheath, which forced him to miss the indoor season.

Seniors Russel Palmer and Art Azzari competed in the hammer throw and discus, respectively. Palmer heaved the hammer 168'4½" to finish second behind Iona's Jeff Napolitano. Azzari finished seventh behind Steve Nolin, also of Iona.

Several Wildcats were unable to perform at the meet due to various injuries and ailments. John Borgese (800), Mike England (800), John Marshall (800), Marcus O'Sullivan (mile) and Carlton Young (400) should be returning to action at the Rutgers Relays this afternoon at New Brunswick, NJ. One week from today, the Wildcats will be competing in the Penn Relays, where they will seek to regain the distance medley and defend last year's titles in the sprint medley, 3200- and 6000-meter relays.

Meets of interest include the Big East championships (May 7-8), IC4A (May 21-22) and the Jumbo Elliot Invitational (June 11). These three meets will be held at home.

Carlton Young

Carlton Young, Villanova's senior track standout, is the 1983 Budweiser Men's Athlete of the Year. The five-foot-eleven-inch biology major culminated a brilliant four years for the Wildcats with an NCAA crown in March at the Pontiac Silverdome. Young turned in a blazing 47.17 clocking in the 440 yard event to defeat the top competition in the nation and assure himself a place among the greats of Villanova track.

"It (the championship) was the highlight of my career here," said Young.

The Central High of Philadelphia product paved the road to Pontiac with a series of outstanding finishes during the indoor season. He took first place honors at the Lehigh Developmental Meet, the Joe Hilton Meet (University of North Carolina), the Big East Championships and the IC4A Championships.

Aside from his individual accomplishments, Young also ran the anchor leg of the relay team which won the mile event at the Wanamaker Games and the 1600 meter relay title at the Big East Championships.

"I'm extremely indebted to this school for giving me the opportunity to study as well as run here," said Young.

Also nominated by Athletic Director Ted Aceto was senior John Pinone.

Kathie Beisel

Kathie Beisel, a four time All-Big Five selection in basketball, is the 1982-83 women's Budweiser Athlete of the Year.

A five-foot-nine-inch guard, Beisel is Villanova's all-time leader in assists (season, career), minutes played and steals (per game, season and career). She is currently the school's third all-time scorer and rebounder.

During her career, the ats went 86-30. They won three Big Five titles and participated in three AIAW post-season tournaments. Two seasons ago, Beisel, along with last year's Bud Athlete of the Year Lisa Ortlip, carried Villanova to the AIAW Final Four.

Beisel, who averaged 12.7 ppg. and 5.4 rebounds during her four years, was recently named the area's Outstanding Women's Basketball Player by Philadelphia sportswriters.

Basketball is not her only sport; she is also an outfielder on the women's softball team.

Also nominated by Women's Athletic Coordinator Mary Anne Steenrod, was track star Peggy Stewart.

Softball Team Drops Two in Penn Tourney

By BOB HELLER

The Villanova University softball team participated in the University of Pennsylvania Tournament this past weekend. All Nova games on Saturday were postponed until Sunday due to bad field conditions and weather.

The Wildcats opened the tournament at Villanova, taking on Eastern College. Nova scored once in the first on a single by Kathy Ford, and a run scoring sacrifice fly by Kathie Beisel. In their half of the second, Eastern scored five times off Nova pitcher Andrea Lair to take a 5-1 lead. The Cats scored again in the second on singles by Kathy Byrnes and Ford to make the score 5-2. Nova second baseman Alix Zuckowsky opened the third by getting on base on an Eastern error. A sacrifice by Beisel and an RBI single by Byrnes made the score 5-3. Eastern scored three more times to complete an 8-3 route of the Wildcats.

The Cats then traveled to the University of Pennsylvania to play the University of Scranton for their second game. Nova opened the scoring immediately in the first inning.

The Scranton pitcher walked Ford, the lead off batter. She was subsequently thrown out at second on an extremely close call by the umpire. A single by Byrnes and a Scranton error, putting Denise Reid on base, loaded the bases. A single by Zuckowsky drove in the first Wildcat run. An error by the Scranton right fielder brought another two runs in. A sacrifice by Dona Hurley brought in the final Wildcat run of the inning.

The Cats scored again in the second when Linda Goss walked and was sacrificed to second by Ford. Byrnes then tripled to make the score 5-0 Villanova. Scranton scored their lone run in the third to make the score 5-1. The Cats added one run in the fourth on a single by Ford and sacrifice hits by Hannigan and Byrnes, and three more in the fifth and singles by Zuckowsky and Ford, sacrifices by Beisel and Goss and consecutive doubles by Lori Bukaty and Hurley to make the final score 9-1 Villanova. Nova pitcher Bonnie Bell had an excellent game, giving up just one run and three hits while striking out two.

Villanova took to the road again, this time traveling up to Max Myer Field in North Philadelphia to play Kutztown State for their third game of the day. Again, the Wildcats struck first.

The Kutztown pitcher walked Ford. Ann Hannigan sacrificed her to second and she scored on an RBI single by Byrnes. A single by Reid moved Byrnes over to third. Coach Debbie McKee then signaled for a double steal. It worked as Byrnes stole home and Reid stole second. A double by Zuckowsky drove in Reid to make the score 3-0. A Kutztown error produced the fourth Nova run.

Kutztown got one run back in the bottom of the first to make the score 4-1. The score remained at 4-1 until the sixth inning when Kutztown scored three times off Nova pitcher Shaula DeMarco to even the score at 4-4. Relief pitcher Bell held Kutztown scoreless until the bottom of the tenth inning when Kutztown scored as Nova's defense had a mental lapse.

The tournament games brought the Cats record to 3-6. The Wildcats will play an away game today against St. Joseph's and a home doubleheader on Saturday against the University of Delaware.

Tennis Serves Up Two Wins

By TOM KOLON

The Villanova men's tennis team was finally able to overcome adverse weather conditions and cancellations in their up-and-down season and play four out of five scheduled matches. With only seven matches left, the team's record now stands at 5-8.

Last Wednesday, the team traveled to Drexel and returned home victorious. Although the final tally was 9-0, Coach Langran emphasized that it "was really a tougher match than the score indicated. The fourth, fifth, and sixth singles all won in three sets,"

Thursday, Villanova was able to replay a previously scheduled match with Upsala, but lost 3-6 in front of a home crowd. Number one singles Larry Gallen and sixth man Pete Russell both won their contests while Gallen and John Lee picked up a victory in first doubles.

The next day, the Cats traveled to Montclair State and were able to outlast their opponents 5-4. Once again, Gallen, Lee and Russell left with singles victories, while in doubles, Gallen and Lee won first, followed by Scott Miller and Russell in third doubles.

On Saturday, the slated match with Fairfield was rained out, so the team took to the courts again on Sunday at C.W. Post. In stride with their roller coaster season, the Cats dropped a 3-6 decision. As might have been expected, though, Gallen and Lee won their singles matches and also came out ahead in doubles play.

Coach Langran commented that it has been tough to match last year's 19-5 season with so much inexperience on the team. "Due to injuries, we've had to move all of our younger players up in the singles and doubles. Since we lost our top two singles and first doubles, our current third, fourth, fifth and sixth singles are all playing their first year of collegiate action. Even with this lack of experience, Gallen and Lee have filled the gaps admirably. They've really helped pull us through."

Gallen is currently 11-1 in singles competition and is expected to finish around 16-1. He is seeded number-one in the Rider Invitational Tournament. Coupled with Lee in doubles, he is 5-1

Sidelined captain Paul Fitzsimmons felt that "Larry (Gallen) might possibly be the best tennis player Villanova has had. He has a fantastic serve and is really a tough competitor."

The team is still looking to the future and hopes to finish around 11-9. Its main objective is to repeat as champion of the Rider Tournament.

Baseball Captains Provide Leadership

By KEVIN McKENNA

There was not really any reason for alarm when the Villanova baseball team dropped its first three games of the season. The Wildcats were just getting out of the gates slow. It was a young team and eventually the players would come around.

Although Villanova had just been crushed 16-8 by perennial Eastern power Temple, the Wildcats rebounded four days later with a 6-5 win over Philadelphia Textile. Finally, there was genuine optimism in the Villanova camp. The Cats were on the right track. Or were they?

Two days after its lone victory, Villanova was pasted by LaSalle 15-6. It was the beginning of ten consecutive losses. Seemingly the Wildcats had forgotten how to win. And when they finally began to remember, they invited new ways to lose.

"It's frustrating," explained junior co-captain John Corbin. "There's really nothing you can do but accept it and try to go out and play harder every day."

For anyone who has ever been in a similar situation, that is not the easiest thing to do. In fact, many would take an opposite approach to Corbin's. When all else fails you can always blame someone else or simply quit. However, those two thoughts have not even entered Corbin's mind, and for good reason. The kid is a winner.

A native of Atlanta, Ga., Corbin walked away with four varsity letters, each in baseball and soccer. An all-city player in both sports, Corbin capped a brilliant scholastic career by being named the Atlanta Braves' "Player of the Year".

While at Villanova Corbin has played in 47 of 61 games, finishing the 1982 season with a .338 batting average. By the way, the slick fielding center fielder has not committed an error since his freshman year.

"Sometimes you feel helpless," Corbin stated. "We want to win but for some reason we got into a habit of losing. It's an added burden especially since I'm a captain but I think we'll pull through."

The losing streak has not been especially kind to fellow co-captain Don Casey either. Last week it appeared the Wildcats would finally pull one out. Brought in to relief pitch, Casey held Princeton scoreless in the sixth, seventh and eighth innings, as Villanova clung to a 3-1 lead. In the ninth, Casey promptly retired the first two Tiger batters. Now, the Wildcats were just one out away from winning.

However, Casey walked the next two batters. A base hit and a throwing error followed and a 3-1 victory quickly turned into a disheartening 5-3 loss.

"The Princeton game is typical of how things have been going," Casey said. "It's one thing if we were playing poorly," Casey continued. "however we have been playing well and are better than many of the teams we have lost to."

'It's frustrating. There's really nothing you can do but accept it and try to go out and play harder everyday.'
— John Corbin

STICKIN' IT OUT: Captains Don Casey (left) and John Corbin have persevered through a difficult baseball season.

Casey should know. As a freshman and sophomore, Casey was a member of a Villanova team that made consecutive appearances in the E.C.A.C. Tournament. During those two seasons Casey saw action in 58 of 60 games at second base, while batting .264. Last year, he joined the Wildcat pitching staff as a relief pitcher and batted .300.

"It's pretty tough losing after winning like we did," the senior accounting major said. "Everybody says that we're a young team and we'll be all right the next couple of years. However," Casey continued, "first baseman Michael Craig and I are seniors and for us, the future is now. And if we can't turn things around this season then at least we know we gave it our best shot and hopefully the underclassmen will benefit."

So, does the story have a happy ending? Well, that depends. On the one hand, the Wildcats are not going to do to the College World Series what North Carolina State did to the N.C.A.A. Basketball Tournament.

On the other hand, there was this past Monday's game against Widener with the score tied 4-4 in the bottom of the tenth sophomore Jim White opened the inning with a single. This brought Casey to bat. Two passed balls followed allowing White to advance to third.

Casey worked the count to 3 and 1 before delivering the game winning single. For his efforts, he was promptly mobbed by his teammates.

The streak was over! And if it was not as dramatic as Lorenzo Charles' rebound dunk against Houston, it meant just as much. Maybe even more.

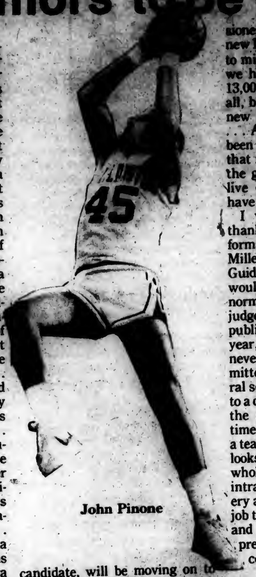
Graduation Takes Its Toll on V.U. Teams

Nova Seniors to Be Missed

By LARRY GOANOS

Another year has passed at Villanova and with it will go a senior class of athletes who number among the finest ever at this MainLine campus . . . The most notable losses will befall the men's basketball team due to the departure of John Pinone, Stewart Granger, Mike Mulquin, Marty Lutschaunig and Kevin McKenna . . . Seeing a senior class of that caliber graduate has to bring tears to your eyes if you're a Wildcat fan . . . Pinone, the man to whom Coach Massimino gives much of the credit for bringing the Cat program to where it is today, won a plethora of awards this year while being named to Third Team All-America status by both wire services . . . Granger, the catalyst of the Wildcat squad for the past three seasons, is undoubtedly one of the nation's finest guards . . . Both Villanova graduates should be using the knowledge they learned from Massimino and his staff in the NBA next year . . . Mulquin may hook up with a European team next season or else he'll choose from among a number of job opportunities in the business world . . . Lutschaunig has accepted a position with a Philadelphia accounting firm . . . McKenna will find himself in a different kind of court as he has been accepted at the Villanova School of Law.



John Pinone

The women's basketball team is losing one of its best players ever, Kathie Beisel, who has her name on virtually every list in the Villanova record books . . . But don't cry for the women, they've signed three Parade High School All-Americans for next season . . . Leading the way is Shelly Pennefather, a six-foot forward from Notre Dame High School in Utica, N.Y. . . . Pennefather went 96-0 in her four years of high school ball, one of only three players ever to go undefeated in high school . . . One of the others was Kareem Abdul-Jabbar.

The track teams, both men's and women's, will be sorely missing their seniors next season . . . Carlton Young, a Rhodes Scholar candidate, will be moving on to Johns Hopkins Medical School, generally acknowledged as one of the nation's finest . . . Rodney Wilson and Mike England will also leave many accomplishments behind when they accept their degrees in May . . . The women are losing Peggy Stewart, a cornerstone of this year's team and close second in the Bud Athlete of the Year Award. . .

There is a slew of other seniors whose absence will surely be felt by their coaches, but unfortunately space prohibits me from naming them all. I'm sure the fans of each respective sport know who they are.

Turning our attention elsewhere . . . Villanova is expected to present an alternate parking plan to the Radnor Township Commissioners in the near future for the new Field House . . . Which brings to mind a question . . . How come we have adequate parking for a 13,000-seat stadium, tailgates and all, but not enough parking for a new Field House of 6,400 seats? . . . Another factor which hasn't been taken into consideration is that most of the people attending the games will be students who live on campus and don't even have cars.

I would like to express my thanks to Villanova's Sports Information Department and Craig Miller, Dave Coskey and Anne Guida, without whom this section would be in more disarray than it normally is . . . Their work was judged to be among the top three publications in the nation last year, despite the fact that they never used an article which I submitted to them . . . The intramural softball tournament is coming to a close and should be over when the snow disappears . . . Sometime in June . . . The Last Chance, a team comprised solely of seniors, looks like a safe bet to win the whole ball of wax . . . Speaking of intramurals, President John Lavery and his staff did an admirable job this year despite limited funds and a lack of coverage from the press (sorry folks but we can't cover everything).

Villanova's Don Paige, a 1981 graduate who is now an assistant track coach here, is bouncing back from an injury which kept him sidelined long enough to make many think he had stopped competing actively . . . Quiz Question: Who is Villanova's winningest active coach? . . . Answer: Coach Langran, mentor of both the men's and women's tennis teams . . . Most underrated Villanova Coach: It's a tie between George Betzler of the rugby club and Tully Vaughn of the crew team . . . Both men are recognized experts in their fields . . . Well that's about it for this year, have a great summer and we'll see you in the fall with another great year of sports coverage.

Lacrosse Action:

Women Post 1st Win

By BOB HELLER

The Villanova women's lacrosse team produced their first victory of the 1983 season earlier this week when they pummelled Textile 15-2.

Nova was playing an excellent offensive and defensive game. They kept the ball in Textile's zone throughout most of the game. Robin Lucarini opened the scoring in the first half and Anne McGuiness added another to make the score 2-0 before Textile got on the scoreboard on a goal by Holly Meister to make the score 2-1.

There was no stopping the Nova offensive attack as they pounded the Textile goaltender with 16 shots on net in the first half, half of which were goals.

McGuiness scored three more times in the first half to finish the game with four goals. Maura O'Shea had two first half goals and an assist as well. Andrea Martino scored an unassisted goal to round out the Wildcat scoring attack in the first half.

Nova continued to pummel the Textile goalie in the second half, scoring more goals and taking more shots.

The first three goals were within the first three minutes of the second half and within a 90 second span. O'Shea, Kathy Yeh and Lucarini scored these three goals to make the score 11-1. Four minutes later, Lucarini scored her third goal of the game to make the score 12-1. The last three Nova girls came within the last five minutes as Susan Callahan, Martino and Anita Clarke scored for the Cats making the final score 15-2. Textile's Cate Crissey got their other goal.

Six of the Wildcat goals were assisted by another teammate. The six assists were awarded to Adri Falco, McGuiness, Callahan, O'Shea and Clarke who had two.

The victory gave the Cats a 1-5 record.

Men Up Record to 6-3

By TOM REUSCHE

Last year, the men's lacrosse team staggered to a 4-8 record, but Monday's 23-2 whitewash of Fairleigh Dickinson-Teaneck brought this season's record to 6-3, assuring only the second winning season in Villanova history.

After a 15-11 loss to Kutztown last week, first year Head Coach Randy Marks utilized his entire team in defeating Fairleigh Dickinson. Eleven players tallied goals, with sophomore John Haggarty's six goals and one assist leading the rampage.

Scoring 32 goals through nine games, Haggarty ranks in the NCAA Division I top ten. Sophomore goalie Dennis Cunningham's save percentage is also in the top ten.

Team effort, however, produced Monday's victory, according to Marks.

"Contributions from everyone helped us. Joe Breen, a senior midfielder, scored his first goal ever," said Marks. "A third midfielder, Vince Bendinelli, won 11 of 13 faceoffs," for which he was awarded the game ball.

Haggarty's two goals and two assists were not enough to stem Kutztown, as the laxmen dropped a game "that could have gone either way," according to Marks.

"Actually," explained the coach, "our defense played very well. David Huang (a midfielder from Lower Merion High) destroyed us on faceoffs (17 of 26). That gave them ball control."

Negotiating an early 5-1 lead, Villanova then incurred penalty trouble, enabling Kutztown to find the nets easily and take the lead. Villanova struck back to within two goals several times, but fell short in the stretch.

Challenging the school record for victories in a season (eight in 1979), Marks' team has a legitimate chance to tie the mark as they close the season with home games against Georgetown and West Chester State.

Encouraging is the outlook for at least the next two seasons, as sophomores Haggarty, Cunningham and high-scoring Mike Cortese (19 goals, 13 assists) return to Marks' building program.

Ruggers Host Welsh Squad

By JOE HAGLEY

Like the transformation of the locusts, rugby at Villanova is making great strides in approaching the status of a varsity sport. The coach is top flight, the budget is growing and, with the arrival of this weekend, some of its competition is world class.

On Wednesday night, the Cardiff College rugby team of Wales arrived in preparation for a match against Villanova on Saturday. Cardiff College is to rugby what Penn State is to football. Its 28 members represent some of the most skilled ruggers in Great Britain. Some team members represent England in national competition.

"The idea of playing them originated with Coach Betzler," said Wildcat scrumhalf Mark Elia. Betzler has an international reputation in his coaching of elite teams. "He thought the game would be good for us, for the experience and the exposure," Elia remarked.

Cardiff has already played and beaten the Lafayette and Lehigh clubs, before its arrival in the Philadelphia area to play a non-collegiate city team and Villanova.

"They'll probably want to practice on Thursday and Friday," Elia continued. "The game is on Saturday and afterwards we plan to have a formal banquet for them in the East Lounge. At that time we'll present a plaque to the Welsh coach on behalf of his team for participating in the game. We're also giving out MVP awards for the game, our season and for the best scrummer."

With a softball marathon occupying the adjacent field, good weather should provide a large crowd across from the Field House tomorrow.

No matter what the weather, the Ruggers will be on the field Saturday afternoon.

For those unfamiliar with the game — granted a large majority of the student population — copies of the rules and the starting line ups will be distributed to the fans at game time.

Betzler has been preparing the players in lengthened practices for the different style of rugby that they will be encountering. He explained to the team: "You're not going to see anyone that's that much bigger than you or that much faster than you; their skills, though, are just phenomenal."

The team plans to offset the talented play of the Welshmen through aggressive, physical style they have been adopting in recent practices.

"The seniors are looking forward to their final intercollegiate match," offered wing Scott Farrar. "I'm sure the Welsh team is very confident about a victory here at Villanova, but as far as the team and myself are concerned, it's a bit premature."

The Cats hope physical play will do the trick against Cardiff.

Wildcats Snap Losing Streak

Nova Downs Widener in 10th

By ROBERT G. KELLY

Co-captain Don Casey's 10th inning RBI single lifted the Villanova baseball team to a 4-3 victory over Widener College Tuesday afternoon at St. Mary's Field.

The victory, three hours in the making, marked the Wildcats' first successful outing in nearly a month and their first win on their newly-christened home diamond.

Casey, while producing two RBIs, went three for five, as did outfielder Jimmy White (two singles and a home run), who scored the winning run. And pitcher Steve Zollner, lasting the entire ten innings, allowed only seven hits in recording his second win of the year.

After falling behind 1-0 in the first inning, the Wildcats evened the score in the bottom half of the inning when White cracked a solo homer with two outs. Nova took the lead for the first time, 2-1, on successive singles by John Corbin, White and Casey in the third inning. But Widener reclaimed the lead by scoring two runs in the fifth and sixth innings.

Villanova, in the seventh and final inning, tied up the game. Third baseman Rich Faggioni stroked a double and subsequently scored on another two-bagger by Jim Kane to knot the contest at 3-3.

Neither team scored in the eighth inning, but Widener loaded the bases in the top of the ninth. Zollner doused the Pioneer's rally by striking out the side. He proceeded smoothly the following inning by setting the visitors down in order.

The stage was finally set for the Wildcats to claim victory. With one out in the bottom of the tenth inning, White singled, advanced to third on two passed balls and scored the winning run on Casey's single.

THE MIGHTY CASEY AT BAT: Villanova senior Don Casey delivers the winning hit in a 4-3 victory over Widener. The Cats' Jimmy White scored from third to give the Nova squad its first win ever on St. Mary's Field.

College Basketball Review

by Al McGuire

One of the problems when a kid goes hardship is that many times the student-athlete has no where to go or anyone to speak to, because many times if he commits to an agent, verbally or in writing, he's immediately ineligible and forfeits the rest of his college playing time.

The answer, I feel, is that each university should have a committee of four or five people — people that are knowledgeable in law, insurance, finance, taxes and accounting — and that any agents who are looking to represent the player must go through this group. That way, they can feed back to the player what they feel the various agents are saying, whether they charge by percentage or by the hour, or what is out there for them as far as income possibilities.

The coach cannot be part of this. It's very difficult for the coach to be unbiased because if the pros are interested in the guy, it means he's an All-American, or at least all-regional, so the coach's input has to be biased. He's cutting off his nose to spite his face. Because he knows this is the guy who can get him to a bowl or post-season tournament, or insure SRO crowds and a national hook-up on TV.

But there has to be someone the young athlete can go to. Because a lot of time, he doesn't want to go pro. He just wants to find out what he's worth. It's like the farmer who doesn't want to sell his land, but goes around to the various real estate dealers just to see what it's worth.

I think it's o.k. for an athlete to test the water, find out its depth. Any blue-chip athlete wants to know what he's worth. Even Ralph Sampson, who stayed four years.

The first year, he was offered $400,000 by the Boston Celtics, the second year $800,000 by the Dallas Mavericks. Last year it was multi-millions by the Los Angeles Lakers. But the point is, Sampson did it the right way, with an attorney through the university without an agent. A lot of youngsters aren't that lucky.

One thing should be remembered. Passing up a college degree is no small decision. Because if you take twins, and one gets a college degree and the other doesn't, the one that gets the college degree will normally make half a million dollars more than the other over the next 25 years.

Now I don't think it's absolutely necessary for a ballplayer to get his degree in four years. That time span was put in by people who are not athletes. But I do think he should be close enough, so that after four years, there's an incentive for him to return and get his remaining credits.

But in college sports, if you don't have something like a panel or board, then there's too much of a chance of a young man getting caught in a misunderstanding leaving school before he's ready. Or of a devious agent catching a player in a slump, depressed or injured, at a time when he might make a move that hurts him in the long run, educationally and financially. Now obviously, Sampson made the right moves the first and second year, but he won't know if he was right to stay his last year until the bidding starts this time around.

The true thing in hardship is that it's not the hardship of the player, but the pro owner. He's in a bind or he wouldn't be coming after the athlete through an agent.

When I was at Marquette, I had three players who went hardship: Jimmy Chones, Larry McNeill and Maurice Lucas. What I told my three players, two should go, one shouldn't. Jimmy Chones, who was one of the first hardship cases ever, and Maurice, I told to go. They determined a number that they thought would justify leaving, and coming back to get their degree in time.

Jimmy, who had a nice 10-year run, I told to go because they met the $1.6 million in dollars, and we were trying to beat the merger between the NBA and the ABA. Once the leagues merged, the dollars would be much softer because there would be only one side to bargain with. Maurice, who's still around eight years later, wanted $800,000 over so many years, and he got it, so there was no way I could tell him he was wrong. Maurice picked up his degree in 1981 from Marquette.

Larry, I told not to go, but he didn't listen. Larry found two guys (I call them Frank and Jesse) who were not quality guys, and they snowballed him. I tried to stop Larry, I told him they were costing him half a million dollars, but he thought I was talking for myself, not him.

By Larry coming back his senior year, I'd have gotten him a high first-round draft choice. And that would have got him a locked contract for four or five years. That's what you want, because it gives you time to mature, get used to the pro game. And it's a launching pad, a safe deposit box for a future career later.

Instead, Larry ended up playing with six clubs in eight years and out.

The point is, if Frank and Jesse had to have gone through a screening board they couldn't stroke, Larry might have benefited more.

How does a ballplayer find an agent? Or an agent find a player? It's done through another person of some sort. We all know who the great stars are going to be in sports, so some agents are already starting to angle when the kid's a sophomore in high school.

The unique thing about agents is, you can't do without 'em. You gotta have 'em. We all know athletes have to deal with these people, so why not make it above-board? That way it benefits both the athletes and the sport. There can be discussion on all points, and at least we help protect the kid from making a major mistake.

My idea of a board or panel isn't foolproof. But it should help keep things out in the open.

Football Decision Postponed

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

The Villanova Board of Trustees delayed rendering a decision on the restoration of football at the University by twice postponing a vote on the final proposal, at meetings once in June and again in August.

A special meeting was scheduled for August 9 but was cancelled because members of the board felt there was a need for further study on the proposal of restoration of the sport that was dropped April 14, 1981.

Originally the trustees were expected to decide the fate of football following a committee's report at a June 28 meeting but postponed a vote until August. That meeting was delayed so that a four person committee could double-check financial figures.

Sources involved have said that this committee would finish its examination early in September and a special meeting might be scheduled for later in the month. If not, the trustees will make a final decision at one of two regular meetings, on Oct. 11 or Dec. 13. The trustees have confirmed that the latter is their absolute deadline.

The final proposal under the scrutiny of the trustees and Villanova President, the Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A., includes definitions of the competitive level and opponents, academic compatibility and costs and benefits. Every major group on campus, students alumni, faculty, administration and appointed study think-tanks have contributed opinions, facts, figures and other information designed to bring this volatile issue to a conclusion.

With the final decision imminent, a review of the contributions of each group is necessary to understand the complexity of the issue as it is being presented.

No group of individuals has been more assertive in their desire to see the restoration of football than the alumni who have lobbied long and hard since the sport was discontinued. Various alumni groups have demonstrated their displeasure in several ways.

Attendance at the annual homecoming weekend has dropped dramatically. The Wildcat Club, an athletic booster organization, has withheld $100,000 but has guaranteed donations of $100,000 annually if football is restored. The outspoken members of the Committee to Restore Football hosted a Bob Hope concert in December 1981, netting approximately $40,000.

The Alumni Association has pledged to purchase 3,000 season tickets annually (or $150,000) and is infamous for asking Driscoll to step down as president in 1982.

Also strongly supportive of restoration has been Villanova's student body. The loudest cry for reinstatement echoed throughout the campus last October when more than 96 percent of the 4,309 students polled in a survey said they would pay a mandatory $35 fee to defray the cost of a new program.

Even the faculty expressed its wishes. The AAUP-sponsored poll last spring showed that 65 percent of the professors favored some form of football.,

Aside from soliciting money from the many different sources closely associated with Villanova, football boosters claim that the publicity for the sport acts as free recruitment for prospective students and donors. According to Ed Morosky, assistant vice president for development, while total dollars donated have risen steadily the last five years, the percentage has declined, forcing an increase of phoning three times as many alumni as done in the past. Morosky admits that the dropping of football definitely had a negative effect on donations.

Villanova versus Clemson, from a past football season.

Attitudes can change over a period of time and many have as some wounds have been healed and cooperation has been extended between all parties involved. However, there are still those recognized as adamant against restoration. Driscoll is known for his stance against intercollegiate football. A University committee designed to examine football voted 8-1 in favor of a football proposal to be submitted to the trustees. The one dissenting vote was cast by the Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for academic affairs. Two of the most powerful figures on campus, Driscoll and Gallen have faced a deluge of questions and opposition to their stance.

The efforts of all parties will finally culminate in the decision that will be rendered within the next four months. Unlike the original decision to drop the 87-year sports tradition, this issue will be settled with the benefit of 28 months of acquired information and intelligence. The result will terminate what may be the biggest controversy ever at Villanova.

Villanova's freshman class continued to rank academically above the national averages of statistical scores as well as high school class ranks.

More than one-half of Villanova's incoming freshmen were in the top 20 percent of their high school classes, while almost 90 percent of the students were in the top 40 percent.

For the 141st year, Villanova is attracting highly talented freshmen despite the recent declining number of college-age students and relatively low population of qualified students.

College Board's Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores of Villanova's class of 1987 were far above the norm. Math scores averaged 566 while the verbal averaged 573.

Only about 20 percent of all 17-year-olds score 450 or above out of the possible 800 in the College Boards for both verbal and math sections and only three percent score 600 or more in both tested skills, according to George Kenner, author of "Academic Stategy: The Management Revolution in American Higher Education."

Admissions standards at many colleges and universities are being lowered, according to Kenner, because the number of qualified students is limited.

Statistics revealed "a third of all colleges currently admit more than 90 percent of their applicants; three quarters admit more than 70 percent; and nine-tenths of the institutions admit over half of those who apply."

In contrast to the high national averages, Villanova accepted only 55.2 percent of its applicants for admission into the freshman class. Of the 3,793 Villanova students accepted from the 6,864 applicants, estimates from the admissions office figure approximately 1,541 freshmen will attend the University.

Liberal Arts and Sciences attracted the highest number of students with 630 students. Following, 434 students enrolled in Commerce and Finance, 329 in Engineering and 141 in Nursing.

Dr. Esmonde Dead

Dr. Margaret Esmonde, an associate professor English, died August 3 at Bryn Mawr Hospital.

Esmonde was considered a respected authority on the critical study of children's literature. She was founding editor-in-chief of the Children's Literature Association Quarterly, serving as president of the association from 1977 to 1978.

Esmonde's special field of interest was the development of children's science fiction and fantasy literature. Her numerous essays on this subject were published in a number of critical volumes and periodicals, and she was a frequent lecturer at children's literature conferences and seminars.

After earning a Bachelor of Arts at Immaculata College in 1955, Esmonde received her M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Miami. Her academic honors include a full scholarship to Immaculata College, a two-year research fellowship at the University of Miami, and the Hess Research Fellowship in Children's Literature at the University of Minnesota.

Esmonde joined the Villanova faculty as a part-time instructor in 1971 and became a full-time assistant professor in 1974. She was elevated to associate professor in 1978. Additionally, Esmonde served as adjunct professor of children's literature at the University of Pennsylvania from 1979 to 1980.

Esmonde is survived by her husband, Laurence; daughters Joan, Marguerite and Kathleen; son Laurence Jr.; her mother Mercedes F. Powell; and brothers Morris and Charles Powell.

Are you pro-life? Do you like helping people? Do you want to meet people? If you answered yes to these questions, then you might be interested in the Villanovans for Life. Come see what we're all about at our first meeting on Sept. 15 at 4:30 p.m. in the West Lounge. New and old members are welcome! For more information call 645-7244.

A New Course Big

Latin and Greek in Current English Usage. Classics 117-2021-01, 3 credits, MWF 11:30-12:30. A practical study of Greek and Latin prefixes, roots, and suffixes in modern vocabulary; vocabulary building with emphasis on technical terminology in scientific and medical usage. Knowledge of the languages is not required.

The course is highly suited to students working in the sciences, nursing, pre-medicine, and pre-law; it would also be an appropriate choice for those majoring in English, communication arts, modern languages, and other humanities.

Bible Study

An informal Bible Study is held each week at 8 p.m. in St. Rita's chapel. Sponsored by University Christian Outreach.

HEC Retreat

Handicapped Encounter Christ (HEC) invites you to join in a retreat on Sept. 29, 30, Oct. 1, 2. We need able-bodies persons to accept the challenge of being of service and ministering to the physical needs of a disabled person participating in this retreat. There will be a meeting on Sept. 11th at 7:30 p.m. in St. Rita's chapel. For more information call campus ministry.

Prayer Meeting

A charismatic prayer meeting is being held this Thursday at 3 in St. Rita's chapel. (Times may change after this week so call campus ministry).

Music Meeting

For all musicians; instrumentalists and vocalists who want to be involved in campus liturgies this year, must attend a workshop on Sept. 11, 1:30-3:30 in St. Rita's.

Scholarships

The University Fellowship Committee is now accepting applications from seniors for Rhodes, Marshall and Fulbright grants. These prestigious awards provide generous support for one or more years study abroad.

Sophomores interested in public service careers are invited to apply for Truman Scholarships, which provide four years full tuition.

For further information, contact Dr. Michael Burke, Director of the Honors Program (Falvey Library — fourth floor X4650). The deadline for all applications is September 30. Since an extensive essay is required for all scholarships and grants, be sure to inquire at the earliest possible date.

Who's Who

If you have a cum of 3.0 or better and have not received a letter concerning Who's Who, please contact the Dean of Students Office in Room 213 of Dougherty Hall.

Henri Nouwen

Henri Nouwen, a well known author and speaker, is coming to Villanova on Sept. 16. He will be speaking on his recent experiences in Nicaraqua in the Villanova Room at 8 p.m.

Free Law School

The Free Law School is offering a six week class on how to do legal research beginning September 19. The fall session will include classes and workshops on other topics such as how to do your own divorce, workers' rights and the First Amendment. Fees are $3-$7 per session for most courses. For more information, call 567-1641.

Field House Plan Approved by Township Commission

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

Villanova University's preliminary plans for the construction of a new athletic field house were approved in late July by the Radnor Township Planning Commission.

Approval for the plans required the University to meet several requirements, including:

The installation of sidewalks on both sides of North Ithan Ave. on University property; iron fencing and buffer planting along the south side of Lancaster Ave., in front of the parking lots and on both sides of South Ithan Ave.; and a solution to the storm drainage problem under the railroad bridge at the intersection of County Line Road and North Ithan Avenue.

Villanova also requested from the commission permission for compact parking on four campus parking lots to provide additional spaces for the new field house.

According to a survey conducted by the George Beetle Co. of Philadelphia, the move to smaller parking spaces allows 200 new spaces in the main parking areas and a total of 300 additional spaces for the campus as a whole.

"The survey revealed an average of over 30 percent of the cars in the University lots are compact cars," said the Rev. George F. Burnell, assistant to President Driscoll.

All three present lots were repaved and repainted with stripes to accommodate compact cars. The proposed 226-car lot adjacent to the new field house is planned to follow the same design.

Villanova's present field house, constructed in 1932.

Staff Photo

Radnor Township requires that parking spaces measure 9-by-6-by-20 feet, but the compact spaces measure 8-by-6-by-17, a size Radnor has approved in the past.

"The crosswalk at the intersection of Ithan and Lancaster has been relocated, and we have put in new sidewalks along Bartley Hall," Burnell noted. "We have partially completed new curbing, and we hope to complete installation of the new fencing sometime this semester."

"We are working in cooperation with the Lower Merion Township to solve the water drainage problem under the railroad bridge. It's Lower Merion's responsibility, but they may not have the funds to handle it. If not," revealed Burnell, "Villanova has agreed to correct it on its own."

Prior to actual construction on the athletic facility, a sewer line under the site had to be relocated. "We are doing this to prevent any future problems on that site," Burnell stated. "We were not required by the township to do that, but it will now run alongside the field house site."

The fill from the field house excavation is being used to fill in a depressed area behind Kennedy Hall. "It might be of use in the future as a recreation field."

Burnell estimated that construction on the field house project will be completed "sometime in the 1984-85 school year, not in September of 1984 as originally planned."

Rape Charge Dropped: Victim Refuses to Testify

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

A Villanova student has refused to testify against two members of the Syracuse University basketball team who reportedly raped her at the Big East Tournament in March 1982.

At a June pre-trial hearing, the 21-year-old N.J. native stated that she is unable to testify because "the incident has ruined my life ... I could not go through it again." The student has requested anonymity.

Charges have been dismissed against Andre Hawkins, then 18, a

Ron Payton

6-8 center from Malverne, N.Y., and Ronald Payton, then 22, a 6-5 forward from Trenton, N.J., who were members of the Syracuse team that was participating in the annual tournament. The two players were arrested and charged with first degree sexual assault stemming from the March 5 incident.

As reported in the Villanovan March 12), the Villanova student and the two accused Syracuse players differed in their accounts of the incident. According to Hartford police, the incident reportedly occurred early Friday in Hawkins' room at the Parkview Hotel where the Syracuse team had been staying during the tournament.

The woman alleged that she had been invited into the room and then raped by the two players. Lt. John Telesky, of the Hartford police, said that Hawkins was arrested shortly after the assault was reported to the police at 1:55 a.m. Payton was arrested later that day after the woman identified him from photographs of the basketball team members. Both were arraigned later that day and freed on $25,000 bonds.

The woman reported that she had been followed by several of the Syracuse players and Hawkins followed her to her room from an elevator. When she returned onto the elevator, she alleged, Hawkins and Payton began to make improper advances and refused to allow her to disembark at her designated floor and, instead, forced her to ride to the 12th floor and took her to room 1206 where they proceeded to rape her.

A teammate of the accused players gave a different account to the police. Calvin Perry claimed that the woman invited Hawkins and Payton to her room and later returned with them carrying a bottle of whiskey and allegedly the four of them talked until Hawkins and Payton left with the woman at about 1 a.m.

Hartford State's Attorney John Bailey told Judge John D. Brennan that the state was "willing and ready to prosecute" but "without the alleged victim, it would be impossible to meet the burden of proof" necessary for a conviction.

The woman had originally indicated last September that she was willing to testify, but her attorney told Bailey that she had changed her mind. The woman maintains she told the truth when she accused the two men of assaulting her and said she had not been threatened or paid off.

Woman Ordered to Return Rare Books

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

A Delaware County woman recently spent a night in the county jail after refusing to surrender a collection of rare books she allegedly promised to store for former Villanova director of graduate studies, the Rev. Joseph Papin, O.S.A., a noted theologian who died of a heart attack last September.

Eleanor Faix, 49, an Aldan resident, was jailed for contempt of court on Aug. 18 after telling a judge she would not bring back the volumes of works supposedly given to her by Papin to store shortly before he died on Sept. 2. Faix said she offered to store the books and papers for Papin because he said he had no place to keep them.

The controversy was resolved after Faix's night in jail when she agreed to turn over the books, a court spokesman said.

According to Kathryn Connelly, attorney for the Papin estate, the estimated 3,000 pounds of works are part of an extensive library of rare and unusual literature, written primarily in Latin, Greek, Slovak and some in archaic languages compiled by Papin that he stated in his will should be donated to either the St. Charles Borremeo Seminary or one of two orders of Slovak nuns in the midwest.

"Father believed that only in such an environment could his books best be put to the scholarly uses he intended," read a petition filed by Connelly.

Faix testified that the books were in storage in a hotel she and her husband have purchased and are renovating in Cape Charles, Va.

Delaware County President Judge Francis J. Catania ordered the books returned to Pennsylvania and placed in a bonded warehouse until a further hearing on Sept. 27.

Faix came into possession of the books after she met Papin at Fitzgerald Division of Mercy Catholic Medical Center in Darby, where he was a patient.

Papin joined the Villanova faculty in 1963 as a resident professor of theology. In 1968, he initiated the Villanova University Symposia and became director of the University's Theological Institute.

Born in 1914 in Slovakia and ordained as a priest in 1942, Papin was recognized as a zealous collector and translator of theological studies. He spoke 16 languages and read more than 30. Papin also taught at DePaul University and Notre Dame and produced close to thirty works during his lifetime.

V.U. Loan Default Below Average

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

Villanova student's 3 percent rate of default on the federally-funded National Direct Student Loans is one of the lowest in the nation.

According to Arthur Switzer, associate director of financial aid, Villanova's figure is far below the national average, currently 16 percent.

Approximately 1,600 Villanova graduates are currently repaying their National Direct Student Loans, "but thousands more have paid them off," Switzer said in a recently published report. About 500 current students are in the loan program this year, which administers $450,000 annually.

The federal government funds 90 percent of the loans which are administered through the schools' financial aid office. Each college and university contributes the remaining 10 percent from its budget.

Eligibility for the loan depends on the student's need as determined from information provided on financial aid forms. The number of loans a school makes to its students is decided by the available money it has to lend. The more frequent the repaid loans, the more money is made available for new applicants.

Switzer said that Villanova's success is attributable to good management and high-caliber students. "Most of our graduates are good people," he said. "They're not out to beat the program. They realize that every dollar they repay goes out to meet the needs of another student."

Because Villanova's rate is so exceptional, Switzer noted that Villanova "got a little over and above" the normal allocation this year. Colleges and universities whose rate of default surpasses 10 percent lose money.

Faculty Favors Football

A poll sponsored by the Villanova chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) concludes that 65 percent of the faculty would favor the restoration of football at some level at the University.

In the poll conducted last spring, the highest percentage of those who favor restoration voted to see the sport reinstated at the Division III level.

Forty nine percent of the faculty, 229 of 465, voted in the poll that was conducted following the AAUP's faculty debate in the organization's quest to determine faculty sentiment toward restoration of the football program that was dropped in April, 1981.

Faculty members who opposed entirely the restoration of football totaled 80, a 35 percent figure representing the largest block of the voting faculty.

In a breakdown of the voting, one faculty member favored restoration at the Division IA level with 95 scholarships. Eight faculty members voted for restoration to the Division IAA level with 75 scholarships. Sixty faculty members, 26 percent, opted for Division IAA with grants-in-aid which represent the third largest percentage of votes.

The Division IAA level is supposedly favored by most of the groups lobbying to bring football back to Villanova. Villanova would compete in IAA, but would give no scholarships. Instead, following the deduction of government, school and family contributions and loans from the cost of tuition, a portion of the athlete's remaining requirement would be provided by a grant-in-aid pool that would total an estimated $233,543 annually.

The AAUP debated in late March on what the faculty's posi-

Mission Statement: Fact or Fiction?

"Villanova is committed to those same high goals and standards of academic integrity and excellence as well as personal and corporate achievement that characterize all worthy institutions of higher learning."

This is an excerpt from the philosophy that Villanova subscribes to as the moral constitution of the University. Known as the "Mission Statement," it is a collection of thoughts and principles that the University has pledged to follow in its commitment and dedication to adhere to the overall function of the educational environment.

Freshmen may be surprised at their initiation to the world of higher education at this medium-sized Catholic University as they discover what ideas the institution they have chosen to spend four long years at espouses as the way to achieve the knowledge and wisdom that only a Villanova education can award. For upperclassmen, this may be a good time to reflect upon your decision to attend this University.

Every college and university has a philosophy much the same, only worded differently. The question is: Do these institutions, in our case Villanova, abide by their mission statements? Putting pride aside, one should cast an objective, critical eye upon certain passages in the statement.

". . . Villanova attempts to enroll students with diverse social, geographic, economic, and educational backgrounds. Furthermore, in utilizing its financial aid resources to help achieve this diverse student body, Villanova recognizes its responsibility to use part of those resources to assist the economically and educationally disadvantaged."

Is this part of the Mission Statement unclear? Missing in these lines is any mention of efforts to enroll minorities at Villanova. Perhaps this category falls under "social backgrounds?" It's not likely. And every year some Villanova press release reads like the script of a bad B movie. The admissions office releases figures that show Villanova lags behind all area colleges and universities in recruitment and enrollment of minorities with an average two percent minority enrollment.

Last year, the University's dean of admissions put it rather bluntly. "Those students who are really good go elsewhere . . . We don't have a concerted effort against minorities but I don't set policy." (the Villanovan, Oct. 15). Is this adhering to the ideals set forth? Is this attempting to assist all students? Is there an effort to change this situation? Perhaps a "diverse student body" is not quite what Villanova is looking to achieve.

"In accomplishing its purposes, the University fully complies with all the requirements of Federal and State legislation with respect to equality of opportunity and non-discrimination."

So there is mention of non-discrimination. Let's apply this to the faculty situation. In the 1983-84 University Bulletin, there is a list of the faculty members at Villanova totaling 437. Of that number, a mere 73 are women — less than 17 percent. And of that percentage, 57 percent are concentrated in the nursing area, generally recognized as a "woman's field." Of the 73 women, there are 62 professors and 11 instructors. If the numbers are confusing, envision it this way. The student who is not in the nursing field of study will find that only 7 percent of the faculty may be women.

The makeup of the Villanova hierarchy fares no better. There are 31 administrative officers. Three women are included — the dean of nursing, the assistant registrar and the acting director of the library. Again, not an overabundance of women in key positions. Additionally, there are 22 members of the Board of Trustees. Two are women. Is this an example of equal opportunity and non-discrimination. The answer is no.

If the University intends to be viewed as an institution that can benefit all, it should pursue what it proposes in the summation of the Mission Statement and perhaps eliminate the preceding claims.

"Finally, this community seeks to reflect the spirit of St. Augustine by the cultivation of knowledge, by respect for individual differences and by adherence to the principle that mutual love and respect should animate every aspect of university life.

U.S. Complicity Through Taxation

To the Editor:

The actions a government takes have to be taken with the cooperation of the people whom it governs. As stated by Thomas Jefferson, a government exists by the consent of the governed. Thus, the atrocities that nations have delivered upon the human race have been committed, because the citizens of those nations cooperated in the atrocities. The mass murders of Nazi Germany and Stalinist Russia could not have existed if the citizens of those nations did not give their consent.

Today our government plans and prepares for nuclear war. It does so, because it believes it has the consent of the majority of its citizens. Our government also financially supports murders in African, Asian and Latin American nations. It is able to do this, because not only do we consent to it, but we also pay for it. Through taxation we are complicit in homicide and omnicide.

Many American citizens see this as just the nature of our current world situation and that our government is following necessary steps to preserve our status. I do not. I view the actions that it takes under the name of defense as immoral and demeaning of human life, and I do not wish to participate in such actions.

However, by legally complying with tax regulations and allowing withdrawal from my salary, I share complicity in these acts. My distaste for my involvement exceeds my concern for legal consequences. I can no longer in good conscience comply with my government's actions.

Enclosed is a W-4 form with 253,000,000 deductions, an U.S. National Security Council estimate of the U.S. and U.S.S.R. deaths in the event of a nuclear war. Those lives and the lives taken by our government of the people in Asia, Africa, and Latin America are my responsibility. I have invested in their deaths. The number is a formality. The intent is that I no longer wish to finance killing and that I, like our nations forefathers, do not view taxation as inevitable.

My request is that you honor my W-4 statement and not act as a buffer between me and the Internal Revenue Service. My understanding is that all you need to do is inform the Service. You are not required to tax me, if I submit the appropriate number of allowances. I believe I have fulfilled that requirement.

Freshmen Enter The Twilight Zone

"It was a normal day in the life of this college-bound teenager — or so he thought. It was a bright morning, a day blessed with sunshine and promise. But with that first step into the campus, swarming with others also lured by the promise, the freshman knew, from this moment on, his life would never be the same. This freshman had just entered the twilight zone."

(music fades)

All the scenario needs for completion is Rod Serling conducting his ominous narration from deep in the bowels of Mendel Hall. But even the late Serling could not come close to describing the feeling that must plague freshman college students nationwide on their first day on foreign ground. To be sure, there are efforts to ease the student into the indoctrination into this brave new world. The orientation program is designed to acquaint freshmen with all the ins and outs of university life, both on and off campus. Granted,there are numerous activities and countless helpful creatures known as orientation counselors milling around, anxious to alleviate the anxiety of the first day. But four years of actual experience cannot be crammed into four frivolous days of obtaining mealcards, meeting roommates and searching out soulmates from the same hometown or high school. There is more.

Too often for the incoming freshman, the common fear is lack of acceptance and a fear of exposing individuality. One cannot discount the supposed importance of "fitting in."

This we shall call the lemming theory. Lemmings are northern rodents reknown for clustering together in packs and conducting a suicidal ritual in which they follow one another into a body of water and drown, oblivious to the fact that this is an unnecessary fate. Behavior like this can be found in all groups of people and occurs predominately at college among members of the freshman class.

The sooner the freshman recognizes his error in toeing the same line as every other newcomer to Villanova might and adhering to the lemming theory, the more immediate the results will be. The four years spent at college are unlike any other period of time in an individual's life. Friendships that will last a lifetime are forged now. Goals are set and the means of establishing them take shape. One's path is set before him and the future is slowly revealed daily in the present.

Each new Villanovan wonders about his next step and begins to question his motives. Some will never seek a singular, distinctive character; they can only identify with the group's ideas and plans. Freshmen should begin now to assert each gift they bring to this center of intellectualism. Status-seeking is discouraged; expressions of independence are welcome. The four years at Villanova will provide numerous opportunities to display God-given abilities and assert individualism. The University is designed to cultivate and nurture the intellect, not control or alter one's convictions. Understanding this is the first step a freshman must take in becoming independent.

Villanovans in the News

Villanova's vice president for financial affairs, Gary Fenner, was recently appointed advisor to the Manor Junior College Board of Trustees Finance Committee.

Fenner has served at Villanova since 1981. He received his master's degree in accounting from Rutgers University and bachelor's degree in sociology from Cornell University. He is a financial systems consultant from Information Associates, Inc. and a certified public accountant.

Fenner played a key role in the University's decision to issue a $25 million bond issue in 1982 to aid in financing several construction projects, including erection of new dorms and a new fieldhouse.

Former Villanovan Editor-in-Chief Terence O'Toole was named top student in a class of 278 who received MBA degrees from Stanford University's Graduate School of Business.

At the school's June 12 ceremonies, O'Toole was named Henry Ford II Scholar, an honor which includes a scroll, a plaque, and a check for $5,000. The award was established in 1979 in the name of the former chariman of Ford Motor Co.

O'Toole, editor-in-chief of the Villanovan in 1979, graduated first in Villanova's Class of 1980 with a bachelor's degree in economics. Following graduation, he worked as a newspaper reporter and a management consultant. O'Toole has joined Goldman, Sachs & Company, an investment firm, in New York.

Arab-Islamic Institute Opens

A new undergraduate program, "The Institute for Contemporary Arab and Islamic Studies," is being offered this fall for undergraduate students who wish to focus on Arab and Islamic studies along with their major.

The major concentration of this new program is centered on contemporary and modern periods with the objective to train students for careers associated with the Islamic and Arab cultures.

To qualify for a certificate in Arab and Islamic studies, a student may enter as early as his sophomore year but no later than the beginning of the junior year. Prior to entering the program, approval of the program's director is required.

There are a number of requirements that must be completed in order to receive a certificate in Arab and Islamic studies: including six semesters of Modern Standard Arabic. Students are suggested to commence their language study at the earliest possible time. It is possible to complete this requirement in four regular semesters plus an intervening summer session. Another way to complete this requirement is by passing a written and oral examination in Modern Standard Arabic. Also required is one semester of Islamic History; one semester of Modern Arab History; one semester in Arab Politics or International Relations; one semester of Sociology; Economics or Anthropology of the Arab World; one semester of an Elective determined in consultation with the director of the program and one semester of a senior seminar.

"The Islamic States in Soviet-American Relations", P.Sc. 180-7175, is the second seminar of an ongoing series offered by the political science department, this fall semester. Iraq, Saudi Arabia and other Arab Gulf states will be the concentration of this year's seminar. The course, open to undergraduate as well as graduate students is scheduled on Wednesday evenings at 7:30 p.m.

Dr. Hafeez Malik, Institute coordinator.

It is possible for students interested in this course to include it in their schedule at the present time or during fall course adjustment period: September 8 until September 15, 1983.

Interested students in the Arab and Islamic Studies program should contact Dr. Hafeez Malik or the Rev. Kail Ellis, O.S.A., Directors of Contemporary Arab and Islamic Studies in 208 Tolentine (215) 645-7325, Villanova University.

The Sign of Virgo

By SHAWN TRACY, OSA
Director of Campus Ministry

Villanova students who enter university life in late August and early September are born here under the sign of Virgo.

In general, you may be characterized as highly dependable, rooted in basics, prone to caution, very careful in matters regarding self, financially thrifty, and encouraged by holistic health movements. You are value centered, and you have a strong need to see the intricacies of life clearly.

Seniors, you are the class of 1984! You may be surprised by the confidence you feel after three years of tentative involvement in university life. Probably you will notice an emergence of concern for the larger world in which you live — its safety and order. In personal affairs you may tend to be absorbed in immediate decision making, emerging job opportunities, marriage possibilities, the nuclear war threat, and even environmental concerns.

Moreover, it is highly unlikely that you will dally in your immediate affairs, but rather attack problems and challenges head on. It is recommended that you seek one or two wise counselors for their contrasting viewpoints, and at times, their affection.

Juniors, and class of 1985! You may be wondering what has been happening to you these last years while in college. Uncharacteristically, you may have wandered from accustomed "solid ground" in your personal lives. Perhaps unexpected risk taking in matters of sexuality, lifestyle, and relationship have left you unsettled and wondering.

Confusions will want to reach settlement! Values will seek clarity. There are wounds and hurts of the spirit — and among friends — which simply will demand attention and healing. Do not be surprised if you find yourself with a great need for thoughtful space, prayerful sanctuary, and more intimate sharings of purpose and meaning. Your September sign is calling you back to basic realities!

Sophomores! "Wise fools" that you are! You know the ropes now. The ways and means of turning corners and finding delights of all sorts are yours to be had. You are bursting with enthusiasm for meeting others. Nor are you afraid to dive right in and to swim in the exciting waters of communal life. You desire to learn — not from books and codes — but from the rich gathering of people like yourself; flesh and blood, eyes and ears!

Sexual dimensions in your personalities will no doubt be explored. There will be the usual testing of the waters of deeper relationship — always with an eye for the future need.

Of course, mistakes will be made. You are not about to be too careful at this time in your life. After all, enthusiasm does mean "God within," and caution does seem like such a "parental" idea. Disillusionment, rejection, personal failures — they must all wait for another day. You have an inner knowledge that life must be lived now, and you are not going to be cheated.

And now, you freshmen, the class of 1987! You probably chose to come to Villanova because you had a gut feeling about this place. Perhaps you have had a fear or two about making it in this world of rockets and rainbows. Your natural tendency for basics and rootedness suggested this school for you.

Lingering doubts about choice and identity will dissolve into more comfortable images of belonging and purpose. You look forward to the delights of learning with an eye on mastering and tools of knowledge for future purposes. You may become quite enthralled with one teacher or another as you realize a personal dimension unfolding in the way they live their profession. You will discover a new kind of love, a well being, a secure feeling, and an element of self respect welling up from within your own self. This is a birthing time — and its all yours!

If all of this seems a bit odd to you, perhaps you might imagine Thomas of Villanova himself. He too holds a degree under the September sign of Virgo — for Villanovans celebrate his feast day on September 22. He probably would have read this column and smiled! Looking us straight in the eye, and speaking words of straightforward encouragement, with a slight sixteenth century Spanish accent, he would have said, "Yes! These are the very best years of your lives! I wish you the very best!"

College Costs Up 10%

By LEONARD J. LA BARTH

Figures released in July indicate that Villanova's 9.7 percent tuition increase is in line with the nation's other colleges and universities.

According to a survey conducted by the College Board, the cost of a year at college will increase an average of 10 percent this fall. The most expensive school is Massachusetts Institute of Technology with a cost of more than $15,000.

The figures report that average costs at public colleges or universities for students who live on campus will rise 7 percent over the 1983-84 school year, to $4,721. Live-in students at private schools will pay 11 percent more on the average- $8,440.

The costs included in the survey include tuition and fees, room and board, books and supplies, transportation and personal expenses.

Along with MIT, the other ten most expensive schools in expected 1983-84 costs are Bennington College, $14,910; Harvard-Radcliffe, $14,700; Yale, $14,500; Princeton, $14,445; Brown, $14,145; Sarah Lawrence, $14,105; Dartmouth, $14,093, Stanford, $14,039 and Columbia, $13,820.

Students commuting to two-year public colleges will pay 8 percent more in 1983-84, an average of $3,400. Residents can expect to foot a bill of $3,868. Commuters to four-year public colleges also will pay about 8 percent more, or $3,797.

Villanova students will be paying $5,450 tuition this year, up 9.7 percent from last year's $4,965. Resident students will pay $3,400 for room and board, an increase of nine percent from last year's $3,120.

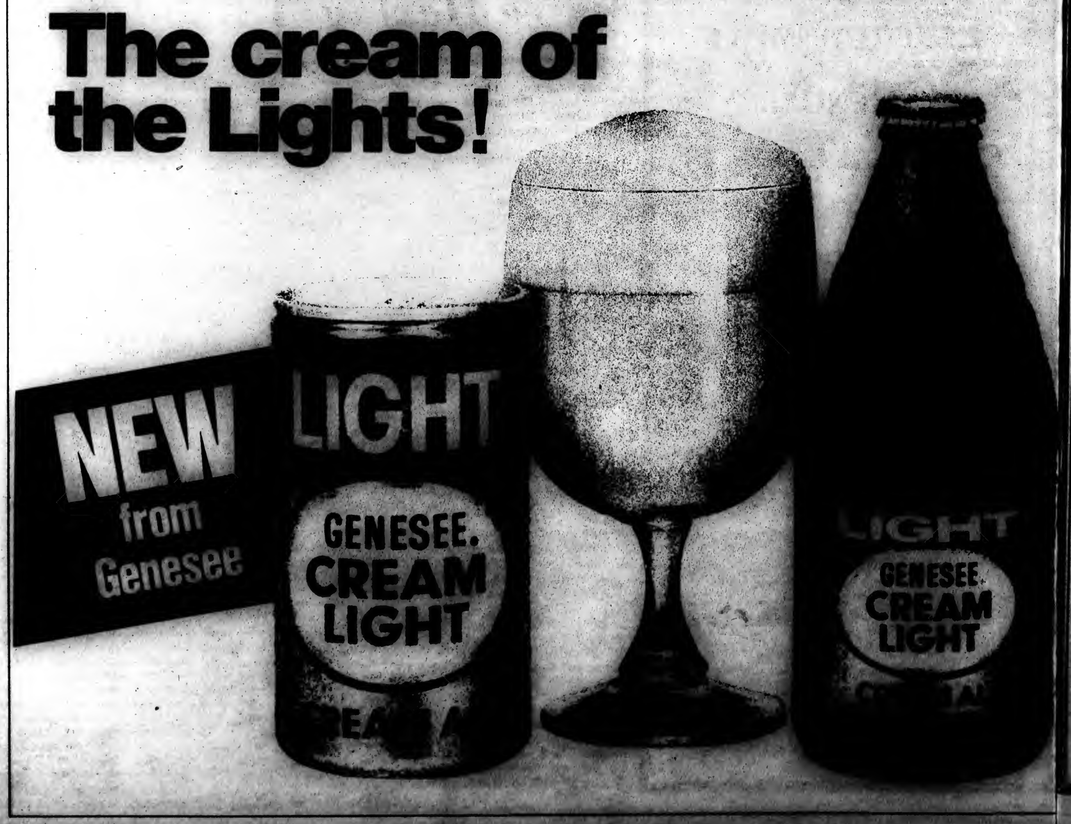
The cream of the Lights!



Browne Does Not Have to Pretend

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

In the early 1970s Jackson Browne, along with Linda Ronstadt, the Eagles and James Taylor, [illegible] called "L.A. Folk-Rock." In retrospect, the connotations of this sound were that of mellow, laid-back music that lacked any inspiration.

But, Jackson Browne is different. No one could ever call him uninspired. Browne has always been a first-rate artist whose song-writing prowess has been rightfully critically acclaimed.

On August 2 at Madison Square Garden in New York, Browne put to rest any doubts that he can't "rock 'n' roll." Supporting his first LP in three years ("Lawyers in Love"), Browne delighted the sold-out Garden crowd with a rousing two-hour set, which included a surprise appearance by "The Boss," Bruce Springsteen.

Jackson Browne

Browne was more confident on stage than he has ever been before. Clad in a black jacket, matching pants and green shoes, Browne opened up the show with "Somebody's Baby" and then "Here Come Those Tears Again." His band which in the past consisted of mainly studio musicians, has undergone several changes. The additions include Bob Glaub replacing veteran Leland Sklar on bass, Doug Haywood on organ and Philadelphia's own Rick Vito taking over the lead guitar duties for the "gone solo" David Lindley.

The new lineup is definitely for the better. There is a certain chemistry that this tandem possesses on stage. They were tight and brought new-found energy to old favorites such as "Doctor My Eyes" and "The Fuse." Guitarist Vito added some interesting fills, while drummer Russ Kunkel showed that when given the chance, he can play with the best of them.

The change of Browne on stage could be traced to the sound on vinyl. There is a certain rejuvenated feeling in his new material and each song performed from the album was warmly received. The title track, which takes a cynical look at America and some of her "sacred cows," is already racing up the charts. Browne has said that the peculiar title came from his brother-in-law who commented that "Los Angeles looked like it was designed by lawyers in love." "Cut It Away," the bouncy "Tender Is The Night" and "Downtown" an antithesis to the original also were showcased. The track "Say It Isn't True," also from the "Lawyers In Love" LP, was originally introduced during the 1980 No Nukes concerts at Madison Square Garden.

> The introspective and autobiographical Browne we know is not prevalent here, and there is a certain angriness in his songs.

Although the new album's lyrics are as good as in the past, there is definitely more emphasis on melody and the music itself. The introspective and autobiographical Browne we know is not prevalent here, and there is a certain angriness in his songs.

On this night, Browne exhibited a strong voice, and an interesting display of range. During "Lawyers In Love" Browne treated the crowd to a falsetto yelp that one came to expect from David Lindley. His usually monotone voice exhibited feeling rather than the brooding of past performances.

One of the evening's memorable moments was Browne's solo performance of "Late For The Sky" and "These Days." Another was the gut-wrenching singing during "The Pretender" which has become his signature. The show came to a close with the melodramatic, yet pretty "Hold On" in which Browne professes his love. "I love you/Just look at yourself-/what else would I do?" The crowd, which was decidedly female, ate it all up. But the best was still yet to come.

As Browne came out for his obligatory encore, the crowd knew what to expect — "The Load Out-Stay." What they did not expect to see was the entrance on to the stage of Bruce Springsteen. Together, Browne and Springsteen performed the Maurice Williams classic as they had done so brilliantly at the No Nukes concerts. Springsteen was obviously delighted as the crowd chanted "Bruuuuuce. . ." From there they went into "Running On Empty"

We're Having A Good Time

By JOHN F. LYNCH

To witness a concert featuring the band Blotto is truly an entertaining experience. The "unofficial" names of the band members are Cheese Blotto, Sargeant Blotto, Lee Harvey Blotto, and so on and so on.

The band has never gotten the respect that they justly deserve. However, with their hit song "I Want To Be a Lifeguard," they finally received musical acceptance. The video for "Lifeguard" has also been widely seen on MTV.

The main reason for their early obscurity was that no one took them seriously because most of the lyrics to their songs are ridiculous. However, the music they produce is tight and their melodies are smooth and make one want to dance.

An example of the type of songs they play can be best exemplified in the song, "My Boyfriend Is The Star of a Driver's Ed. Movie." This song describes how impressed a girl has become over the fact that her boyfriend was the "star" of one of those sleazy, low-budget driver's ed. movies.

Blotto has reached a point in their musical careers where respect and attention has finally been given. As long as they can produce good music, their lyrics can be as obscure as they want.

During the encore of the concert, which by the way took place at Toad's Place, in New Haven, Conn., Blotto played the theme song to the TV show "The Munsters." As you could imagine, this too brought many cheers, and laughs as well, from the crowd.

The band originated in Albany, N.Y., and over the past few years they have been playing the typical bar and college circuit. Blotto is a very talented and odd band that probably will never become a household word or sell many albums. But one thing is for certain, if you are looking for a band that is both unpretentious and will tickle your funny bone, then try Blotto.

Porter Speaks On Economics

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

Economics writer Sylvia Porter has published yet another book on man's favorite material possession — money. The Universal Press syndicated columnist has penned "Sylvia Porter's Income Tax Book" and "Sylvia Porter's New Money Book for the 80s," and now adds "Sylvia Porter's Your Own Money: Earning It, Spending It and Living On It In Your First Independent Years" to her impressive list.

What makes this 800-page guide unique is that it is written exclusively for persons between the ages of 14-24. While not sounding condescending to those ignorant of financial matters due to the inexperience of youth, Porter fluidly writes advice designed to help the novice financier with everyday monetary questions — from choosing IRAs to selling a car, from joining a country club to food shopping. Each page is a reference for the reader with a question about what to do with money once it is earned.

Porter divides her work into 18 chapters with sub-divisions covering a myriad of subjects. College students can start by skipping over most of the first chapter, with the exception of the last twenty pages that detail the efforts one can make in obtaining a career job. The examples Porter gives are realistic as she seemingly takes the reader by hand and makes him understand the point she is trying to drive home. The author adequately covers the process of sending out resumes and applications and excels in her description of job interview "Do's and Don'ts."

Porter devotes 55 pages to a chapter titled "Financing Higher Education" that raises many of the same questions students may have been asking themselves as of late. The author spells out the importance of college, comparing costs, getting financial aid and your own self-fulfillment (not to mention society!) seek and get the best and most meaningful education you can . . . I think no one has ever been hurt by 'knowing too much.' "

"Your Own Money" also delves into obtaining credit, purchasing stock, choosing a home computer and moving for the first time. The books also covers topics such as health care, diets, leisure activities and transportation; the chapter "Your Wheels" is 100 pages of critical information including car maintenance and choosing insurance.

Porter has been a syndicated columnist for 30 years, enjoying the reputation as America's most relied-upon financial adviser.

The best way to use "Your Own Money" is to keep it around as a handy reference guide. A question can easily be answered by flipping through the book until the answer is found. There isn't a financial matter Porter fails to cover in her exhaustive work. It is an easy-to-read reference guide devoted to explaining everyday financial decisions and life's many choices regarding monetary matters and, for $12.95, may very well be one of the best investments a student can make.

Rocking Around The Clock

Musically, this summer, what people remember most is the return of David Bowie. Here, Bowie broke attendance records. Of course, just several weeks ago, the hottest band around today, The Police, led by Sting, helped people forget Bowie for a little while.

Overall though, while promoters suffered, this summer turned out to be a feast for concert goers. Some of the acts that stopped here were Marvin Gaye, Supertramp, Bob Seger, The Animals, Stevie Nicks, Jackson Browne, Joan Armatrading, Joni Mitchell, Styx, ZZ Top, Neil Young and the list goes on and on. Robert Plant arrives here next Wednesday, and Stevie Wonder is rumored to be coming in October.

and Chuck Berry's "Sweet Little Sixteen." Springsteen dressed in a simple plaid shirt and beat up jeans looked as if he drove off the Jersey Turnpike. "The Boss" looked imposing on stage, as he has been reportedly body-building in order to sustain himself during his marathon four-hour concerts.

Browne offered the stage to Springsteen for several more songs, but Bruce knew whose show this was. With that he left the stage as Browne closed the show dramatically with the upbeat "For A Rocker." Overall, it was a triumphant return for Jackson Browne — with a little help from a friend.

Booters Compete in Ireland

By LARRY GOANOS

The Villanova men's soccer team recently completed a 12-day stay in Ireland. The Cat booters played six games while on the Emerald Isle, returning with an 0-4-2 record and plenty of experience.

"We're now a step ahead of our American competition," commented senior halfback John Valickus. "We've had the opportunity to play against some top-notch teams and we've learned a lot."

The wheels were set in motion for the trip last January when Head Coach Howard Graff attended a soccer convention in Orlando and made some contacts. The arrangement called for the Villanova players to each pay their own $500 airfare while ten generous Irish families each agreed to supply room and board for two Wildcat players.

Nineteen Villanova soccer players made the journey along with Coach Graff and team trainer Mindy Levengood. The team stayed in Malahide, just north of Dublin.

"The people were extremely friendly," explained senior forward Mike Lombardo. "They love Americans but they hate President Reagan. They can't understand how an actor could have been elected president."

The major difference between the styles of play in America and Europe, according to Valickus, seemed to be the roughness. "They were a lot more physical than us," he said, "But at the same time they didn't have to waste as much energy running as we did because of their superior knowledge of the game."

The Cats' typical day in Ireland consisted of practice in the morning, sight-seeing during the afternoon and playing at night. Among the many attractions which the Wildcats saw was the Irish Open Golf Tournament.

"It was a valuable experience, I'm sure we'll all remember it for a long time," concluded Lombardo.

Get to the answers faster. With the TI-55-II.

What you need to tackle the higher mathematics of a science or engineering curriculum are more functions – more functions than a simple slide-rule calculator has.

Enter the TI-55-II, with 112 powerful functions. You can work faster and more accurately with the TI-55-II, because it's preprogrammed to perform complex calculations – like definite integrals, linear regression and hyperbolics – at the touch of a button. And it can also be programmed to do repetitive problems without re-entering the entire formula.

Included is the Calculator Decision-Making Sourcebook. It makes the process of using the TI-55-II even simpler, and shows you how to use all the power of the calculator.

Honors Abound for Nova Track

Wildcat Alumni Set New Marks

By JOE MARUSAK

Sydney Maree set a world record. Eamonn Coghlan dominated the 5000 meters. Ross Donoghue excelled in the mile and 1500 meters. Don Paige ruled the 1000-meter pack.

All four international track stars have their own specialties, but what they have in common is that, at one time or another, they ran for Villanova University in NCAA track competition. This summer, they maintained the track tradition that is unique to this Main Line campus by capturing medals in all parts of the world.

Maree, who now resides in Rosemont, performed his magic on Aug. 28 in Cologne, West Germany, where he set a new world record in the 1500 meters (3 minutes, 31.24 seconds; the previous best had been Steve Ovett's 3:31.36). Maree's celebration was short-lived, however, as Ovett set a new record just a week later in a time of 3:30.77.

"Sydney was considering a return to Europe this week to try and break the new mark," said Villanova Assistant Track Coach Jack Pyrah on Wednesday. "Hanover, Germany wanted him to run in their meet on Thursday (yesterday), but it just would have been too hectic. So Sydney said, "Let Ovett have the record for a year. And then I'll break it."

Maree also placed third in the Fifth Avenue Mile on September 3; his time was 3:50.72. "Sydney had run two days earlier in Rome," Pyrah noted, "and then flew over here the next day. So he was a little tired going into the race."

In that same race, Ross Donoghue captured the second spot with a 3:50.10 clocking. "He ran the greatest race of his life," said Pyrah. "The amazing thing was that he outkicked Sydney in the last 100 yards or so."

Donoghue, a 1982 Villanova graduate, also competed in the Pan American Games this summer, placing second in the 1500 meters. Agberto Guimares, formerly of Brigham Young, was the only runner to finish ahead of him.

"Guimares is primarily an 800-meter man and had not run a big championship in the 1500 in four years," Pyrah explained. "Ross said afterwards that he should have known that Guimares was a half-miler and that it was his own fault in that he should have made a faster start."

While Donoghue was making headlines in Venezuela at the Pan American Games this summer, Don Paige, like Maree, was making the papers while competing in Cologne. He ran a personal best of 2:18.06 there to win the 1000-meter race.

As Pyrah tells it, "He beat a field of world class 800-meter men, including Willi Wuelbeck, who previously won the 800 meters at Helsinki in the World Championships."

At that same Helsinki competition, another Villanova alumnus, Eamonn Coghlan, swept the 5,000 meters in 13:33.52. "That was his big goal," said Pyrah. "That is exactly what he was aiming for this summer."

All four runners, coincidentally, trained at Villanova under the late Jumbo Elliott. "Jumbo used to say that after his top runners graduated, they should be able to coach themselves," Pyrah noted. "These four guys are certainly proof of that."

Villanova alumnus Sydney Maree poses above the clock showing his world record time in the 1500-meter event at Cologne, West Germany.

Men, Women Capture Big East Titles

By JOE MARUSAK

Carlton Young and Patty Bradley captured the Outstanding Performer awards in leading the Wildcat men's and women's track teams to the 1983 Big East Outdoor Track and Field Championships held early this summer at Villanova.

Young not only set a Big East record in winning the 400 meters, but he also anchored the 1600 and 400-meter relay victories that vaulted Villanova to the top of the conference pack.

He had some help from, among others, Rodney Wilson, who took the gold in the 110-meter hurdles and contributed to the 400-meter relay triumph. Martin Booker also made it a big weekend for Coach Jenkins' Cats as he took first in the 400-meter hurdles and had a hand in two of the three winning relays.

Russell Palmer carried V.U. in the field as he placed first in the hammer event.

On the women's side, it was all Bradley, who also won the meet's Outstanding Performance award by finishing first in the 800-meter race. Bradley keyed her team's 4 x 100 and 1600-meter relay victories and also took first in the long jump and the 100-meter hurdles.

Bradley also starred at the National Sports Festival in Colorado Springs this summer; she set a school record in the 400-meter hurdles (56.65) and was a member of the victorious 4 x 400 relay team, (Lori McCauley, Wendy Vereen, Bradley, Alice Jackson), which finished in 3:29.57 . . . At the NCAA Outdoor Championships held in Houston in early June, Bradley took seventh in the 800 meters (2:05.66) and fifth in the 400-meter hurdles (57.58) . . . Two weeks later at the TAC Championships in Indianapolis, she came in fourth in the 400-meter hurdles (56.92).

Villanova runner Veronica McIntosh, also at the National Sports Festival in July, ran a seventh-place 54.29 in the 400-meters to set a school record. She placed eighth in the 800-meters with a time of 2:17.0.

Rodney Wilson

The men runners also kept tive over the summer. John M shall, a junior, finished second the 800 meters (1:49.30) at the N tional Sports Festival. Only Jam Robinson, clocking in at 1:48.4 bettered Marshall's mark.

Marcus O'Sullivan prepared the fall circuit by running 3:56.60 mile while competing Cork, Ireland. It was the best ti ing of his collegiate career.

Hoop In Spotlight

By LARRY GOANOS

Another summer has drawn to a close and once again we find ourselves on the threshold of what should be a successful year for Villanova sports. As usual, most of the anticipation is reserved for the Wildcat basketball squad which must overcome the debilitating losses of John Pinone, Stewart Granger and Mike Mulquin.

Editor's Angle

Granger, chosen in the first round of the NBA draft by the Cleveland Cavaliers, averaged 9.3 points and 6.1 assists per game in the Southern California Summer League. Harvey Green, the Cav's Public Relations man, called Granger the team's best defensive player during the summer season. He is expected to play behind World B. Free and Geoff Huston.

Pinone, taken in the third round of the NBA draft by the Atlanta Hawks, scored an average of 9.1 points and grabbed 5.0 rebounds per game for the Hawks' summer team. He also shot 63.2 percent from the field.

Mulquin was drafted by the NBA but passed up the opportunity in order to play professionally in France.

All three former Wildcats left this Main Line campus with a diploma, as did 17 of 22 seniors in the Big East Conference. This 77 percent graduation rate placed the Big East atop the nation in this category. Trailing far behind in second place was the Big Eight Conference with a mere 50 percent graduation rate (12 of 24). The lowest mark belonged to the Southwest Conference where only 17 percent of the seniors (4 of 24) managed to squeeze in enough classes between games to earn a sheepskin.

Freshmen recruits Harold Jensen (6'4", 180 lbs.) and Connally Brown (6'7½", 195 lbs.) should ease the pain of losing such a talented trio, but the Cats will have their work cut out for them. Basketball Times has rated the 1983-84 Wildcat schedule as the eighth most difficult in the nation. Besides the grueling Big East matches, Nova will tangle with the traditional Big Five rivals, Notre Dame, and Arkansas. The only "breather" for the Cats will come against Loyola of Baltimore.

Speaking of the schedule, the Cats opening game will be against arch-rival St. Joseph's on November 30. Coach Massimino usually likes to open with an easy team for a tune-up but both the Big East and the Atlantic Ten Conference (St. Joe's league) want their teams to move toward an exclusively intra-conference schedule after January 1.

Cat fans won't have as many opportunities to see their beloved team on the tube this season due to the fact that WKBS (Channel 48) is now defunct. But, there is still a glimmer of hope for Sonny Hill fans as the Big Five is trying to put together a T.V. package for local stations. The Big Five will only be seen on national television four times this season, with all four games involving the Wildcats.

Ed Pinckney, Dwayne McClain, Frank Dobbs and Harold Pressley all kept their games sharp by playing ball over the summer.

Pinckney toiled for Uncle Sam as his United States squad placed second in the World University Games and another U.S. team which he was on won the gold medal at the Pan American Games.

McClain and Dobbs played for a Big East All-Star team in Europe. They averaged 13.0 and 8.6 points per game respectively.

Pressley spent his summer playing in the Sonny Hill League where he was named to the College League All-Star team.

Getting off the topic of hoop, Villanova won both the 1983 Men's and Women's Big East Commissioner's Trophies. The trophies are awarded to schools on the basis of standings in each of the Big East Championship sports.

Villanova has won the men's award in each of its three years in the conference. This was the first year that the conference has conducted a women's competition for the trophy.

Alcohol Policy Tightened Up

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

"The alcohol policy this year is the same basic policy we're always had," according to Dr. Richard Neville, the vice president for Student Life. "But we're changing it in that we're not going to allow exceptions to it."

In a letter distributed to the parents of students on Aug. 25, Neville cited "the necessity for the University to observe Pennsylvania Liquor Code . . . we can no longer be out of compliance with these laws."

Pennsylvania's Liquor Code, paraphrased in Villanova's Code of Student Conduct, prohibits the sale, possession, use or distribution of alcohol to anyone under twenty-one years of age.

According to the revised policy, as stated in the Blue Book, "under no condition are beer kegs of any type permitted in residence halls . . . an automatic fine of $75 will be assessed for the first offense."

"We used to allow different groups to have parties that were well supervised," Neville claimed, "but the Liquor Control Board (LCB) and the University's legal counsel advised us that we were in violation of the law."

Neville continued, "There was no other choice; we decided to stop it. It was a reluctant decision, but the only possible decision."

"It doesn't bother me too much," stated Erik Rex, a freshman resident of Stanford Hall. "There's a lot more to do than drink anyway, and it's still possible for someone to go out and drink if they want to."

"I'm a little perturbed about the whole thing," Pat Barry, a Sullivan Hall resident sophomore, said. "The University is just taking the easy way out by eliminating a problem, when they should find other ways to deal with it."

"It's just forcing people to go off campus, when there are many ways they could stay within the law," added Barry. "For instance, they could have a 'bring your own' party, and the LCB couldn't charge the school with wrong doing, only the individuals, and in a large group, they would probably be lenient."

Neville's letter informed parents that "I was visited once and called several times by the LCB warning me of impending visits and arrests by their agents for underage drinking and sale of alcohol.

"This is an insoluble problem, and our solution is not an ideal one," Neville added. "The majority of our residents, 85 percent, are under legal age.

"If we are able to reduce alcohol consumption on campus," claimed Neville, "it will add to the quality of life here. Drinking is almost always tied to vandalism, and there was more drinking on campus than I was comfortable with.

"Our motivation is not to stop drinking completely, just to stop our illegal contribution to it," Neville said. "I'd like to believe you don't need beer to socialize."

"Under no condition are beer kegs of any type permitted in residence halls. Violation will be processed through the University Judicial System and an automatic fine of $75 will be assessed for the first offense."

'82 Grads Successful in Job Market

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

Unlike most graduates facing his bleak employment period, ret Villanova alumni have been uccessful in locating a job.

A recent study completed by the areer Development Center on he 1982 graduates revealed that ore than 90 percent were emoyed full-time or attending grad- ate or professional schools.

Based on the survey's high reponse rate of 66 percent, the post raduation plans of 77 percent of he respondents indicated employment on a full-time basis and 16.5 ercent reported their enrollment n a graduate or professional proram. While 6.2 percent of the espondents fell in a category of underemployment, being employed but continuing to look, only 4 percent remain without finalized plans and 3.6 percent with "other" plans.

Considering the competitive job market and recessional economy, 1982 Villanova graduates also fared very well financially.

The engineering graduates appeared to have the most impressive salaries with 14 percent of those alumni with salaries ranging from $26,000 to $27,999. Sixty-two percent of the other engineering graduates have salaries ranging from $20,000 to $25,999. Sixty-two percent of the other engineering graduates have salaries ranging from $20,000 to $25,999.

For arts and science graduates, 64 percent have salaries from $8,000 to $15,999. Seventy-six percent of the commerce and finance alumni landed a job with an income ranging from $12,000 to $19,999.

"A majority of the graduates who responded noted that they were happy with their salaries," commented Robert Stokes, director of Career Development.

Almost 85 percent of those persons surveyed said their jobs were either directly or indirectly related to their majors. Predictably, this trend was more dominant in nursing with a response of 99 percent and engineering with 90 percent, but 88 percent of commerce and finance graduates and 69 percent of the liberal arts and science majors were also in fields somewhat related to their college major.

As a result of the dismal employment situation, companies using on-campus job recruitment have declined nationwide to 62 percent. "Villanova however has not felt this dramatic decline for two reasons," cited Stokes. "The academic reputation Villanova has enables us not to be dropped in the first round by on-campus recruiters. Secondly, Villanova has an ideal geographic location, being situated near a number of colleges. The companies can send an on-campus recruiter to the Philadelphia area and within a week be able to hold interviews at various respectable colleges.

"Companies are pretty cautious when recruiting," said Stokes, and while Villanova has suffered with the cancellations by various technical companies, there have been several non-technical companies in the accounting and marketing fields who have added Villanova to their on campus recruitment. In the spring of 1982, Villanova had 271 companies conducting on-campus interviews. By the spring of 1983, the number of companies sending recruiters fell to a low of 162.

Robert Stokes, director of career development.

The success in job search, however, is promising no matter what major, according to Stokes, "because the graduates did not rely on one job search method during their senior year."

Most of the graduates found personal contacts most valuable in securing their jobs, but on-campus interviews, mailing campaigns and want ads produced jobs, too.

Personal contacts were particularly noteworthy for 48 percent of the liberal arts and science graduates, while 37 percent of the commerce and finance grads found success through personal contacts. The engineering majors found the on-campus interviews essential in their job replacement just as 25 percent of the graduates from commerce and finance. Up to 20 percent of the nursing majors were able to rely on a telephone contact to land a job.

"Class members seemed anxious to find a job before graduation," according to Stokes. Almost half the respondents finalized their job plans during the months from March to June.

All Placement registrations will last for ninety minutes.

All sessions will be held in the Connelly Center Cinema.

A Villanovan's Job Market Outlook

Job Outlook for Future Grads Appears Bleak

A study of the long-range college market job conducted by Stanford University reports that the job outlook for college graduates through the year 1990 "appears bleak."

According to the study, there is a glut of college grads in several fields and soon, even high-demand majors like engineers and computer science graduates will be competing for fewer job openings.

Russel Romberger, author of the study, explains that "an increasing number (of college students) will be forced to accept jobs incommensurate with their level of training.

"Based on projections of low employment growth for the decade and the increasing number of people who will hold college degrees, I see a large number of college graduates who will be overtrained and not able to get upper-level jobs."

The study reports that one out of every four young workers in the labor force has a college degree. And by 1990, one out of three will be college graduates. Also the study indicates that the number of jobs which require a college education is holding steady, while the number of service and clerical jobs is expanding. Romberger claims that in the future many graduates, particularly those who aren't selective about their majors, will be forced into service and clerical jobs for which they are over-qualified.

College graduates currently earn an average of 65 percent more than those who went only as far as high school with their education, the study shows, and for those who find jobs, a college degree is still worth much more.

According to Romberger, "It'll be more important than ever to pick a major which is in high demand. A college degree by itself just won't mean much."

"I'm not discouraging people from getting a college degree. For students who do go on to college, they'll still have a better chance of getting a better, higher-level job. It's just that there is also a good chance they won't."

Unemployed Grads High

Unemployment for college-aged people last year was the worst in 30 years, a U.S. Department of Labor report says.

Some 924,000 college students aged 16 to 24 who wanted work couldn't find any in 1982, the Bureau of Labor Statistics says. The 11.7 percent unemployment rate was up from 1981's 10 percent.

The unemployment rate for all people in the 16 to 24 age bracket rose from 14.8 percent in 1981 to 18 percent in 1982, the bureau says.

In a written summary accompanying the report, the bureau observed that students normally suffer a higher unemployment rate than nonstudents of the same age, but that because "of the sluggish economy", nonstudents for the first time had a harder time landing a job.

Even among students, the unemployment rate was worse for minorities than for whites. Almost 37 percent of the nation's black students were out of work in 1982, up from 35 percent in 1981, the report found.

The Hispanic student unemployment rate hit 21.7 percent in 1982, up from 15.5 percent in 1981.

Alumni Find Jobs

...here the highest number of graduates were employed or attending graduate school, garnering 45 percent of the alumni. New York is the job location for 17 percent of the alumni and 14 percent have found employment in New Jersey.

Stokes feels the Career Development center was helpful to the class of 1982 because 73 percent of the graduates used the service during their senior year. Compared to the class of 1981, six percent more graduates are employed.

Fewer grads, however, from the class of '82 enrolled in graduate school.

Stokes gave several possibilities for the differences in the results of the study. "Pre-requisites for graduate school admissions, such as work experience for M.B.A. programs, may have discouraged potential applicants in addition to graduates who may have seen work experience, prior to graduate study, more valuable." Furthermore, Stokes added that a number of companies are willing to pay for graduate school after employment in their company, "which is an attractive alternative."

"Graduates used a variety of job search methods to locate employment in their preparation. The Career Development center has always emphasized that graduates should not rely upon one method to locate employment. It appears that this advice was taken by the Class of 1982," commented Stokes.

Although experts feel the economy appears to be recovering, according to Stokes, the upswing arrived too late to improve the employment situation for the graduates from the class of 1983.

To combat the oppressive employment rate, the Career Center initiated a 'job club' for those alumni who after graduation had still not landed a job. The group met during the past summer to continue giving assistance to graduates in a formal sense. "The 'ultimate purpose' is for the group to disband at the end of the summer because every one will have found a job," said Stokes. Success for the 1983 job club is evident. The group started with 15 to 20 alumni but has dwindled to only a few remaining graduates.

The publicity given for the new job club,initiated by the center,has brought the prospective employees to the attention of job recruiters "and in this way some graduates have found a job," said Stokes.

"The extended summer service will probably begin even before May to assist the 1984 graduates since the club was so successful," added Stokes.

Law School Appoints Dean

By PAULA SOLLAMI

Dr. John E. Murray, Jr. has been appointed dean of Villanova Law School. Murray's appointment by the Rev. John Driscoll follows the resignation last spring of Dr. J. Willard O'Brien.

Murray is currently dean of University of Pittsburgh Law School, a post he has held for the last six years. He will officially take office at Villanova on July 1, 1984. Dr. Gerald Abraham has been appointed acting dean. Abraham is currently the Law School's associate dean for academic affairs.

O'Brien resigned in order to head Villanova's new Institute on Law and Morality, which will study and formulate proposals concerned with the place of morality in the judiciary, the legal profession, and legal education.

Funding for the institute has been provided by the Connelly Foundation of Villanova.

Murray is a native of Philadelphia and a graduate of LaSalle College. He earned the juris doctor degree at Catholic University in 1958, and did his graduate studies at the University of Wisconsin.

A legal scholar with an excellent reputation, Murray has written a number of law school textbooks which are cited by many state and federal courts as well as by legal scholars. Murray was also editor for ten years of the Journal of Legal Education, the official publication of the Association of American Law Schools. He has also written articles for legal journals as a prominent spokesman for the legal profession.

Winds, Lightning Cut Power

By TIM GALLAGAN

Electrical power was disrupted in Stanford and Good Counsel halls for approximately two and a half hours on Sept. 12. The blackout was attributed to high winds and lightning from an electrical storm in the area Monday evening.

The electricity was reportedly out for about three minutes, came back on for a minute and then was out until shortly after 9 p.m. Power was disrupted for five minutes on the main campus, but Stanford and Good Counsel residents joined 50,000 other Philadelphia Electric customers who were without power for an extended period.

Director of Maintenance Thomas Trucks was notified of the problem at his home shortly after the power was disrupted. At this time, Philadelphia Electric estimated that service would not be restored until the following morning.

Trucks said that the power outage was not due to a problem at Villanova, but can be totally attributed to strong gusts of wind knocking down power lines. Trucks also reported no lightning or wind damage to the residence halls.

Trucks added that no damage to the construction site of the new residence halls occurred, and said that there will be a new wiring system for the Stanford and Good Counsel facilities which will be implemented when the new halls are wired.

According to Trucks, there will be two power cables leading into the area, so long-term disruption of power similar to the outage caused by the broken cable last semester will be less probable.

Residents of Stanford Hall were without heat, light, and hot water for 18 and a half hours earlier this year because of a power cable failure.

The outage, on Feb. 3, was the fourth such incident involving the power cables. The first was at the Connelly Center during its first six months of operation in 1980; the second occurred at Mendel Hall, and the third was in the maintenance building itself.

New Union Plans

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The Villanova Union has an "entirely new philosophy" for the 1983-84 school year. In spite of the reinforced alcohol policy, "activities planned are intended to be those which do not need alcohol to be successful," said Union President Tom Belmont.

The Union will offer "a more original program with a different twist," continued Belmont.

Events will be scheduled on a regular basis and will be more dependable. The plans include a series of dances and mini-concerts featuring local bands and shore bands.

The Union is gearing their activities to all Villanova students but expect to attract mostly freshmen and sophomores who live on campus. "On campus students should find our parties and concerts an attractive alternative to leaving campus for a good time," commented Belmont.

The Union is omitting previous activities such as major concerts from their agenda because the attendance was never high enough to cover the cost. Also, acoustics in the field house are not appropriate for a concert," added Belmont.

The annual Fall Festival, Spring Fever Week and Cruise to the Bahamas are all upcoming events to be continued by the Union.

The Union and Blue Key will also sponsor Senior Week activities as before.

Alcohol: No Choice — It's The Law

The lead article in this week's issue deals with the much-maligned, often-cursed Villanova alcohol policy. The article does not reveal any particular new information about the policy but instead, details a new enforcement of the past ambiguous rules.

The alcohol policy can be found on page 26 of the 1983-84 student handbook, "The Blue Book." This 106 word explanation of alcohol use on campus is easy to understand: if a student is under the age of twenty-one, he cannot consume alcoholic beverages on campus. Moreover, one cannot dispense or consume alcoholic beverages without permission.

Word comes from the vice president for student life that the policy will be enforced in a fashion more severe than ever before. This enforcement is a direct result of pressure put opon the University by the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board (LCB) and the University's legal counsel. The LCB made it clear last year that visits on campus could result in justifiable arrests for violations of the code. The Villanova lawyers have deemed that there is no protection for the University from holding legal liability. The legal drinking age in the state is 21. Villanova cannot change that. Nor can Villanova alter the drinking habits of students. Students, whether of legal age or not, go off campus in search of alcohol.

Drinking is an individual's choice. But drinking at Villanova is a controlled variable. Acting responsibly in making a choice gauges the maturity level of a student. Almost every year there is an accident involving a Villanova student and "alcohol." These stories are not pleasant to report. Yet, they happen. So what's the solution? Obviously, the state's laws will not be changed anytime in the near future. And Villanova will sensibly follow the state's alcohol mandates, or risk an embarrassing situation and punishment. Perhaps in the meantime, the University can devise some fun and games that can alleviate the tedious weekends and keep some students on campus. The ultimate responsibility for sensible drinking lies on the shoulders of the student who chooses to drink, legally or not. It is the student's responsibility to recognize that one does have a choice, and that this freedom of choice extends to every aspect of drinking. Responsibility equals maturity. It is one lesson that the University cannot teach nor enforce.

Maturity and Responsibility

Once again, it is time to retrieve that old, standard commentary on student responsibility from the archives, dust it off, and put it back into print. It is indeed unfortunate that this space must be designated to discuss such a mundane matter as student responsibility, especially when it could be used to make bold suggestions for the betterment of all humanity. Alas, maybe next week.

Quite succinctly, each and every student is expected to realize that he is ultimately responsible for his actions and whatever consequences his actions may have. Students are expected to judge matters in at least a remotely mature fashion and act accordingly.

The majority of Villanova undergrads, of course, do act maturely most of the time. There are times, however, when we slip into occasional yet detrimental lapses of immaturity that result in someone getting hurt or something getting defaced or damaged.

Now specifically, the University has spent an undisclosed, but obviously very substantial, amount of money to resurface and line the Lancaster Avenue parking lots. This is a capital improvement for the benefit of the entire University community.

Some select students, though, have taken it upon themselves to smashing bottles and the like on the newly paved surface, making it extremely difficult for the many commuters and off campus residents to navigate their vehicles, and transforming the lot into something resembling a waste dump.

The moral of the story is that those who accepted us into this University gave us credit for being somewhat mature and responsible. So let's do our best to try not to let them down, okay kids?

Dissenting Views on Mission Statement

To the Editor:

I must comment on the poor journalistic quality of your commentary "Mission Statement: Fact or Fiction." What point you were trying to make about discrimination with your facts was not at all clear to me. It was clear, though, that your understanding of administrative policy at Villanova went beyond fiction to senseless ignorance. The complexity of operating a large social organization, like Villanova, is far beyond your comprehension or mine and it is foolish "yellow journalism" to indite (sic) such an institution for discrimination without such understanding. If I may suggest, look to the national number of female Ph.D.s, number of tenured professors and open positions, yearly salary and the high quality of the current faculty to start an analysis of the causes of our 17% female faculty percentage. Consider limited financial aid, yearly tuition and housing, admission standards and the low national enrollment of minorities in college before drawing conclusions about discrimination in university policy. You seem to have many vague and ill-formed questions and no real answers. In the future, I hope this will not be the case because it misleads readers who expect your paper to be thorough and accurate.

Dan Carroll
Class of 1984

To the Editor:

I read with great interest your editorial of September 9 in which parts of the Mission Statement were questioned as to what the statement appeared to state compared to what really existed as fact at Villanova.

I was a member of the Planning Committee that spent nine months and over a dozen meetings assembling the thoughts tht make up the Mission Statement. John Deegan, O.S.A., then Vice President of Student Life at Villanova, headed this project. During the countless times of discussion, rediscussion, change and exchanges of thoughts, sentences, words, commas, periods, etc., a fairly comprehensive guide or Mission Statement was constructed. At the time, as an alumni representative, I was very careful to include thoughts and phrases which would reflect the alumni's deep interest, love and sincere caring for the University. The word "alumni" was included at least four times in the statement. The last meeting was in May and the completed and final version was placed in Father Deegan's care to have it typed and presented to the President of the University and then sent to the Board of Trustees. I felt my work and time was well spent. However, some eighteen months later when I first saw the official published copy, I was shocked to note that the word "alumni" had been expunged. According to the revised Mission Statement, no longer were the alumni a part of the University family.

My question is — can a document founded on deception be the benchmark for the ethics and philosophy of a Catholic University?

This, of course, was not the first time that the alumni have been shunted off and given a pittance recognition for their efforts. I sit and write this because after four or five years as a student you will be an alumnus for five or six decades. For many years, the alumni raised money directly for the school because the administrators did not wish to get involved. Then, ten years ago, the school directly

The Guidelines

A situation has arisen at Dartmouth College concerning a controversial article written last January in Dartmouth Review, an undergraduate-staffed weekly not affiliated with the college. A reporter for this newspaper wrote a critical analysis of a class taught by the chairman of the Dartmouth Music Department. The article attacked the teaching methods of the chairman and the lack of a serious attitude toward the class taken by both the professor and the students. Included in the article were student comments that reflected on the fact that the chairman was black. Charges of racism were immediately issued by the professor.

The chairman has filed a suit in U.S. District Court against the newspaper and the reporter for $600,000. The controversy has split the campus over the issue of free expression versus academic freedom, with each side soliciting contributions to fund the litigation.

The three-year old Review has built a reputation in a short time as the leader of several neo-conservative newspapers around the country. The paper has also been attacked by The Dartmouth, the 184-year old student daily. The college administration while it sent out a letter to all students and faculty deploring the Review's article, decided that the reporter, who gained admission to the class in question without the chairman's knowledge to write the critical report, had not actually broken any rules.

The issue has dissolved into a battle between those who accuse the chairman of teaching incompetence and those who label the paper as libelous and scandalous.

Such are the trials and tribulations of writing for and editing college-based publications. One must always walk a fine line between accurate, fair coverage and interpretation and libel. Unfortunately, there are individuals who attack any controversial article as libelous and seek to punish those who produced the work. There are certain issues that simply raise the ire of a few individuals who feel that academics and college journalism cannot be combined.

All publications should attempt to keep the community well informed with regard to current academic, social, athletic, cultural and extra-curricular activities that influence members of the community and should also voice opinion on university issues. The Villanovan follows this guideline and we feel that the Dartmouth Review also followed these guidelines in its coverage.

Villanova Blocks Liquor License

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

A liquor license for Campus Corner, located next to Villanova University on Lancaster Avenue, was denied approval in court on account of a protest by a Villanova University committee with information concerning the "tremendous" drinking problem on campus.

The Malt and Brewed Beverage retail dispenser license Campus Corner applied for, allowing only the sale of beer, met its only opposition from the University committee consisting of five representatives.

"The Dean of Residence Life (Director of Residence Life), a Villanova University Guard, Dean of the Night School (Dean of University College), a Resident Assistant, and a priest all testified of a tremendous drinking problem," according to store owner Eileen Gerson. "They felt that beer sold so close to campus would only make the problem worse.

"I do not agree with the University's protest," added Gerson, "but I can understand their position. I felt the University was being super cautious."

Gerson insisted that she would not have sold to minors but said she "could not get that idea through to Villanova representatives.

"Furthermore, the main reason I wanted to be able to sell beer is for the truckers and construction workers who frequent my store," said Gerson.

"I get a nice lunch time crowd in here and it would have been nice for them to have a beer with their meal," Gerson continued.

The Liquor Control Board voted in favor of Villanova University's protest at the May hearing despite the high acceptance of the idea of the sale of beer at Campus Corner by the surrounding community.

Residents in the area sent a petition to Harrisburg in favor of the liquor license, and businesses in the area were also in favor of the sale of liquor since the additional service may bring in more consumers to the area. Gerson reported that no one from these two groups came to the hearing to object.

An investigation, conducted on all liquor license applicants, found Campus Corner to be "a good clean business." The process includes a lawyer's thorough investigation of the individual owner's financial funds and sources of income. The investigation also deals with the past personal history of the applicant. In addition, employees are interviewed and investigated.

The Campus Corner is also in good standing with the police," added Gerson. The chief of Radnor Township Police, whom Gerson contacted at the beginning of the application procedure, had no objection to the sale of beer at her store.

The Jan. 28, 1983 issue of the Villanovan quoted Detective R.E. Adams of the Radnor Township Police Department, who said, "We do not want the license to be approved and I do not think the public will, either."

Gerson was not disappointed in the decision since "the first concern we have at Campus Corner is the food sales. The sale of beer may have caused a tremendous problem for me by putting me in a position where I could not and would not sell to minors who are regulars here. They, in turn, may have gotten upset with my choice of refraining from selling to them.

"They may have expected me to sell to them because they are regular customers," Gerson added.

In the open market for a liquor license, Gerson was able to find a business, which asked to remain anonymous, selling their license, and Gerson put a deposit on it. Gerson lost no money in the process, however because the deposit was made pending approval.

"I plan to invest the money elsewhere in another business and will do just as well, if not better, anyway," said Gerson.

Campus Corner had a liquor license application request posted in the window last Dec. 29, 1982. The notice stated Gerson's request for an approval by the LCB for a Malt and Brewed Beverage retail dispenser license.

The application request stated that the notice is to be continuously posted during the period the application is pending in a conspicuous place.

Any public protest, like that by Villanova, is required by the notice to be from one who resides within a radius of 500 feet of the premises proposed to be licensed.

As Villanova did, a protest is to be written directly to the Pennsylvania LCB, and the protest is not considered valid unless the protestant appears and testifies at a determined hearing date.

College Guide Changes Format

The college guidebook that drew the wrath of administrators across the country a year and a half ago has just released its second edition, but with a new name and "a lot of fine tuning" designed to pacify many of its critics.

Though it quickly achieved sales success, the New York Times Selective Guide To Colleges drove some administrators to distraction when it first appeared in February 1982 with a five-star system that rated schools as if they were hotels or restaurants.

Although Villanova is not listed in the guide, neighboring schools including Bryn Mawr College, Haverford College, Temple University, Drexel University and the University of Pennsylvania, are all written up in the guide.

What probably irritated them most were the descriptions of the social and academic climates of 265 of the nation's "best and most interesting" four-year schools.

Of the University of Rhode Island, for instance, the book quipped: "As long as you don't ask too much of URI, it won't ask too much of you."

The guide characterized Marquette as a campus where "the ROTC types coexist well with the holdovers from the sixties."

And the University of Tulsa, it commented, is alright, "but unless you're intent on making big bucks in oil, the academic life will be better somewhere else."

Outraged administrators of the schools receiving such reviews mounted a quick counterattack on Edward Fiske, the paper's education editor and editor of the guide, who assembled the material published under the Times Books name.

They argued — in letters, interviews and, in at least one instance, a personal confrontation in Fiske's office — that the New York Times imprimatur lent a suggestion of objectivity to what was actually subjective material.

Fiske based his reviews of the schools on responses to questionnaires he sent students on each of the campuses.

In spite of the controversy — or perhaps because of it — more than 80,000 copies of the books were sold.

Times Books officials say they hope to match that record with the second edition.

To help get there, Fiske has tried to blunt the controversy before the book's official September 28ths publication date by altering his grading system and treading a little more softly on the reputations of the schools that complained loudly in 1982.

Moreover, the new edition — dubbed The Selective Guide to Colleges — dropped all references to the Times in its title.

The star rating system has been altered, notes Times Books publicist Sandy Brawarsky, "to discourage people from numerically rating schools on the basis of how many stars they got in a certain area."

The first edition awarded schools up to five stars in each of three categories: academic life, social life and overall campus quality.

Some schools, Brawarsky says, added up their stars and tried to market themselves to prospective students as 14- or 12-star schools, "which was really a misrepresentation of the original ranking system."

In the new edition, Fiske uses stars to rate academics, telephone symbols to rank social life, and asterisks to note quality of life.

Among the less visible changes, though, are the absences of four schools who were in the first edition.

The University of Kentucky, upset over its low ranking in the book's first run, was mysteriously left out of the second printing of the first edition.

Fiske explains that after "an awful lot of discussion on that school, we decided to drop it altogether."

Missing from the second edition are the University of Tulsa, Manhattan College and Barat College in Illinois.

"The three schools that were dropped just didn't meet Mr. Fiske's criteria," Brawarsky says. "He decided that other schools were more important."

Perhaps coincidentally, Tulsa University Relations Director Koy Floyd was also the one administrator who flew to New York to confront Fiske personally over the "sarcastic, flippant" review he gave the school in the first edition.

Fiske also gave some schools better ratings this time around.

The academic ratings for the universities of Nebraska and Oklahoma have risen from one star to three.

Duke, Rice, Reed and Carleton College all got five-star academic ratings in the new book, the highest possible.

Fiske also added 17 schools to the second edition.

Brawarsky hopes the changes and additions will make the new book "a little better received," though she expects some backlash from unfavorably-reviewed schools.

Indeed, University of Georgia Public Relations Director Barry Wood says he'll be "very interested to compare the new entry for Georgia with the previous one" when the book comes out.

It couldn't get much worse. In the first edition, Fiske wrote Georgia was attended by "small-town rednecks and big-city sophisticates" who spent most of their time running around and chanting "How 'bout them dawgs!"

The 265 colleges and universities singles out from the nearly 2,000 four-year educational institutions in the United States are selected upon several broad principles stated in the introduction of the guide.

On the term of academic quality, the guide categorized only 175 colleges and universities as "selective."

An effort was made to achieve geographic diversity, a balance of public and private shcools, and other types of diversities, such as single-sex as well as coeducational institutions in selecting which colleges and universities would best benefit the college-bound student.

The guide claims to be "selective." According to the editor, "we have tried not to cover all colleges and universities. Rather, we have taken 265 of the best and most interesting four-year institutions in the country, the ones that students in a buyer's market should know about, and written essays of 600 to 2,000 words about them."

took over the raising of funds from the alumni. They also took over the alumni budget and when the alumni no longer had funds, the administration closed the alumni paper and took away the alumni house. The philosophy of the administration appears to be, send me your money and children but not your thoughts or ideas and don't ever criticize.

The administration continues to make further decisions which have alienated more and more alumni. Now the students are beginning to understand what the fundamental problems are. The real and actual decisions have very little to do with the Mission Statement, Christian love or mutual respect among the different parts of the community.

I know that the greatest part of Villanova now is the 40,000 alumni plus the 6,500 day students, the 4,000 night students and the thousands of Villanovans who never went to Villanova, but feel its aura by associating with Villanova people. You, the students, and we, the alumni, are Villanova.

Congrats

To the Editor:

Congratulations to the Orientation Committee for all their generous work this year for the incoming freshmen. I would especially like to commend them for the "Villanova Past and Present" Display in the Art Gallery.

I read about it in the Inquirer on Sept. 6, which said it would be there until Sept. 9. Consequently, on Sept. 7, I took a walk over to see it. It was tremendous. There is no doubt in my mind that this took a great deal of digging, collecting, mounting, arranging. It gave the history of the University from the 1840's.

Since the week of Sept. 6 was such a busy one for returning faculty and upperclassmen, I feel many may have missed the display. I would like to suggest that it would be put up again so that all could enjoy it. Again Congratulations to all connected with the Orientation Program.

Stolen Bike

To The Editor:

Last week, a visiting student from Haverford College made the mistake of trustingly leaving his bike unlocked for a few minutes inside the doors of Villanova's Campus Ministry, believing that with other students all around, it would be safe. But, seconds later, the bike was gone and no one had witnessed its theft.

As a graduate of Villanova, I found myself ashamed and embarrassed. This was a student whose sole source of transportation home, to Paoli, to work and to school was that bike.

I hope that if anyone knows anything further on this subject that could lend to its return, that they will share their information with campus ministry where such information would be passed on.

Insult

To The Editor:

As you may know, Villanova is a Catholic institution whose goal is to educate in a Christian environment. Page two of last week's Villanovan (Sept.9) tarnishes that environment. In FYI, you informed us about an organization called Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania. Planned Parenthood is offering a course "to counsel pregnant patients about all their pregnancy options." As far as I know, there are only two so-called "pregnancy options": allowing human life to be born or terminating the life of that human being — abortion. Planned Parenthood advises pregnant women on the pros and cons of murdering the unborn. That organization's information does not belong in the "newspaper of record for Villanova University."

I resent the fact that something blatantly immoral and unethical is being promoted in our Catholic University newspaper, which, for the most part, is funded by the students. If you look at what is printed on the same page as the Planned Parenthood information, you will see what hypocrisy exists there. Information about a Bible study, a HEC retreat, Big Brothers/Sisters, a prayer meeting, Villanovans For Life, and even advanced life-saving appear right along with Planned Parenthood. Planned Parenthood certainly does not support belief in the Bible, life, or lifesaving for that matter. On the contrary, it supports the elimination of precious life.

FYI is supposed to provide information related to the University, not to abortion counseling. An apology is in order to the people who read and support the Villanovan.

Editor's reply:

The Villanovan regrets the inclusion in the FYI section of the Sept.9 issue an announcement concerning Planned Parenthood. It was an editorial oversight.

Concerning the statement that the newspaper is funded by students: Each activity and organization requests a monetary allocation that is approved by a University budget committee. These requests are later submitted to the University. Any question of funding should be referred to the Vice-President of Financial Affairs. The allocation from the University covers the basic needs and requests from each group. However, it should be noted that almost all organizations do outside fundraising; the Villanovan is no exception. This outside solicitation of funds is necessary for obvious reasons. For your interest: last year we generated through advertising twice the amount of income that was University-allocated.

Say "No" to Regency

To the Editor:

To Villanova students:

If you are looking for a place to live as I was two months ago, I'd like to give you some strong advice. I moved here from New Jersey to attend graduate school and being relatively blind to the off-campus housing situation, I fell into a real trap. After looking for a number of weeks, I decided upon the Regency Apartments in St. Davids. What a mistake!

The people who own and run this apartment are extremely biassed and unprofessional. The day after I moved in, which was a Sunday, the owner, Mike Civatella, came to my apartment and actually had the audacity to lecture me — no welcome mat here. He distastefully commented on my male company, who happened to be my brother and other relatives helping me move and warned me to be clean and neat, and ignored the problems I presented to him concerning the apartment. On the day I moved in, which was a mutually-agreed upon date, the apartment was nowhere near ready for inhabitation. The people who lived in it before had just moved out the previous day! The apartment had not been cleaned, nor painted; it was roach-infested, and many items were broken. I had little choice, though, but to move in as my plans incorporated this as my new place of residence so that I did not renew my previous lease which was ending.

During my stay at the Regency, things did not get better. The apartment was never cleaned except by me. None of the broken items were fixed, and as far as painting, only one wall in the master bedroom and one side of the kitchen door was painted. In addition, I frequently came home to find notes placed on my bookcase. They had absolutely no right to enter my apartment; simply slipping the note under the door would have been quite sufficient.

I would like to further add the difficulty I am running into trying to get my security deposit back after giving a full 30-day notice of my leave (a lease was never presented to me the whole time I was there). I was therefore not breaking any lease and left the apartment in better condition than when I entered it; so my deposit should not be withheld. Regardless, though, the sum of $250 is being kept from me. Unfortunately, this sum is not great enough to bring to court as I would end up paying for a lawyer.

Besides being unprofessional, these people are also biased. I was paying $600 for a two bedroom apartment and found a couple of unfortunate male students in the same building who were paying $800 for the same two bedrooms! Students or not, the prices should not vary.

I hope you will take my warning seriously as I would not wish this aggravation on anyone.

Get down to business faster. With the BA-35.

If there's one thing business students have always needed, this is it: an affordable, business-oriented calculator. The Texas Instruments BA-35, the Student Business Analyst.

Its built-in business formulas let you perform complicated finance, accounting and statistical functions – the ones that usually require a lot of time and a stack of reference books, like present and future value calculations, amortizations and balloon payments.

The BA-35 means you spend less time calculating, and more time learning. One keystroke takes the place of many.

The calculator is just part of the package. You also get a book that follows most business courses: the Business Analyst Guidebook. Business professors helped us write it, to help you get the most out of calculator and classroom.

A powerful combination. Think business. With the BA-35 Student Business Analyst.

The Hamptons: Hotspot or Hoax?

By PETER BERKERY

Every student should spend a summer in The Hamptons as part of their "educational process". The lessons to be learned there are tough and require a good deal of insight, but they can prove to be invaluable to those who are able to see through all the pretensions and all the charades, and can take a good hard look at reality. But step lightly, the temptations are many and the impulse to get swallowed up by the ebb and flow of the social life and become just another "Hamptonite" is a great one indeed.

For those unaware, The Hamptons is a highly exclusive summer resort area located on the eastern end of Long Island. Its proximity to New York City makes it a favorite haunt for the "beautiful people" - the fabulously wealthy social elite of our country and of the world. Anyone who is anyone has a house in The Hamptons. These people are the epitome of the American Dream. They not only have the house and the car, but they have two or three houses, a Porsche and a Mercedes. Not only do they have "the look," they define what the look is.

Newcomers to The Hamptons are often in awe of all the glitter and the glamour. They are easily fooled by the facade the rich work so hard to put up. College students from all over the country come to work and "party" in The Hamptons, to rub elbows with the beautiful people and impress their friends. If only they'd stop rubbing elbows and start looking into the eyes, maybe they'd learn. I've lived in The Hamptons all my life (I'm what city people call a native) and the more I'm exposed to, the harder it is to be dece ved.

For the past two summers, I've had the wonderful opportunity to work at a resort hotel right on the beach in The Hamptons. It's fascinating working in a hotel because it allows one to frequently catch the rich and powerful in unguarded moments. Like the time I knocked on Room 101's door and the lady who answered was in tears. She explained to me that her dog of 17 years was sick and she thought he may be dying. She had made a ramp for the dog so he could climb up on it and sleep on the bed, and her $250 a night room smelled not at all unlike a kennel. Her husband is a private investor in New York who in six months last year made over a million dollars profit on the stock exchange. This impressive statistic didn't seem to comfort the lady at the time.

One of the more lucrative and exciting jobs in the hotel is parking cars (valet). Valets actually get paid to drive some of the best made cars in the world. People often walk down the steps and say in their most arrogant voice, "Mine's the Mercedes", without realizing that almost every car is either a Mercedes, a Cadillac, or a Jaguar. One of the guests in pointing out his keys said, "They're the ones with the Rolls Royce key chain . . . I have high hopes." High hopes; he already owned a Mercedes convertible and a Porsche 930 Turbo — the fastest sports car ever made. How much higher can one's hopes go? Suppose he did have a Rolls Royce, would he be satisfied? I've driven a Rolls Royce before; beautiful machine but it really doesn't seem to be worth all the money. Still, it does look pretty impressive on one's driveway. Impressive, that's it, who you can impress and how much you can impress them; that's the name of the game.

This is not to say that all of the rich are miserable. Some are happy people, but their happiness has little to do with their wealth. The miserable ones are those who after all the houses are bought, after all the cars are paid off, after all the latest trends in fashion are readily purchased, are left alone with themselves. Yet, they don't like themselves and they're too vain and proud to do anything about it. Here's where alcohol, drugs and sex come into play.

Of course, almost 2000 years ago someone offered a better solution, but some just won't listen. The American Dream — for far too many the American Dream turns out to be just another nightmare. Dream your own dreams.

Sunshine Helps The Needy

By CATHERINE GROODY

Project Sunshine is a community service program through the Social Action Office that offers Villanova students the opportunity to volunteer their time and talents at local needy agencies. This program not only sponsors Villanova's annual Sunshine Day but also sends volunteers to area nursing homes, hospitals and rehabilitation centers.

In the past, volunteers have gone to places like St. Edmund's Home for Crippled Children, Devereux, Eagleville Hospital, Overbrook School for the Blind, The Pathway School and Haverford State Hospital. Depending on the institution, students are free to do a variety of activities such as swimming with the patients, basketball, aerobics, tutoring, or simply talking with them.

Project Sunshine is organized through the Service Coordinator, Sister Therese. She, along with five VU students, have been working to organize this year's events. The Special Projects Coordinator is junior, Jim Condolff. Condolff has previously volunteered at places like Devereux, St. Edmund's Home, and the Dunwoody Nursing Home. He is an active brother in the service fraternity, Alpha Phi Omega, where he organized most of their volunteer activities. His assistant is junior, Jennifer Wilson. Wilson has visited several local institutions as well as visited nursing homes with her sorority. Cathy Groody also participated in last year's Sunshine Day. Groody is this year's Publicity Coordinator for Project Sunshine. Groody volunteered at Rosemont Presbyterian Village and Devereux as well as participated in the 1982 and 1983 Sunshine Day. This year's recruiting director is Beth Bodnar. Bodnar has also volunteered at Devereux, as well as participated in last year's Sunshine Day. Her assistant is Alice Linden, who was an active volunteer at St. Edmund's Home for Crippled Children where she had the opportunity to swim with the students.

Chinese Culture Health Exchange

Kem Louie and Anna Schmidt, two faculty members of the College of Nursing recently participated in the Sino-American Clinical Study Tour of China and Hong Kong this summer. The purpose was to compare the different health care systems and the various approaches to patient care. The travel group, led by Eileen Jacobi and Helen Hanson was composed of nursing educators with a variety of clinical backgrounds from across the country. The diversity of the group created an enriching learning experience for the participants. Seminars were held at the end of the day to discuss thoughts and feelings concerning the educational preparation of nurses, methods of health care delivery, specific interventions as well as professional relations with other health care providers. Louie also presented a paper on research in nursing at one of the seminars.

Medical schools, nursing schools and hospitals in Shanghai, Peking, Canton and Hong Kong were visited. Many of the Chinese staff spoke some English and interpreters were readily available for the many questions and answers from American and Chinese nurses. Tours of the hospital facilities proved valuable especially in relation to the differing values and attitudes of the health care providers and patients. An example,as observed by the visitors, was the confidentiality of patients or families was not an issue within the hospital. American nurses were allowed to freely take pictures of the hospital wards and the patients being treated.

The professors were surprised by a meeting with Sister Kenny, who was a 1969 graduate of the College of Nursing here at Villanova. Currently, she is the Director of Nursing at the Hospital of Maryknolls in Hong Kong. She gave Schmidt copies of Fr. McFadden's book, "The Dignity of Life — Moral Values in a Changing Society" (1978) which was translated into Chinese by John Wu, Bishop of Hong Kong. Kenny has attempted to have the book incorporated into the nursing and medical curriculum as part of the ethics course.

The preceding article was written by Kem Louie and Anna Schmidt and edited by the Villanovan.

Villanova University

By BARBARA HARNN

Tonight in the Connelly Center, Villanova will be hosting a very special guest, the Rev. Henri Nouwen, O.S.A., well-known author and lecturer. Nouwen's writings, in such books as Intimacy, The Wounded Healer, and In Memoriam, have deeply touched the lives of many who have read them. His long teaching career includes faculty appointments at the University of Notre Dame and, more recently, Yale Divinity School.

Nouwen is dedicating his time this fall to speak to audiences throughout the United States about the conditions he found in Nicaragua.

"Having been for some time in Nicaragua, I feel a deep and painful urge to cry out to all who can hear me: please allow this country to live and be a sign of hope! As I write, there are constant reports of border attacks by armies organized and supported by the United States, attempting to overthrow the Sandinista government and deny this nation its hard-won revolution. Every day more Nicaraguans die and the chances for peace in the region diminish," said Nouwen.

"Four years ago, this country was still being terrorized by the dictator Anastasio Somoza and his National Guard. Not only did the people suffer the constant fear of murder, torture and imprisonment, they experienced as well the horrendous effects of poverty, malnutrition and disease. The misery and oppression of the poor majority gave rise to an atmosphere of doom and fatality. The people had no control whatsoever over their destinies," Nouwen continued.

"Today the picture is radically different. There is a spirit of confidence and hope in the people. There is a new faith that things can be different and that even the poorest have a contribution to make in the process of building a new society. The overall sense of fear has been replaced by a joyful atmosphere. Tens of thousands of men and women have learned how to read and write. Once-crippling diseases are being controlled. Of all the Latin American countries I have lived in, only Nicaragua offers such a deep sign of hope. It is the hope of a new society in which the people themselves are the main architects. It is the hope, in a continent long dominated by foreign powers, of a new society free to chart an independent course," Nouwen reports.

After a six-month stay in Latin America last year, Nouwen decided to start a long-term ministry in Peru. On his way to that country, however, he was strongly urged to spend a least a few days in Nicaragua to come to a better understanding of the challenge that the country presents. Against his own expectations and plans, he stayed for four weeks and was so deeply affected by what he saw and heard that he felt a responsibility to return to the United States to share his experiences with the Christian community.

We urge you to attend this important talk tonight at 8 o'clock in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center.

Allen's 'Zelig' a Stellar Achievement

By KATHLEEN PETERS

Woody Allen's latest effort is the film "Zelig," a witty and creative comedy on the life of Leonard Zelig. Zelig, as portrayed by Allen, is a psychological phenomena, a human chameleon that changes himself to suit his environment.

A man without any personality of his own, Zelig is constantly finding needs to change. His psychiatrist, Eudora Fletcher (Mia Farrow), once described him as the "ultimate conformist." Zelig is able to transform himself in every way: his social class, his speaking voice, language, his culture and features. Zelig is a doctor amongst doctors, a black man amongst blacks and a man amongst men.

Allen has written a delightful story that is unique and punctuated with his keen wit. Besides writing "Zelig," Allen has also once again directed the film. It's not a typical film in any sense, and one can never guess what will happen next. As usual, Allen gives us the unorthodox. He doesn't depend or worry about mass appeal, which is why this film is so original.

There are numerous scenes throughout "Zelig" that are memorable. One comes toward the end of the film when Zelig has finally been cured of his psychological disorder. But pressures arise, people appear from all over, suing the once chameleon for crimes he committed during his various metamorphoses. On the day he is to be sentenced,(and under the emotional stress of bad press), he suffers a relapse and disappears. His psychiatrist, who is also his lover, searches the world to find him. When she does eventually locate him, he is a high ranking official with the Nazi Party. Her opportunity to reach him comes on the occasion of one of Adolf Hitler's speeches to the people. There on the platform with Hitler, amongst others, is Zelig. Fletcher spots him, and (to cause him to remember who he is), waves to him. During the middle of Hitler's speech, he waves back, now confused as to which role he is in. The effect of Hitler's speech is ruined. A commotion ensues, but this reviewer will not reveal the film's ending.

Another scene worth mentioning comes earlier in the film. It is one of particular insight, in which Dr. Fletcher first attempts to have Zelig see himself in his chameleon state. Suddenly, Zelig starts conversing with Fletcher as if he too were a doctor. Fletcher attempts to get Zelig to question who he is by acting as if she too were a chameleon. the only difference is that Fletcher does know who she really is.

Artistically, Allen has developed a fine story that is well-paced and does not plod along. The technical aspects are simply superb. The photography in "Zelig" is truly stunning and one of the unique aspects of the film. It is shot primarily in the traditional black and white of years gone by. Interestingly enough, the contemporary interviews done in color complement and transcend those shot in black and white. The actual footage and photography is used in some capacity to create the blended modern film that we see on the screen. Allen uses a time-gap between future and present by the contrasting of color for contemporary interviews that allow characters to speak from a futuristic vantage point of the past. Thus, from the very beginning, the film lapses to its "present" time in the late '20 s-early '30 s; Leonard Zelig's present and our past.

One area that has always been Allen's forte is his screenwriting. Each situation is well developed and there is not a flat character or meaningless dialogue exchange in the entire film. As for the acting in "Zelig," both Allen and Farrow are exceptionally good. Allen has come a long way as an actor since he starred in "Bananas." Ironically, it is in Zelig that Allen solidifies his identity as an actor. The narrative throughout the film is another finely implemented device, used to set the tone of film. Also,its humorous quality injects the film with its energy and ingenuity.

If it can be said that Woody Allen had a theme in mind when he made "Zelig," it is obviously identity. On the surface we know this from watching Leonard Zelig constantly change. At one instance in the film, Zelig gives a speech to a college class and advises them to just 'be yourself." If one chooses to dig deeper, "Zelig" is a film that has Allen himself searching for his own identity. Over the past few years he has been criticized for movies he has been making such as "A Midsummer Night's Sex Comedy." People want Allen to make films such as "Sleeper" and not "Interiors." But Allen, like Zelig, is a chameleon. His creativity stems from his constant changing.

'Zelig" is a film that one just can't describe without using an abundance of adjectives and accolades. It's a movie put together masterfully, while its concept is sheer genius. But then Allen has always been ahead of his time. Although not on the same level as "Zelig," "What's Up TigerLily?" (in which Allen dubs a Japanese spy movie, turning it into a comedy) was a glimpse of the genius that Allen possesses. He has a knack for taking the complex, expressing it simplistically, and at the same time, sounding profound.

"Zelig" is a film that truly merits the label of "masterpiece." As for Allen, who never ceases to amaze, our hats are off to you.

It's not a typical film in any sense, and one can never guess what will happen.

A Question of Credibility

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

Two books that have been on many best seller lists this summer are "Loving John" by May Pang and 'Out On A Limb" by Shirley MacLaine. The former is another in a long line of "kiss and tell" books that have appeared in recent years. The John she refers to is, of course, the late John Lennon. Before even reading this book, one feels cynical about the author's reason for writing it and what purpose it will serve.

In this case, the author Pang was Lennon's mistress during the much documented and now tired turmoil that occurred between Lennon and wife Yoko Ono. Pang discusses how she went from a gopher in the business office of a record company to being the personal secretary of John and Yoko. Exciting stuff, heh? Well, it gets even better. Pang refutes that Lennon was ever a house husband and that Ono was a devious woman with spiritual powers. It was Ono herself who arranged for Lennon and Pang to spend time and live together for awhile. Also documented in this "enlightening" book are the wild parties that Lennon had when cutting an album and Pang's "big" responsibility of actually carrying THE guitar of a Beatle. What else could one want out of life, sportsfans

After all is said and done, what we have here is another cheap shot at someone who is not around to defend himself. When recently asked why she had written this book, Pang responded "The truth had to be told." One has to respond to Pang with — why and who cares?

One would hope that most people would react negatively to trash su ' as this. Whether the material contained inside the book is true or not is irrelevant.

The bottom line is that John Lennon's memory and music should not be tainted by exposes and "true" stories written by hack writers. If you liked Lennon's music, fine, he owes his fans nothing else. Shame on you, May Pang. "Loving John?" The title of your book should have been "Exploiting John."

While Shirley MacLaine's book "Out On A Limb" can not really be labeled as exploitation, one becomes puzzled as to what is written and trying to be said. MacLaine herself says this book is about "a quest for myself — a quest which took me on a long journey that was gradually revealing and at all times amazing."

Amazing is not quite the word to describe this book. The word is more like unbelievable. Shirley MacLaine more than goes "Out On A Limb." She hangs herself. The book is a hodgepodge of "deep thoughts and philosophies that MacLaine holds about life and love. She also speaks of reincarnation and even talks about one time living in Atlantis! Then, just to make things a bit more interesting, MacLaine talks of an affair that she had with a member of the British Parliament.

"Out On A Limb" is analogous to someone who stops smoking and then wants everyone else to quit also. MacLaine wonders whether her daughter might have been her mother in another life.

ELO's Message is No Secret

By BILL SANTOS

"Secret Messages" the Electric Light Orchestra's latest album is in the same mold of past lp s — meaning romantic, pop lyricism and intricate orchestration. The material is crisp and for the most part, well written, with the title track and "Rock and Roll Is King" being the strongest song of what is a fine album.

The lp begins with synthesizers laced with "secret" backward messages (clever huh?). The energetic title track contains interesting chord progressions and excellent harmonies, which Richard Tandy enhances with his pretty organ playing. The song is quite catchy, while the lyrics are those of a romantic: "where words cascade/like rainbows tumbling from the sky." The record is replete with references to the classic "Johnny B. Goode." The violin solo by Mik Kaminski puts the ELO signature on it.

Overall, the album is in the mold of past ELO works. "Secret Messages" should be received more favorably than their last album, "Time." The album itself conveys a message, through no secret. In the background are pictures of nuclear waste, depicting the pestilence that is destined to be the future.

The midground pictures the band in the window of an old building, the present. In the immediate foreground are reproductions of various art forms depicting the beauty of the past (Venus di Milo), or how it used to be.

The past, present and future are locked into one picture; and they are closer than one thinks.

Eat, Drink, Save Your Money

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

At The Ground Round, the name of the game is fun. As soon as you sit down a waitress brings over a basket of fresh popcorn to munch on. Ingenious in its own right, since you are now ready to have drink due to the salt.

The atmosphere is very comfortable, casual not sloppy. Most of the people appeared to be professionals with the age ranging from 18-35. Also a lot of fun is the old-time movies that are shown nightly, not to mention the cartoons of such favorites as Bugs Bunny and Mighty Mouse.

If you dine later in the evening, there is usually a band performing, playing primarily popular music and folk. The band admirably played covers of songs by artists such as Neil Young, Bob Dylan, Jackson Browne and Credence Clearwater Revival.

While the food is not fancy, there is a wide variety to choose from. For the deli fanatic there is roast beef, pastrami, corned beef, and ham. If one is a seafood lover, there is shrimp, scallops, and fillet dishes to tempt your palate.

There is also the standard meat dishes. Also, at The Ground Round, the vegetarian is not left out in the cold. Offered are dishes such as breaded and fried vegetables and also zucchini sticks.

My companion chose the roast beef bar-b-que, which is basically roast beef served on a toasted roll. The platter comes with french fries. The Ground Round is quite generous in its servings; and the fries were of the steak variety, crunchy and big.

I ordered the onion soup which was served in a crock and had cheese melted on top. The soup had slices of onions and also contained spicy croutons.

Next we ordered a vegetable dish which was parmesan flavored zucchini sticks. Chewy mushrooms help to liven up this dish.

Finally, we ordered a reuben sandwich. For those not familiar with a reuben, it is corned beef, swiss cheese, Russian dressing and sauerkraut on rye bread. The key to this sandwich (as The Ground Round apparently knew) is the dressing. The idea is to give the sandwich an added flavor without overwhelming the other components. The Ground Round's Reuben would make any New York deli-owner proud.

While we were too full to eat dessert, The Ground Round offers carrot cake, ice cream, and N.Y. Style cheesecake.

As far as price is concerned, The Ground Round is moderately priced. Main dishes usually range from $3-$6. There are a chain of Ground Round Restaurants in the area including King of Prussia. This particular one was located in West Chester. The Ground Round is open daily from 11 a.m. till (as the owner of the Ground Round so poetically said) "whenever everyone leaves."

Overall, this is an odd, and even at times bizarre book. One has to laugh as MacLaine preaches about her "out of body" experiences.

The only thing MacLaine forgets to write about is what she was taking when she wrote this book. Save $15.99 and ask any Valley Girl about the meaning of life. It's cheaper.

Sugarman has a Key That Opens the Doors

By JOHN F. LYNCH

The Doors: The Illustrated History by Danny Sugarman is a combination of articles and pictures which cover the talented and bizarre career of this legendary band. The book begins by giving a background on how the band began in California in the mid '60s and lists the personal achievements of each band member.

From here, the reader is barraged with photographs of the band, and in particular, lead singer Jim Morrison. Many of the shots of Morrison are of him, shirtless, trying to seduce the camera. These photographs were taken in the early part of his career with The Doors, before he began to abuse his body with alcohol and drugs.

The articles which appear in the book are from many different types of publications. From album reviews written in the Village Voice all the way to an obituary written about Morrison's death, which appeared in Time magazine, the book covers it all.

What makes this book different from previous works concerning the band is Sugarman's objectivity and thoroughness. At no time while reading The Doors: The Illustrated History does one feel that it is one-sided and bias in favor of the band. The reason for this is that many of the articles from newspapers and magazines that were used were actually reported, not just written for this particular book.

The most effective message that the book conveys is how Morrison really did have problems with alcohol and drugs. Through words and pictures, the reader, page by page, can see how Morrison degenerated from a sex symbol to a fat and messy state. The book is important to anyone who is interested in The Doors because one is allowed to read and see, why and where Morrison went wrong. One can only wonder how a man who had so much talent could throw it away so aimlessly.

At $14.95 a copy, The Doors: The Illustrated History is truly a worthwhile investment for anyone interested in the band. The combination of real articles along with countless candid shots of the band makes it a book that one never tires of browsing through. It is like flipping through a scrap book that some teeny-bopper Doors fanatic had constructed over the years. Sugarman should be commended for putting together so thorough a book which left no doors unopened.

Neil is Still Young Enough to Rock-N-Roll

By JAYNE M. STUART

For close to twenty years, Neil Young has been producing music, some years more successful than others. Young was never one to concern himself with commercial success and has often released music that was oblivious to the mainstream of the times. For many listeners, his most admirable trait is his creative and insightful lyrics. Well, Young has a new lp out, "Everybody's Rockin'," and he is touring with a new band, the Shocking Pinks. Somehow the color pink is the last one that would be identified with Neil Young and his music, at least by most of his listeners. Not so with his new release.

This album is a collection of fun, catchy tunes, spiced up with some creative lines and humorous lyrics. The song that immediately comes to mind is "Payola Blues," a very pointed song directed toward a business Young is quite familiar with — the music industry. "No matter where I go/ I never hear my record on the radio-/How about this new Mercedes Benz/that otta get it on/Thanks a lot man/I'll play it all day long . . ." The most striking difference with this album is the lack of weighty themes.

Young has traditionally been an artist that last sung of politics, war and lost love, all rather depressing topics. Here, on "Everybody's Rockin'," Young is having a ball, with a rockabilly-fifties beat. The song "Kinda Fonda Wanda" is reminiscent of the '50s, with its silly lyrics: "I had a date with Jenny, and skinny Minnie, long, tall Sally, and short, fat Penny. But I'm kinda fonda Wanda, 'coz Wanda always wanna,wanna . . ."

Most of the music is very dance-oriented, with its driving, rhythmic bass lines and simple melodies. The only drawback is that some of the songs become indistinguishable from one another as they start to sound very much alike. One of the tracks that is different is "Wonderin' " as its tempo is much slower and it echoes some of Young's earlier tunes.

The band is tight, although the songs aren't very complex. This album shows that Young has not completely "burned out," so to speak. It is refreshing to hear an old act try something new and innovative and not just fall into whatever is popular at the time.

Young's last album, "Trans" was undoubtedly different, but few cuts were very listenable, as they were done on computers and with the aid of a voicebox. "Trans's theme concerned the computerization of our society, which was superbly conveyed with a rerelease of Young's "Mr. Soul," an old standard from his Buffalo Springfield days.

From most reports, Young's summer tour with the Shocking Pinks was a successful one and most listeners were pleasantly surprised. If Young keeps it up, everybody will be rockin'.

Animal Ep a Beast of Burdon

By GARY DYER

The popular breakthrough of British blues rock was the Animals's 1964 hit, "The House of the Rising Sun." This souped-up rendition of an old, blues song which had recently been recorded by Bob Dylan was dominated by Alan Price's organ and Eric Burdon's distinctive vocals. This recording demonstrates that not all blues covers are created equal; it stays in the mind as no reworking of Muddy Waters's "Mannish Boy" ever will.

The Animals followed "House" with several smaller hits, "I'm Crying," "Don't Let Me Be Misunderstood," "We Gotta Get Out of This Place,' and "It's My Life." These songs are still popular today, as was demonstrated by David Johansson's hit of Animal's tunes last fall.

In the late 'sixties the Animals broke up. Bassist Chas Chandler went on to manage Jimi Hendrix. Burdon continued with the Animals' name for a while and then formed War, with whom he had a 1971 hit, "Spill the Wine," before he left. He has been trying for a comeback, with or without the Animals, ever since.

Well, the original Animals are back, with a single called "The Night." This three minute, fifty-one second song is on both sides of the record, a case of finding your best suit and bidding it. In the film "One Trick Pony" a radio executive advises aging singer Johan Levin that his comeback single needs "a hook, the repetition of a catchy phrase." The Animals have taken this advice to heart.

A new Animals bid would ideally be an adaption of the Animals' characteristics to the current sound, to which our ears are accustomed. In "The Night" Burdon sings in that familiar deep howl, with lyrics which are as unobstrusively simple (even simple-minded), as those of "It's My Life." The song is conventional, and repetitious, as if designed to be a magic incantation of radio rock to catch the casual listener. The hook here is not as catchy as its handling would suggest. One new touch is a synthesizer which, unfortunately, is on some sort of delay which makes it sound a little flat, and is annoying in such a trimmed-down song. The production is thin while the mix is odd (the keyboards are too loud), but the Animals' best songs were always a little rough, so it's a bow to tradition.

The Animals

Is this a fully pleasing record? No, it is too simple in structure, lyrics and performance. Songs need good melody with varied sections to stay interesting, not just a verse and a chorus. Is it likely to be a hit? Expertise is almost non-existent anywhere for predictions of this kind, but one would think not, and this is said with some regret. The formula requires certain elements in order to work, and in this recording, the hook just isn't good enough. This last observation involves showbiz, not music; but careers, and hence comebacks, call for these disciplines with different aims to be reconciled. After so long, it is certain the Animals know that.

Cats Run Into "Knight-mare"

By N. JOHN CAVUTO

The Villanova men's soccer team, a young squad that lost seven of its members to graduation, opened its season unsuccessfully last Saturday by losing to Rutgers 4-0.

Villanova junior Dino Spadaccini pushes the ball up the field en route to a 4-0 loss.

Rutgers, led by the sparkling play of freshman sensation Bobby Joe Esposito, quickly jumped out to a 1-0 lead only fifteen minutes into the match and was never seriously threatened thereafter.

The first ten minutes of the game saw neither team able to take control or mount any type of offensive threat. However, Rutgers soon began to force the action and opened up a series of goal-scoring opportunities. Esposito, who finished the game with two goals and one assist, scored twice in the first half, both goals unassisted. At the 12:21 mark of the first half, Esposito dribbled up the middle of the field, split two Cat defenders and fired the ball into the left corner of the goal past a helpless John Grendi.

"I had heard that Esposito was good, but I didn't know that he was that good," Coach Howard Graff later commented. Thanks to their star forward, Rutgers took a comfortable 2-0 lead into halftime.

The second half saw a much more aggressive and confident Villanova team take more control offensively. Despite this improvement, Nova never really had a serious scoring opportunity.

With 25:07 left in the game, Rutgers increased its lead to 3-0 when Esposito fed Mario Zavala on a beautiful give-and-go play. Villanova suffered a defensive breakdown only thirty seconds later, allowing Esposito to go in on Grendi alone. Esposito was subsequently pulled down from behind by a Wildcat defender trying to prevent him from scoring. It was all for naught, however, as Dave Mazur scored for Rutgers on the ensuing penalty kick.

The remaining portion of the game was uneventful as both teams began to substitute freely and Rutgers took home the victory.

Villanova, though lacking in offense, received excellent play from junior John Oblaczynski and goalie John Grendi; they stymied several Rutger scoring opportunities.

Despite the loss, Coach Graff remained optimistic about his team's chances this season. "We did not play too badly, considering Rutgers is ranked fifth in the East."

Graff also realized that his young team will need some time before it reaches its potential. "It takes four to five games for the offense to learn to work together," he said.

Villanova's lack of offensive punch was foreseeable due to the graduation of two of last year's top scoring threats, Mike Layfield and Brian Barr. Graff, however, feels he can overcome the loss. "As the season progresses, I expect to see a notable improvement in our play."

Cats Stop Spartans 3-1

By BOB HELLER

The Villanova University field hockey team opened its 1983 season with a 3-1 victory over Michigan State on Tuesday.

Prior to Tuesday's game the Wildcats had just completed the All College Tournament at the Pocono Sports Camp. At this tournament the Wildcats won two and lost three games.

The two victories came at the hands of local rivals, St. Joseph's and LaSalle, with scores of 2-0 and 3-0 respectively. Goals in the St. Joseph's game were scored by Robin Garczynski and Amy Hutchison, with freshman Kelly Hart getting credit for an assist on the Hutchison goal. Against LaSalle, Sue Lora produced the only Wildcat goal on a fine pass from Danine DiBernardi.

The Pocono Tournament helped prepare the Wildcats for the match on Tuesday against Michigan State. With overcast skies, the match got under way with neither team being completely dominant for most of the first half.

Late in the first half the Wildcats began to dominate play, threatening to score many times in the last eight minutes. It was during this time that they scored their first two goals. The first goal was scored by Sue Lora who took a rebound off State goalkeeper Barb Naylor and put it past her at 29:33 of the first period to give the Cats a 1-0 lead. Junior Bonnie Bell made the score 2-0 with a hard shot from the top of the scoring circle that flew by the State goalkeeper. The Cats took the 2-0 lead into the locker room at halftime.

During the first 15 minutes of the second half, the Wildcats dominated play. The Cats scored their third and final goal as Robin Garczynski pushed the ball past Naylor to make the score 3-0 Nova.

Michigan State finally got on the scoreboard when Anne Marie Whelan put a shot past Nova goalkeeper Lisa Buschmann to make the score 3-1, Nova. Neither team scored in the remaining 20 minutes and the Wildcats came away with a 3-1 victory. This victory gives the Cats a regular season 1-0 record.

Defensively the Wildcats played very well. Nova goalie Lisa Buschmann stopped 6 of 12 shots by the Spartans. One of the defensive highlights of the first half was a brilliant defensive save made by sweeper Sue Antoon.

Villanova's next home game will be against Lehigh on September 20. After that the Cats travel to Rider to face the Broncs of Rider College.

Tennis Outlook

Langran: Netters Look Good

By LARRY GOANOS

The 1983-84 edition of the Villanova women's tennis team has a lot of work cut out for it. Coming off a brilliant 17-3 season, Dr. Robert Langran's squad must somehow compensate for the loss of graduates Dawn Fisher and Carol Harrison. The duo had a remarkable combined singles record of 109-38 in four years, leaving a great void to be filled.

"We definitely have a lack of depth but we'll be alright this season," predicted Coach Langran. "It'll be difficult to replace Carol and Dawn but we have many veterans returning," he added.

Most prominent among the returnees are the Matkiwsky sisters, Zenia and Luba (a senior and sophomore, respectively), who will once again spearhead the Nova singles attack. Last season Zenia cruised to a 14-2 record in the number one singles position, while Luba ran her record to 10-1 in the second spot before an injury forced her to call it a season. This year they're both back in top form and Coach Langran expects to alternate them between the first two singles positions.

This season's co-captain, Ann Stairiker, was 18-1 last year in the number four spot and Langran expects her to advance to the third position this time around. The other co-captain, Cynthia Burke, is projected as Villanova's fourth singles player. A year ago she was busy slamming her way to a 17-2 record.

Rounding out the singles play will be Abigail Burke and Tracy Brewer in the fifth and sixth slots, respectively.

The doubles picture is not as clearly defined at this point as Langran expects to do some experimentation. Among the possible moves is the splitting up of the Matkiwsky sisters, a powerful tandem last season.

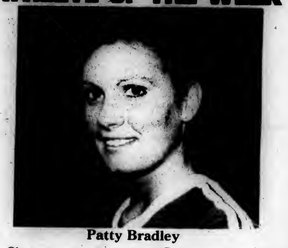
While presenting Langran with his fourteenth consecutive non-losing season is the women's team's first priority, they also have their sights on another goal.

"We want to improve upon our finish in the Big East Tournament," explained Langran. Last year's squad, which finished eighth in the conference, had the misfortune of drawing the eventual champion in the first round in five of the nine tournament events.

GENUINE

Budweiser.
KING OF BEERS.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK



Patty Bradley

GENUINE

Chances are, when the 1984 Summer Olympics begin in Los Angeles long about late July, most of us will be content to sit back in our easy chair, crack open a Bud (of course), and watch Jim McKay, dressed in that hideous, yellow ABC jacket, impassionately call the action and raise our patriotic consciousness for about three weeks.

If senior trackster Patty Bradley had it her way, however, and more than likely she will, she would be in L.A. personally, competing against the best athletes in the world. And she has the credentials and talent to propel her there.

A consistent winner in regional, collegiate track competition, Bradley proved this past summer that she is a force to be reckoned with on the national level as well.

In the TAC Championships (held in Indianapolis, IN.), featuring top-notch amateur athletes from all over the country, Patty secured fourth place in her specialty, the 400-meter hurdles, with a 56.92 clocking. Moving on to Colorado Springs, in the showcase for American amateur talent, the National Sports Festival, Patty snared the silver medal in the same event, posting a Villanova University record of 56.65. (It is one of five school records that she holds.)

In addition, Bradley ran the third leg in the gold medal-winning performance of the 4 x 400 relay team at the Sports Festival.

One key attribute Bradley has in her favor in her drive for the L.A. Games is consistency. "Patty has been a positive influence on this team by her steady performances," commented Bob Shoudt, women's track coach. "She's so steady," he added, "that she doesn't deviate from one performance to another."

Aside from her being named 1983's inaugural Budweiser Athlete of the Week, Bradley thinks that her biggest thrill at Villanova has been "the realization that I run with the best in the country, and can compete with them." Making the Olympics, she said, would supersede any other thrill.

Bradley is not deluded by the glamor of Olympic Gold, though. "I realize that it's going to take a lot, lot, lot of hard, hard, work," she said. "But," she quickly added, "I'm willing to do it."

Spikers Unveil New Look

By STEPHEN FALLON

Last Sunday was the debut of sorts for the 1983 women's volleyball team. The tri-meet with Temple and Penn saw the unveiling of a new offense, a new head coach, four freshmen, and a new "upbeat" attitude. These factors have combined to provide anxiety around this year's team.

The results Sunday were mixed as the Wildcats defeated Penn after losing to a traditionally tough Temple team.

The new offense is, in volleyball vernacular, a 5-1 which features just one setter as opposed to the two setters used by previous Villanova volleyball teams. Alexandra Zuckowsky, a sophomore from nearby Radnor High, is handling the setting chores in the new offensive alignment.

The new coach is Dennis McGinnis, who served as Villanova's assistant coach before ascending to the top spot this season. McGinnis does not feel any adjustment to a new coaching style is necessary since he was an assistant for two years and the team is quite familiar with his style. McGinnis insists there is no more pressure as head coach and adds, "It's just a joy to be here."

The four freshmen represent a bumper crop of recruits for the Wildcats. Mia Grosso (S. Orange, N.J.), Stacey Tower (Caraopolis, Pa.), Kathy LaRochelle (Huntington Station, N.Y.), and Amy Fairfield (Fairfield, Ct.) are all expected to contribute immediately. Coach McGinnis expressed his satisfaction over the recruiting year saying, "The four girls we went after are the four girls that made the team."

The "upbeat" attitude may be considered an intangible but according to captain Stephanie Moore its presence is felt by all.

"There is just a better atmosphere at practice this year. We do it because we have fun and not like it is a job." Moore went on to say, "There is more respect between the coaches and the players and not as much of a communications gap."

Not all about the 1983 volleyball team is new, however. In fact, the foundation upon which the Cats are built is a trio of talented seniors rounding out excellent careers at Villanova. Nancy Patrick, Mary Fischer and Moore are the "blood and guts" of the squad. All three contribute with their physical talent and leadership as well.

Moore, the senior from Fairview Park, Ohio, returns for her second year as captain of the team. McGinnis refers to Moore as the "real leader" as her experience provides direction on and off the court.

The biggest enemy of the 1983 Volleyball team appears to be themselves. As is often the case with young teams, there is a serious identity crisis. McGinnis said, "We have the fundamentals down, now it is just a question of gaining confidence, believing in ourselves." Moore echoed such sentiments, "We seem to have certain ideas that we cannot beat certain teams, even though we have as much talent."

The Cats do face the challenge of an upgraded schedule featuring tournaments at George Washington, Navy, and West Chester, all leading to the Big East Conference tournament in late November. The winner of the Big East tourney advances to the NCAA championships. "The Big East has to be the ultimate goal," said Moore, "everything else, we'll take one step at a time."

Sunday's opening match saw the Cats ironing out a few wrinkles in their new style of play. The wrinkles, however, were all too apparent as Temple thrashed the Cats 7-15, 3-15, and 12-15.

Villanova, however, was able to rebound in the second match to defeat a strong Penn team. The Cats dropped the first set 12-15 but came roaring back 17-15, 15-12 and 16-14 to gain a split on the day.

Fleet Freshmen Spark Harriers to Victory

By JOE MARUSAK

When you compete in your first cross country meet of the season without your top runners, with only a group of freshmen and a few veterans, you might expect trouble.

But Villanova women's coach Bob Shoudt, using just that mixture at Saturday's Essex County Community College Invitational in Baltimore County, Md., found no problems whatsoever. His harriers did nothing but clean up on the 5,000-meter course, capturing six individual spots in the top ten and easily winning the overall team title.

"At the beginning of the season I don't run our top runners," Shoudt commented. "What I do is use all freshmen and runners who didn't finish in the top last year. From there, I see how things work out."

Things worked out quite well for Villanova on Saturday. The Cats' attack was bolstered by freshmen Coleen Gallagher, Melissa Grubb and Lauren Searby, who finished second, third and fourth respectively. Gallagher (18:11) trailed only Martha Forsyth of Mary Washington College (18:04); Grubb and Searby followed closely in 18:27.

Jane Ashton, a junior, and sophomore Lisa Polzinetti took sixth and seventh in 18:37 and 18:40. And as if that was not enough, Cassie Bradley, another freshman, finished tenth with a 18:53 mark.

Villanova as a team collected 22 points, 32 better than second place George Mason.

The performance especially gratified Shoudt because his most consistent runner of a year ago, Jan Yerkes, has left school to concentrate on the Olympics. "Jan was the team's number one runner and it will be difficult to replace her," Shoudt noted.

With Yerkes' help, Villanova won the Big Five Championship last season and ended up second in the Big East.

"We hope to repeat as Big Five Champions this year and also win the Big East," Shoudt remarked. "Our toughest competition in the Conference will be B.C. and Georgetown." From there, Shoudt would hope to make a trip to the nationals.

"With the people returning (including nationals qualifier Mary Ellen McGowan) and the incoming freshmen, I think we have a good chance of reaching those goals."

Comparing the Courts

By LARRY GOANOS

Aficionados of pick-up basketball games on campus may have noticed that there's a very distinct difference among the groups of players that shoot hoops in each of Villanova's four campus facilities. Nobody really talks much about it, so as a service to freshmen enthusiasts and others who haven't discerned the differences, I've prepared this handy little summary:

Butler's Annex: I haven't called this facility the Butler's Annex since I was a freshman but its nickname, albeit more appropriate, is unprintable. I think the floors in there are waxed with the excess grease from Saturday's food service cheese steaks.

Aside from its always slick surface, the annex is still a lousy place to play. It has no windows, poor lighting and an omnipresent stale stench. The rims aren't too good either. To sum it up, the most fun I've ever had in the Annex was during drop and add.

The players in the Annex are generally the neophytes who don't have much skill but want the exercise. They don't mind skidding around in sub-par conditions as long as they get a workout.

Editor's Angle

Alumni Gym: Although it's a little cramped, Alumni can be a good place to play hoop. The court is usually in good shape and a competitive game can be played if there aren't 60 people pressed against the walls waiting to play.

The players here are mainly cast-offs from the Field House; those who lost quickly or couldn't stand the long wait on the Wildcats' home court. The level of play in Alumni ranks second-only to that of the Field House with the best teams dominating play for up to two hours at a time.

St. Mary's: This gym, housing two courts, is difficult to pin down. Often a high calibre of talent will be assembled on one court while a group of hapless air-ballers scurries about frantically on the next. It defies explanation.

Most of the players on St. Mary's well lit and spacious courts come from the dorm rooms above. Only the most die-hard of basketball players will make the long trek from campus.

St. Mary's also runs its own intra-dorm tournament, far outstripping the campus-wide version for excellence in overall level of play.

Field House: Last and certainly not least, is the Field House. This is where the cream of the crop gathers to match skills with members of the men's varsity team, and, occasionally, a pro player or two.

Players who were stars in high school but couldn't catch on with the Wildcats come here to keep their game sharp and drill an occasional jumper over a varsity star.

The wait at the Field House is long but sometimes it's well worth it.

My biggest thrill playing basketball at Villanova came not when my team won the intramural championship (because it didn't) but rather when I was matched up against Aaron Howard, a four year Wildcat starter. I was only a sophomore and Aaron was a senior. He tried to make a bounce pass around me but I deftly blocked it with my leg. "Good defense," Aaron quickly said. Coming from a man whose forte was defense during a brilliant NCAA career, I felt it was a great compliment.

I'll never play in the Annex again.

First Opener Win Since '71

By TERRY O'TOOLE

Mike Wright fell to the grass in Villanova Stadium Saturday afternoon, underneath the clear and sunny skies, and looked far, far away — past the cheering Wildcat crowd, past the jubilant Villanova team, past the band and the cheerleaders and the photographers.

Wright had just led the Bowling Green offense 79 yards in 57 seconds, taking the ball at his own 20-yard line and driving to the Wildcat one before the final gun sounded, allowing Villanova to escape with a 35-28 win and their first opening day victory since 1971.

With the Wildcat secondary back in a prevent defense, Wright hit on four of six passes, the final one a 24 yard strike to split end Dan Shetler, who was pulled down just short of the goal line as time ran out. Co-captain Steve Plastek made the initial hit on Shetler, receiving help from cornerback Paul Pachuta and rover Bernie Hober, who earlier in the game set up Villanova's first touchdown with the first of two fumble recoveries.

The last minute drive was a fitting finish to the high-scoring battle which a visiting scout from the Canadian Football League called one of the most exciting college games he'd seen in years. After Bowling Green jumped to a 6-0 lead at the end of one quarter on the first of four touchdowns by junior tailback Doug Wiener, the lead changed hands eight times. Vince Thompson's six-yard touchdown run with less than six minutes remaining put the Wildcats on top for good.

Thompson returned to form with his trademarked up-the-middle drives, scoring twice and gaining 55-yards on 16 attempts. The rushing leader for Villanova, however, turned out to be sophomore quarterback Pat O'Brien, who also scored a pair of touchdowns while running for 105 yards out of the wishbone.

The Falcons came out on top in the total offense statistics, running up 521 total yards to Villanova's 298. O'Brien hit on only 3-of-11 passes for 45 yards, while his Bowling Green counterpart completed 21 of 37 for 283 yards. The visitors appeared to be in control early on, marching to the Wildcat one on their second possession when, with a fourth and one for the touchdown, the Villanova defense stopped Wright on an option to the right. One minute later, however, the Falcons recovered a Greg Bedesem fumble on the hosts' 11, scoring in two plays. After a missed kick, Bowling Green led 6-0.

The Wildcats couldn't seem to get their offense in gear during the first quarter. Their first two possessions both ended on third downs when Bowling Green recovered fumbles, and the third and fourth possessions of the period ended on punts. One encouraging sign for coach Dick Bedesem and staff early on had to be the punting of freshman Joe Borajkiewicz, who booted kicks for 50 and 47 yards in the opening quarter.

Hober's fumble recovery at the 20-yard line. A quick cut to mid-field, however, and his return became a 72-yard race to the Bowling Green 28, setting up the Wildcats second score.

Big defensive plays allowed Villanova to rack up the points despite a slow-starting offensive attack. Three of the Wildcats touchdowns came after turnovers, while Bowling Green reaped its share of opponent's mistakes with two scores after fumble recoveries.

Villanova Wins Minority Grant

By DIANA K. SUGG

The Association of American Colleges has awarded Villanova University a $4,200 grant to help minority high school students develop their writing and computing skills.

Twenty academically talented 11th grade students from the area will be selected for the program, which will also give them experience with computers. It will consist of 24 classes held on campus to be taught by Thomas Martinez and Dr. William Fleischman, both faculty members at Villanova.

Besides addressing weaknesses in the areas of writing, math and computers, the program hopes to attract more minority students to the University. Currently, fewer than 3 percent of the school's 6,300 undergraduates are minorities.

"Hopefully, when these students graduate, some might decide to go to Villanova," stated Director of Social Action Programs, Edward Collymore.

Dan Liddle Photos

Director of Social Action Program, Edward Collymore

Collymore submitted the winning proposal to the Association of American Colleges in February 1983. After surviving five rounds of competition, it was selected as deserving of a grant under the Minority Achievement Program.

Awards in this program range up to $10,000, although the average one is $5,000. The total cost of Villanova's program is $6,700, leaving a sum of $2,500 not covered by the grant. Collymore said his office was seeking outside sources for these funds. If they are not successful, he will go to the University and request the money.

Interested students will be screened tomorrow in Tolentine Hall. In addition to submitting a high school transcript, they must complete a brief written exercise in English and math.

"Basically, we're looking for academically talented students, with at least two years of college preparatory math and good verbal skills," commented Collymore.

Collymore initially received information about the program in July 1982. He became interested and formed a four-person committee to study the possibilities and develop a proposal.

After being notified of the award in early May, 1983, Collymore's office sent out letters concerning the program to all public, private and parochial high schools in the Philadelphia area. Since it was late in the school year, the response was not good. Collymore then decided to advertise the program through commercial spots on local radio stations. This, along with a follow-up letter to the high school principals, elicited a good number of students.

The 20 students who are selected will begin the two and one half hour, once-a-week course on Oct. 8. The majority of the class will be similar to a workshop, with emphasis on class discussion.

If the program is viewed as a success, the school may continue it. However, Villanova will have to find other financial sources, because the $4,200 is a one-time grant.

The Office for Social Action Programs, which is administering the course, will share its results with other campuses. It will also be shared with the entire American high education community through the publications of the Association of American Colleges.

Leahy Confronts Student Issues

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

Striving to promote a familial sense of community within the University, Patrick J. Leahy assumed the duties of student body president for 1983-84.

Leahy, elected last April, received 45 percent of the undergraduate vote to defeat three other candidates, including two women vying for the presidential seat. A total of 422 ballots were cast in the election.

Recalling his victory, Leahy, a senior from Marblehead, Mass., said that he experienced a feeling of "total pride and joy. It was a goal I had since September. I was very optimistic from the start because I thought I was the best candidate. I'm very pleased that I received the vote of confidence that I did."

Leahy has reiterated his election night promise to maintain a visible, receptive student government. "The past student government did a good job. I want to improve on that."

According to Leahy, the number one priority of the student government is to be a 12-man delegation to the University Senate.

"We can be a more effective delegation if we receive students' suggestions," claimed Leahy. "Through us, the suggestions can be brought to the attention of the Senate, who can then act upon them. It's the only means of communication that exists for that. The Senate, from what I've seen, is effective. But there's always room for improvement.

Leahy also addressed the growing schism between Villanova alumni and the student government. According to the president, student government is in accord with the alumni in supporting football restoration at the IAA level "but will take a different avenue.

"We admire and applaud the alumni Committee to Restore Football and their ultimate goal, but we disagree with its methods. The alumni have felt left out and it is warranted — to a degree. The dropping of football had heightened their anxieties.

"The alumni are part of the community. But there is a vocal element within that wants to be disenfranchised from the University. We want what's best for the interest of the school."

Student Body President, Patrick Leahy

Leahy also said that the Board of Trustees shouldn't have to be put in the position of bowing to the alumni's monetary leverage.

"The Board of Trustees are the guardians of the school and will act in the best interests of the school. We're all part of the Villanova family."

Concerning football, Leahy said that the sport is "deeply missed, especially by the alumni. It's a gap that needs to be filled. Restoration, in my eyes, is a means of reuniting the whole community."

"I can't emphasize enough how important student suggestions and input is," said Leahy. "We're receptive to everything we receive."

Senate Sets '83-'84 Agenda

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The first University Senate meeting for the 1983-84 academic year last Friday provided a brief summary of important upcoming meetings and the expectation of future Senate meetings.

Senate Chairman Eleanor Strack opened the meeting "looking forward to a productive year with the Senate," before reviewing the items on the agenda.

Strack noted a message from University President the Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A., which anounced that he will be attending the Nov. 11 Senate meeting to address the Senate with his annual message. Last year, Driscoll's address pertained to his acknowledgement of the Senate's progress and the University's fine recognition in the community due in part to the Senate's achievements. Driscoll also had briefly commented on the football decision.

Other upcoming meetings announced include the Executive Committee of the Board meeting with the Executive Committee of the Senate in November and the Board of Trustees meeting in October. Both dates have not yet been determined.

Strack encouraged all senators to submit agenda items to the Executive Committee of the Senate so that when an agenda is set for the meeting with the Executive Committee of the Board, the views and interests of the Senate are considered. "I would like to see the agenda more representive of the entire Senate," commented Strack.

Special recognition was extended to returning Alumni Senator John Blatt and the other Alumni Senator, Henry Clem, who was unable to attend this particular meeting.

Because this was the first meeting of this school year, no new business was presented. Reports are expected from the various subcommittes to act upon at future meetings, but since there was no new business, the meeting was adjourned after approximately 4 minutes.

Trailways Bus Discounts

Trailways is offering students a 15 percent discount on all regular route service when they present their student ID and the new Trailways "Student Aid Card." The cards will be distributed through the mail or will be available on bulletin boards across the country on selectd campuses.

The 15 percent discount is good on all fares, except casino, commuter and charter trips. It applies to all published fares, whether they are sale fares or not. In many cases, the student may receive a double discount with this offer.

Students may use their Trailways Student Aid Card until June 15, 1984. The Trailways Student Aid program is available in limited areas across the United States. Contact your local Trailways terminal.

Stage Crew

If anyone is interested in working with sound or lighting equipment, stage crew meets every Tuesday at 5:30 p.m. on the stage of the Fieldhouse. All are welcome.

Springbreak in Ireland

During the 1984 spring break, Dr. James Murphy of the English Department will again conduct a travel-study trip to Ireland. The trip is in conjunction with a three-credit course studying Ireland's literary heritage. Cost of the trip will be $779 including air fare, hotels, deluxe guided coach tours, and all admissions.

For further information, contact Dr. Murphy in 201 Vasey Hall (ext. 4647). Preference is given to undergraduates who have been involved in Irish studies courses.

Black Cultural Society

The Black Cultural Society would like to invite you to our beginning of the school year party to be held Sept. 30 in the West Lounge. No alcohol will be served.

"Three-On-Three"

Registration for the Delurey Hall "Three-On-Three" Tournament has been extended to Monday at 5 p.m. Posters are available in the Dean of Students Office in Dougherty 213. First round play will begin Sept. 27. Pairings will be posted at the Dean of Students office that morning. All teams can expect to play on Sept. 27.

Computer Facilities Upgraded

By WILLIAM BURNS

Villanova University recently upgraded all aspects of computing services available to University students and staff. In what has been termed by Megan Poulson, assistant director of technical operations, "Just one manifestation of the development of a long-range computing strategy," the University Computing and Information Services (UCIS), the College of Engineering and the department of mathematical science have purchased two Digital Equipment Corp. (DEC) minicomputers — one VAX 11/780 and one VAX 11/730 — six Auto-Trol CAD/CAM graphics devices, and many new terminals and microcomputers.

In an effort to meet the ever-increasing demand for computer facilities, the University doubled its VAX computing power with their purchase of an additional VAX 11/780. The new machine, called "Aurora," is located in Mendel Hall.

Although this computer will be used mainly by the engineering students, the machine was not purchased by the College of Engineering, nor is it restricted to their use. Its purpose, rather, is to provide additional computing capacity for the entire University, according to Poulson.

The original VAX machine, now called "Eclipse," is linked to all of the terminals in the Mendel terminal room. In the future, it is planned that access to either machine will be possible using any VAX-compatible terminal in any location.

The Tolentine Interactive Computation Center has been stocked with many new computers and terminals for use by engineering students. The purchases include several UT-100 terminals; three Auto-Trol advanced graphics work stations, each with its own Apollo 32-bit minicomputer, one with a 19 inch color monitor, and two with 19 inch black-and-white monitors; three Auto-Trol advanced raster work stations, each equipped with a 19 inch black-and-white monitor and each linked to the VAX "Aurora" machine; and several microcomputers, including Apple 2e's.

Access to the additional computing resources will soon be facilitated in two ways. The Mendel and Tolentine terminal rooms will begin 24-hour operation on Oct. 1 and additional dial-up ports will be installed to bring the total number to 8 per VAX. There are currently four dial-up ports into each VAX. Installation of new lines and additional terminals is currently taking place, according to Bill Himbert, systems analyst.

In a related development, the department of mathematical sciences recently announced the purchase orf a DEC VAX 11/730. The new machine, which is substantially smaller than the 11/780 s, will be used mainly by computer science majors in their Operating Systems and Database Management systems courses. According to Dr. Frederick Hartmann, chairman of the department of mathematical science, the machine was purchased to "enable the students to have hands-on experience with the hardware. It will be used more as a laboratory device than as a general-purpose computer."

The computer, which will run the UNIX operating system developed at UCAL-Berkeley, will allow the department easier access to many computer programs of interest to computer science majors. UNIX is the national standard for operating systems, and many universities supply software simply for the cost of the tape. Two of the main features of the new operating system are an advanced text creation facility for scientific papers and a compiler for the C computer language.

While developing a long-range computing strategy and conducting complex evaluations of computing alternatives, the University has provided Villanova with mainframe, minicomputer and microcomputer facilities.

Dormitory Renovations to Improve Residents' Safety

By AMELIA McGOVERN

At an estimated cost of $400,000, Villanova's Office of Residence Life has initiated dormitory renovations for the 1983-84 fiscal year, according to Christopher M. Janosik, director of residence life.

Improvements in the men's dormitories include new carpets in Stanford and Sullivan Halls and chairs in Stanford lounges. New beds were purchased and installed for Fedigan Hall.

Sullivan Hall, one of the dormitories recently renovated.

Work completed in women's housing is new carpeting in St. Rita's Hall and the second and third floor lounges of Good Counsel.

Janosik explained that these projects have been funded through three major sources. The bulk of the money came from the University's $25 million bond issue. Other sources of revenue came from the maintenance department and billing of students who damaged property in the various dormitories.

Janosik pointed out that there was no correlation between the level in school and the amount charged for damages. The amount which the student paid was based on the condition that the room was left in the spring semester and damages incurred in the common areas, such as hallways, stairwells and lounges.

The projects, which maintenance funded, included $25,000 for the purchse of new fire alarms and fire extinguishers.

The alarms were replaced because of their short-sounding buzzers. The new models are efficient in that the warning buzzer stays on longer, enabling students to be efficiently warned of an emergency. Existing fire extinguishers were changed from old soda-acid types to modern water pressured ones which cause less damage to the surrounding area where it is used.

In addition, lounge furniture for Austin, St. Rita's and Moriarty Halls is scheduled to be installed by the end of September.

Other current renovations to be completed within two weeks are new towel racks in Sheehan Hall and toilet partitions in Sullivan and Galberry. Also, maintenance will install window screens for Sullivan and Sheehan.

During the summer, floor repairs in St. Mary's Hall's showers posed a problem. The delay was due to the University's concern over whether or not they should repair a building they did not own. After deliberation, the University has decided to approve the work, although the Augustinian Provinciate owns the property and the structure.

Improvements scheduled for later in the installation of lounge furniture in Stanford and Simpson Halls, and study furniture in Sheehan and Good Counsel.

Also expected this year are new entrance doors for Sheehan and Good Counsel.

Career Staff Offer Job Search Aid

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

To aid prospective employees in today's competitive job market, the Career Development Center sponsored registration workshops throughout the week, informing seniors of facilities on campus which can further enhance their job search.

Warning the seniors that because of the slow economy, jobs will come later in their academic career and hiring will not be as automatic, "To take advantage of the free services offered by the career Development center would be extremely beneficial," according to Career Development Counselor and speaker at the workshops, Wendy Elliot.

"This means a job search will be longer and require more effort on your part," continued Elliot. "The Career Development Center, however, can provide you with an efficient job search procedure you can use forever."

A major part of a job search method that the career planning and placement service offers assistance in is on campus recruiting. Elliot described this service as a "technical and specific strategy to be come aware of."

On campus recruiting begins Oct. 17, but the workshop brought to the attention of the seniors the necessity to begin preparing now. A series of future workshops will be offered within the next two weeks to enhance a students interviewing skills," said Elliot.

To handle an interview successfully seniors were encouraged at the workshop to try 'practice interviews', to refine interviewing skills. Mock interviews are offered weekly by the Career Development Center with a 20-minute critique from a counselor on the individuals taped interview.

A recent copy of the upcoming recruiting companies, the dates they will be on campus and the academic majors who are eligible to interview were distributed at the workshop. An on campus recruiting update will be available every two weeks to inform interviewees of any changes or additions.

At the workshop, Elliot explained the preparation procedure for on campus recruiting. A Villanova Interview Forms (VIF) is a sort of mini-resume all seniors should have filed with the Career Development Office. Companies which pre-screen need basis information from the students' VIF one month in advance to review and in return, send a list of students eligible to interview with the company.

There is a first come-first serve sign up for interviews with companies who choose not to pre-screen.

To assist students in writing an impressive resume, "of vital importance in a job search, the Career Development Center will offer a Resume Workshop and provide a weekly Resume Review session," announced Elliot.

Another facility that was brought to seniors' attention at the registration workshop is the Center's library which holds various books for research about employers, books that define job objectives and books including firms with full-time openings.

Students were advised at the workshop that while assessing their job market to look into their skills and to decide how they can be transferable.

Hall Wars to Spark Unity

By SARAH BELSON

Villanova University's first Hall Wars competition will be held tomorrow from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. at Austin Field. Hall Wars, sponsored by the Office of Residence Life, is a series of competitive events among the different areas of the campus for prizes and a championship trophy.

The Office for Residence Life has divided the campus into three areas which will compete against each other. The south area consists of Good Counsel and Stanford Halls; the east area includes Austin, Corr, Galberry, Sheehan and Sullivan Halls; and the remaining residence halls Alumni, Delurey, Fedigan, Moriarity, O'Dwyer, St. Rita's St. Mary's and Simpson make up the west area.

The three areas will be competing as co-ed teams in ten different events. The program is being run on a relatively small scale and only one team will represent an area in each event. The teams will be made up by resident advisors who have volunteered for the sign-up committee. Team members will be chosen by a random drawing of the individual sign-up sheets from each residence hall.

The goal of this program is for students to get to know those with whom they live and for residents to begin to identify with their respective areas, according to Mark Thibodeau, coordinator for the south area. "It's a good chance for students to get to know each other."

Area coordinators for the Office for Residence Life, Mark Thibodeau, Tara Austin and Barbara McGraw have worked together on all phases of Hall Wars '83 throughout the summer.

All three area coordinators have had previous experience running similar events at different schools and as a result, all the plans and preparations came from the three coordinators "pooling their ideas together," said Austin.

Although the administrators have worked "many long hours" on this project, they are relying on student participation to make Hall Wars '83 a success. "The program is for them and they can make it or break it," explained McGraw.

Student participation and enthusiasm will determine the future of Hall Wars. The coordinators say they would like to plan a second Hall Wars on a larger scale, with students being responsible for the organization of the activities. "We're hoping to start something that will be continued for years to come," said Thibodeau.

Rt. 320 Light OK'd

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

A pedestrian crossing signal will be installed between St. Mary's Hall and the Villanova Law School after a two year wait.

Following approval by the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT), Radnor Township commissioners voted on Sept. 12 to spend about $12,000 out of its capital improvement budget for the push-button signal, to be located on North Springmill Road.

Villanova has agreed to install additional fencing along the road, so that there will only be an opening for a driveway and the signal forcing pedestrians to cross at the signal.

The Paoli railroad bridge near the site of traffic light to be installed.

The University's concern for the safety of students who cross over the Paoli railroad bridge to reach St Mary's resulted in the introduction of the proposal two years ago.

Approximately 300 students live in St. Mary's Hall and over 1,000 attend classes there as well. There have been minor accidents in the past, and several reports by neighbors of the potential danger.

Last year, the Rev. John McKenzie, O.S.A., director of planning, estimated that as many as 14,000 vehicles cross over the bridge and through the crossing zone at relatively high speeds.

Alumni Diplomacy: Football and Bucks

Readers turning to the center of this week's edition will find four full pages devoted to Villanova football from the standpoint of the University's alumni. Facts, figures, opinions, suggestions, quotes, demands and solutions to the issue can be found on the pages. This supplement is a joint effort of the Villanovan and the alumni, particularly members of the Committee to Restore Football. Within every group, there is a vocal minority willing to do the majority of work. Of the 45,000-plus alumni, there are approximately 9,000 active in Villanova affairs in one way, shape or form. Of that 9,000, the dozen or so members of the Committee to Restore Football undertook the project of outlining, correlating, coordinating and organizing all possible avenues to explore concerning football restoration.

There are approximately 15,000 words expressing the heartfelt views of many on the single most divisive issue at Villanova: football.

The alumni have often been forgotten, thought of only when monetary contributions have been necessary. Now, many of them have adopted the attitude Peter Finch took in the movie Network: "I'm mad as hell and I'm not going to take it anymore." Those who have uttered this protestation are engaging in what can be labeled as "checkbook diplomacy."

Morally sound or not, the facts are these: the number of donors has steadily risen, but the amount of actual cash gifts given has not risen proportionally. This can be attributed to the football controversy and the Board of Trustees stubborn views about restoration.

An example: a potential donor tendered a pledge of more than $500,000 based on two conditions, one being that it be used in some way for football. More than one month after the offer was received, the University has not contacted this willing benefactor. And that is just one example of what can be viewed as prevalent feeling among the alumni.

Admittedly, the alumni have been stubborn in their efforts toward football restoration at the I-AA level. But this obstinacy is the ear mark of dedication. Surely the University must recognize this dedication of former Villanova students and judge it as highly and as reverently as the opinions and decisions rendered by the ruling class of Villanova, the Board of Trustees.

Op-Eds: Chance For Expression

The Villanovan, as the newspaper of record for Villanova University, is designed to function as a voice for all the various people who compose the University: the students, faculty, administrators and alumni. Recognizing that within a community as large and diverse as this, there exists an almost endless variety of opinions and recognizing, too, that we cannot possibly express them all ourselves, we invite any and all who are interested to present their thoughts, opinions and beliefs on our Op-Ed page.

Submissions can be on almost any topic and do not have to be limited to subjects directly affecting the Villanova community. They should be no less than 400 words and no more than 1,000, and all op-eds must be received at the Villanovan office in Dougherty Hall by 2 p.m. on Tuesdays.

We sincerely hope that you will take advantage of this opportunity to have a forum for your views.

Paying for Alcoholic Mistakes

To the Editor:

Almost a year has passed now — but I still feel the pain. I still cry often, and I still believe that she'll be coming home someday.

It was a party just like any other party — all were getting excited because it was the first fraternity party of the year. Some didn't drink, some drank a little, and many drank a lot. There was dancing, drinking, talking and more drinking, and then it was time to go home — only Monica never made it home — and she never will again. One of the many who drank too much thought nothing of his getting behind a wheel and driving back to campus. Only the stop sign wasn't there, for his eyes were blurred by alcohol.

This is just a letter to beg you all to think before you drink. There are so many who would be strongly affected by your death — so many that would be affected if you killed someone else. It's often difficult to visualize a situation until you are placed in the center and then you begin to view it from the inside looking out. My sister was a special girl who was taken from this world without reason — she is paying for someone else's mistake — and so am I. Don't make others pay for your mistakes. Realize that the pain of death lingers so much longer than the pleasure of alcohol.

Inconsiderate

To the Editor:

Have you ever tried to get out the East door of Dougherty Hall, heading toward Vasey or the Field House? During change of classes? In the rain?

You find, of course, that thoughtless (or worse) people have parked so as to narrow the pedestrian passage to single file.

It would be nice if the drivers who have been given parking privileges would think of others, as well as their own, convenience. (I don't, however, expect this to happen. Man's inhumanity to man is boundless).

May I suggest, therefore, that our multifarious construction projects include the building of barriers to prevent obnoxious parkers?

More on Alcohol

To the Editor:

In a Villanovan article last Spring, the administration stated that the two most pressing issues facing the Administration were those concerning the reinstatement of football and the alcohol policy. The football issue has yet to be resolved, but a new alcohol policy has been put into effect. In short, the new policy mandates that no beer kegs are allowed on campus, and that no alcohol may be served at any on-campus functions sponsored by student organizations. The Administration stated that the stricter policy is the direct result of pressure exerted on the University by the state Liquor Control Board. According to Dr. Richard Neville, the vice president for student life, this solution, while being far from ideal, is, in the face of the state liquor law, the only choice that the Administration has. Neville goes on to state that students should be able to socialize without consuming alcoholic beverages.

There are several discrepancies in the statements released by the Administration concerning the alcohol policy. First, the revised policy is not the only feasible solution available to the Administration. Parties could be sponsored by student organizations at which only upperclassmen are admitted. Partygoers would surrender their student ID's at the door. If any student acted in an unruly manner, their names could be placed on a "black list" and they would not be admitted to future parties. This is the practice at many liquor-serving establishments in Pennsylvania, and at several other campuses; Holy Cross College is a prime example of the latter. If bars, which come under much closer scrutiny by the LCB than college campuses, can operate in such a manner, there is no reason why Villanova can't follow suit.

Another solution would be to have bring-your-own parties, at which all students may be admitted. This is the current practice at St. Joseph's University. The Administration could not come under fire from the LCB, as the organization sponsoring the party is not serving any alcohol.

While Dr. Neville's statement that alcohol is not a necessary part of social activities is true, it has become customary for alcohol to be served at social functions. Throughout the history of Western civilization, from the days of the Roman Empire to the present, virtually all adult gatherings, ranging from Monday night football socials to funerals, have one thing in common — alcohol is consumed by all adults, whether 18 years of age or 88. As was said of the Prohibition, one can't outlaw custom; if students can't have beer socials on campus, they will simply do their drinking off-campus. There are a number of local bars that are lax on enforcing the state liquor laws. Furthermore, students can obtain forged ID's in any one of several ways, all of which involve little, if any, monetary cost. If students are able to hold beer socials on campus, the incentive to go off-campus for the express purpose of obtaining alcohol will be lowered a great deal. This is the situation at Penn and Drexel, where parties are held that are open to all students. Isn't it strange that these institutions can hold beer socials and not be cited by the LCB?

A Division

To the Editor:

It has been my experience over the past three years that the main problem with Villanova's stricter enforcement of the Student Conduct Code is that the student body has become divided more clearly into two groups: on-campus and off campus residents. The off-campus resident, generally a junior or senior, has the freedom to experience a healthy, mature social life. The on-campus student, mostly freshman and sophomores, lead a disappointingly

Student Pressures

By TIM HANLON

Although Villanova University has an extremely low suicide rate, incoming freshmen as well as upperclassmen face many tensions. "Anxiety, followed by depression, are the most common issues facing college students," according to Dr. Joan G. Whitner, director of counseling and career services at Villanova.

Students are bothered by anxiety and depression as a result of overwhelmed feelings and a sense of hopelessness about the future because of a change in environment and relationships.

The counseling center reaches out to all students, especially incoming freshmen. At orientation the center conducted a half hour session concerning how a counseling center staff can assist students. Their goal is to be recognized as being there whenever a student has difficulties and to dissolve away any threatening feelings a student might have about seeing a counselor or psychologist.

The counseling center has approached students throughout the year encouraging them to consider its resources. They sponsor programs in dormitories and student organizations, approximately eight to twelve per semester, and discuss appropriate topics concerning young adults such as "intimacy" and "dealing with parents."

The transition from home life to college life is a major factor that affects a student's morale. Childhood relations start to diminish and the interdependence with parents changes, Whitney claimed, and a shifting of friends to make room for new relationships occurs.

Commuter students must often work harder to achieve a new focus. The temptation to hold on to old relationships is greater, and the fact that the student may still live with their parents might aggravate the situation, as the transition from adolescence to adulthood affects relationships at home, Whitney stated. Some students may become closer with their parents while others may feel more alienated.

The counseling center tries to identify problems that disturb students, whether a confrontation with an old girlfriend or boyfriend, or with a roommate.

A student must learn to adjust to community living situations, and establish their own values since this is probably the first time they have ever had to make so many decisions, claimed Whitney. "Going home on weekends is not always the best thing to do. The center might encourage a freshman to go home a couple of times during the fall semester although each freshman has their own needs."

Establishing interpersonal relationships is also a barrier for students to surpass. "Students face the constant fear of rejections when meeting new people and might withdraw," said Whitney. "Academic stresses also burden students since college patterns for studying are different than what the student did in high school."

Signs that a student may show when they are under a dangerously high level of pressure or anxiety include withdrawal from friends and family, alcohol abuse, insomnia, too much sleep, belligerent changes in behavior and apathy in attending class.

Many students do make use of Villanova's counseling center. Freshman and senior years are the two major transition periods for a person in college and are therefore they are the most frequent in seeking advice, according to Whitney.

The counseling staff consists of three part time psychologists with male and female psychologists available.

bland and restricted social life as a result of Villanova's disconcern for replacing the "party" social life with any other kind. If the Administration wants to be a police force they had better find more diversions for the inmates as well. I see nothing healthy or interesting in a campus where weekends lack parties, dances, concerts, visiting speakers . . . even a library that's open at night. Rather, I see the freshman and sophomores, who have been separated from a familiar, strong social life at home for the first time, bored and hateful of the social situation that their University has provided.

Bicycle Safety

To The Editor:

This letter is addressed to anyone who owns a bicycle and it concerns the matter of bicycle security. Villanova may seem like an idyllic community to some, but like all other communities, Villanova is plagued with the problem of thieves. I, unfortunately, was reminded of that fact last Friday when my bicycle was stolen from inside the doorway at Campus Ministry.

It sounds like the usual scenario for a bike theft to occur and it unfortunately did occur. Anyway, I would like to remind everyone of the importance of securing your bikes, even if you are going to be a minute somewhere. If you don't have a lock, then carry your bike with you because thieves don't care if you are in the Connelly Center or the chapel. If they see an unsecured bike, they will steal it. I hope that my bicycle will be the last bicycle stolen at Villanova this year. I also hope that the thief uses and enjoys my/his bicycle as much as I did.

I am offering a reward for any information leading to the return of my bicycle. It is a white Univega, Sportour, with blue brake cables and a loose blue tape on the handle bars, a black contoured seat, silver Zefel air pump, silver water bottle holder with a cloudy plastic bottle with "Specialized" written in blue on it, and I have a yellow tool pouch under the seat. This reward is offered with no questions asked. If anyone has information, please contact me at 642-5376.

Why Apologize

To the Editor:

In reply to the editorial in the Sept. 16 issue which criticized the Villanovan for printing a Planned Parenthood FYI, I'd like to ask why you felt it necessary to apologize? Has the Villanovan become a censor bureau?

Yes, Villanova is a Catholic University, but it is not located in the Soviet Union. This is a country where freedom of the press and the freedom to advertise should be granted to all organizations and individuals. The issue here is not whether abortion is moral. The issue, which Mr. Jacobs failed to realize in his editorial is that all people have a right to be informed. Planned Parenthood is simply trying to do this. This organization is merely trying to benefit those in need of counseling. In the long run, the individual will make her own decision regarding the outcome of her pregnancy, whether it be corresponding to the view of the Catholic church or not. It would be ridiculously idealistic to suggest that because Villanova is a Catholic University there exists no need for pregnancy counseling. In fact it is Christian responsibility to counsel those in need of professional help.

Challenging The Channel's Current

By NANCY C. ALBERICI

"Oh you set your course for the furthest shores. And you never once looked back."
— Al Stewart
"The Dark and Rolling Sea"

Among the best endurance swimmers in the world, 1981 Villanova University graduate, Tom Popdan, successfully completed the famed 20.9-mile English Channel swim on Aug. 3 in 14.25 hours.

After two unsuccessful attempts, because of heavy rains and gales, Mother Nature finally gave Popdan a break and allowed the super swimmer to make his dream a reality.

The idea of the Channel challenge was first presented to Popdan by Dave Rowan, and avid Villanova University men's swimming supporter. Terming himself a "goal-oriented guy," Popdan accepted Rowan's advice and made more his goal simply, "to make it to the other side."

After his rigorous year-long training program, stormy conditions impeded Popdan from attempting his first Channel swim in September 1981. During his second attempt in August of 1982, Popdan was forced to discontinue his swim three miles from the shoreline, because of a storm which continued to increase in severity.

However, Popdan did not allow the weather to prevent him from achieving his goal. Setting his sights on the finish, he returned last July and once again experienced heavy rains and high winds.

Tom Popdan

Popdan anxiously spent the four days prior to his final attempt glued to local television weather forecasts. "I was sitting in front of the television waiting and hoping that I would get a good wind forecast," said Popdan.

A favorable forecast was reported for Aug. 3, and in the dark of that morning Popdan prepared himself for the swim. "I greased up the boat, waved 'hi' to the photographers and took off," Popdan recalled.

A major problem Popdan faced during the first five hours of the swim was his tendency to swallow salt water. "I was struggling for the first four to five hours taking in a lot of salt water from the swells," said Popdan.

Throughout the remainder of the swim, Popdan filled his mind with positive thoughts, hoping they would outweigh the physical and mental trauma he was experiencing. "I constantly convinced myself that negative things are positive things. The sun is giving me warmth even though the water is making my body temperature drop to hypothermia levels," stated Popdan.

In addition to the problem Popdan faced involving salt water intake, the French current changed and went against him two miles from the French coast. Through the opposing current it took Popdan three and a half hours to complete one mile that would have taken 20 minutes under normal conditions. "It was a real effort to take every stroke," Popdan explained.

A mile from the coast, hypothermia set in, causing Popdan to become incoherent.

During the remainder of the swim, Popdan's father, who accompanied him in the boat, shouted words of encouragement to his son, Popdan attributes his success to his father's encouragement.

As Popdan neared the French coast, he was greeted by cheering spectators who urged him on to the finish by counting his strokes. "They realized I was experiencing difficulty, and they were trying to help me by counting," recalled Popdan.

Still feeling the effects of the hypothermia, Popdan disoriented, crawled to shore unaware of his victory, while the French spectators milled about him.

During the trip back to the English coast, Popdan fell asleep in the boat and didn't realize he had completed his goal until he awoke an hour later. "It was a nice satisfying feeling to know that I made it. At the same time it was strange because it left me without a goal. I'll simply have to get another goal," Popdan added.

For most people, finding a goal, let alone achieving one, is a difficult task. For Popdan, swimming the English Channel is just the beginning.

Profs Expand C.A. Program

At a time when the faculty at many universities is being cut back, the communication arts department at Villanova has been continually expanding. It is now entering its sixth year as a concentration and fourth year as a major, offering 16 courses to choose from. It has also added two assistant professors with extensive backgrounds in communication to increase the faculty size to 13 — Edward V. Springer and Richard F. Welch.

Springer received his bachelor of arts degree in speech communication from Ohio State University, his master's degree from the University of Kentucky and is currently writing his dissertation (titled "Interactional Plans and the Use of Discourse Procedures in Interpersonal Influence Attempts") in speech communication for the University of Illinois at Urbana — Champaign.

He has worked as both a graduate teaching assistant and graduate research assistant at the Universities of Kentucky and Illinois. He also served during the Vietnam War as a preventive medicine instructor at the U.S. Army Medical Field Service School in Texas.

Welch received his bachelor of arts degree in journalism from Duquesne University and both his master's degree in mass communication and doctoral degree in speech communication from the University of Denver.

Besides instructing, he is a co-owner of Directions Research Corporation, a company he started in Denver in 1981. He has also served as a graduate teaching assistant and adjunct instructor at the University of Denver for three years. From 1969 to 1973 he acted as a photo intelligence specialist for the U.S. Air Force in both Thailand and Vietnam during the war.

Springer first became interested in Villanova because of its "reputation of quality people and students" and because he thought it would be an interesting experience. Currently he is teaching "Fundamentals of Public Speaking" and will start teaching "Communication Theory" next semester.

Welch said he accepted the job at Villanova because it "provided me with an opportunity to develop courses of my own. People here seem to take a genuine interest in me," he added. He is also teaching "Fundamentals of Public Speaking" and will start a new series of courses titled "Special Topics in Communication" in January, which will cover a different subject matter each semester. Next semester's course will be subtitled "Advertising and Public Relations."

Both feel it is more advantageous to major in communications in general rather than specializing in one area such as journalism or mass communication. "Villanova and other schools like it carry a curriculum with a broad, well-rounded program where one isn't so technically fit that there's only one specific area he can fit into," said Springer. "A person majoring in communications must be able to translate to different kinds of needs," he added. "Someone majoring in journalism might have trouble getting a job in public relations, for example. He would have to be able to show an executive that he doesn't just know one style of writing and that he could function within a public relations setting."

When asked why communications has seemed to gain more attention in recent years, Welch said. "As society becomes more diverse, those in control feel the need of controlling

Students Advise Small Businesses

By CAROLYN MILLER

How does a small business handle the "big problem" of pending bankruptcy? If located on or near the Main Line, they can contact a group of C&F student consultants, who belong to Villanova's chapter of the Small Business Consultants (SBC).

This consulting organization consists of about 125 business and finance students who tackle the problems of real businesses.

"The normal procedure is for the students of each group to meet with their clients about six to eight times," says senior Jane Tirrell, president of SBC. "We like to deal with the clients in their own territory, so we can get the feel of how to handle their problems," she says.

The list of area-businesses to be consulted this school term include a manufacturer, a retailer, a computer company, a transportation company, a health agency and a supermarket. Most of the businesses are for profit.

Jane Tirrell, president of the SBC and J. J. Clarke, moderator.

Members of the SBC are all C&F juniors and seniors. "They are selected according to what their interests and backgrounds are, and how well they react in certain situations," says Tirrell.

These students receive no monetary compensation for efforts. However, the students do earn actual-working experience, which is an important asset when seeking employment.

The SBC are backed by both the faculty of the College of Commerce and Finance and the U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) Clients are found both through the SBA and by contacts the students themselves make with businesses looking for help.

Whether the problems are as simple as setting up bookkeeping systems or as complex as marketing a new product line, the work is done by the students with the help of faculty and SBA advisors.

The new moderator for the SBC is Dr. James J. Clarke, associate professor of Economics. According to Clarke, the student consulting firm "appears to be an excellent experience because it involves real world cases."

He explains that, "Textbook cases are close-ended. In the real world of business consulting, things do not work out as theory suggests."

The Small Business Consultants, whose office is located in Sheehan 104, have a contract with the SBA to handle ten cases per year. Approximately ten to twelve students work on each case over a two month period.

Tour Group Visits Poland-U.S.S.R.

By SUE FRENCH

While most of Villanova joined in the summer exodus-to-the-shore, a few of us had to be content with an occasional weekend pilgrimage to Wildwood or Sea Isle. Something about vacation lifestyle at the shore keeps us coming back-the people we meet on vacation are friendly and fun. Underground Solidarity members are friendly people too. So are Soviet Jews. Soviets party a lot. Just ask one of the ten Villanova students who spent a month this summer in the USSR and Poland.

From Leningrad to Moscow Kiev, Lvov, Krakow, Zakopane and Warsaw, a group led by Dr. Jeff Hahn, associate professor of political science, followed a planned official tour, last summer. Despite a full schedule and an obvious language barrier, Jim Schlatter managed to take in a few plays, and Eileen McGrath found time to "hang out" in Red Square.

Hahn, an authority on the Soviet Union, made a few contacts at the Academy of Sciences in Moscow, where he hopes to do future research.

McGrath, a senior political science major, spent time in Red Square just watching people. "It's almost like seeing the "very formal looking, very beautiful." McGrath spoke of a constant line waiting outside to see Lenin's body. "Two people at a time, hands at side, no cameras, no stopping - you look as you're walking around the body," she commented.

Back out on the street, Soviets who immediately recognize you as a Westerner offer five times the official exchange rate for hard currency. "Other than caviar and vodka, there's not that much to buy in the stores," said McGrath.

In Warsaw, a friend told Schlatter of an underground production by former Solidarity members who write and produce their own material. One night Schlatter's friend took him to the lounge of a youth center in Warsaw where they joined an audience of six or seven others in viewing a dramatic production dealing with growing up under Communist rule.

A group of students, including McGrath, were invited to dinner one evening at the apartment of a Soviet Jewish family. "The apartment," said McGrath, "was the size of about one-and-a-half Sheehan rooms, and was filled with a bed, sofa, dining room table and chairs." A tiny bathroom and kitchen completed the home. What struck McGrath as ironic in an otherwise suffocating scene were the original oil paintings by Soviet dissident artists that lined the walls. "The Soviet people are incredibly open-hearted - they have nothing, but everything they have is yours," sighed McGrath.

Hahn, who had not visited the Soviet Union since 1969, remarked of the trip, "It reaffirmed for me how much I enjoy Slavic people - Any American image of them is cold, gray, dull - I find Russian people to be colorful, warm, and gay, once you get beyond the mask of formality they wear. They seem to appreciate the finer qualities of life - literature, theatre, art . . ." He tells a story of hiring three Gurali, ("Wild mountain men," as Hahn fondly refers to them.) natives of the mountains around Zakopane with a history of resisting outside order. The scene Hahn goes on to describe is one of high-spirited men singing native music as the moon rose over the mountains and everyone roasted kielbasa and potatoes over an open campfire.

The Pope said Mass for the beautification of two 19th century priests in a huge park outside of Krakow. Said Hahn, "He sopke of these two Poles who had died before they saw a free Poland - one almost thought he was talking about himself.

"Sometimes you get the feeling that Poles are allowed the illusion of freedom, as a kind of pacifer," observed Schlatter. The lack of freedom behind the Iron Curtain was apparent to Hahn's group when they were passing through East Berlin to West Berlin. Ignoring instructions not to take pictures when crossing over the border, a student did so anyway. Said Hahn, "The guards came out when the train stopped, confronted the student, opened his camera and destroyed the film . . . it was just like something out of a spy thriller set in Germany."

By BARBARA HAENN

It was 10 p.m. on a summer night. My co-worker and I had been giving out sandwiches and juice to some "Street People" who had been living around Independence Mall in Philadelphia. Approaching a doorway of Independence Hall, I found a man named John who was a migrant field worker making his way from Ohio to New Jersey, looking for a job picking peaches. John was a man in his 70's, shy but friendly. He had little money with him and would be sleeping that night in the doorway of that building. As we spoke and gave John some food, another man approached us asking if we had any more food. The sandwich bag was now empty and so the reply was "no." John, without a moment's hesitation divided his food, giving the man half of his portion. Unusual behaviour? Not at all.

My summer's work was a brief exposure to a population that continues to grow, not only in Philadelphia but in all the major cities of our country. The homeless in Philadelphia alone are estimated to be 8000 in number . . . a population that has exploded in the last year due to the economy in general and the cutbacks in welfare, social security and unemployment benefits. By estimates of the Philadelphia Committee for the Homeless, it's thought that there are more than 2000 people who live in the Subway System alone.

Feeling quite a part of Villanova University, I found myself wondering how I was going to connect these two worlds together . . . two worlds that were as different, in many ways, as two foreign countries.

To be honest, I found it very difficult to relate to the world of Villanova while I walked the streets of Philadelphia. One world was so focused on succeeding while the other was centered on surviving. Building vs. gluing, competing vs. existing, too much food vs. too little, garbage wasting vs. garbage picking.

Returning to Villanova in August left me in "limbo" until the students returned and our intense and enthusiastic discussions resumed. It became obvious that there is a very real link that connects these worlds together. Here at school we have almost unlimited resources at our disposal to reach out and help the members of our family that live in the streets of Philadelphia. We have soon not only be feeling the problem of food and housing shortages but will also be living outside in temperatures that most of us couldn't begin to tolerate.

Last winter, Campus Ministry began to sponsor the work of three committees under the umbrella title of Villanova Committee for the Homeless that would directly and indirectly work with the problems of the homeless. This work varied from campus work (educational and fund raising) to direct service in the City. We hope to continue and expand this work this year.

If you would like to make this a part of your Villanova life, there will be an information meeting on September 28th, Wednesday at 6 p.m. in St. Rita's Chapel. All interested students, faculty and staff are invited to participate.

Greeks Celebrate Fall

Villanova fraternities and sororities usher in the fall with their second annual Greek Weekend. This four day event will feature fun, competition and a rededication to the spiritual commitment of the Greeks. This year's Greek Weekend, organized by Cathy Poillon of AXΩ, will begin on Thursday, September 29, with the Tug of War event. This event will be held on Austin Field at 4 pm. The fraternities and sororities will be competing throughout the weekend for points towards Greek Week in the spring.

Thursday night, Greeks will be participating in "Fraternity Feud," hosted by a fraternity member. The players will be guessing the answers to questions concerning Villanova students and campus life. These answers were obtained through a recent survey of Villanovans.

Friday, Greeks will display their fraternity and sorority colors by wearing their Greek letters during the day.

Join the fraternities and sororities on Saturday at Mendel Field for a picnic, jointly sponsored by the Villanova Union, the Panhellenic Council and the Inter fraternity Council. Entertainment will be provided by "Alien." Hamburgers, hotdogs and soft drinks will be sold.

On Sunday afternoon, fraternities and sororities may gain points by participating in such "fun" games as an ice cream eating contest and an obstacle course, all to be held on the Sullivan-Sheehan quad. Greek Weekend will end with an all-Greek mass in the Main Chapel on Sunday afternoon at 4 p.m.

Everyone, Greek and non-Greek, are invited to attend these events and join the fun. It is a great opportunity to see and experience, first hand, the fun and enthusiasm that comes with fraternity and sorority membership.

Greek Week fun.

Kappa Alpha Theta Colonizes at V.U.

Kappa Alpha Theta National Fraternity for Women pledged 32 women last week to form their new colony at Villanova. These women were chosen after a three day program during which they participated in an informational meeting, personal interviews and a standard bidding process. The events were capped off on Thursday evening with the traditional Pledging Ceremony.

The new members of the "Theta" Colony include: Betsy Bennett, Lisa Capanna, Deborah Cogshall, Kelly Deegan, Kristine Djuvik, Janet Donegan, Jane Dorisio, Therese Dwyer, Kathleen Fetzer, Tracy Haushalter, Paula Kaye, Kim Kramer, Mindy Levengood, Megan Long, Colleen Lynch, Lisa Masone, Sheila McGuire, Kim McCue, Kit Monges, Heather O'Connor, Dawn Oliver, Suzanne Paradise, Kim Phipps, Julie Quigley, Renee Radovich, Mary Ann Rica, Suzanne Schwind, Mary Scott, Trish Sheils, Joanne Skevington, Sharon Tremenwen and Betty Jo Zbrzeznj.

These women will now participate in an intensive nine week pledge program and on Nov. 19, 1984, they will be formally initiated as sisters of Kappa Alpha Theta, and the colony will be chartered as the Epsilon Xi Chapter of the national sorority.

The new Theta pledges began their first week of activities with a "Kite Fly" on campus. This event marked the opening and dedication of the national sorority's new headquarters building in Indianapolis and was done by all Kappa Alpha Theta chapters across the country.

Kappa Alpha Theta, the oldest national fraternity for women, was founded in 1870. It is dedicated to achievement in scholarship, the promotion of leadership, participation in service projects and the fostering of true friendships that will last long after college.

This "Theta" chapter will be the national sorority's 104th chapter, and it will be the sixth sorority at Villanova. Completing its installation by November will allow the "Thetas" to participate fully in the Panhellenic Rush Program in January of this academic year.

The "Rush" Begins

Here at Villanova, fraternities and some of the sororities have begun their fall rush, that is, the process of getting acquainted with prospective new members. Each chapter throws several rush parties or meetings which interested individuals, the rushees, may attend. Here the rushees have the opportunity to meet the brothers and/or sisters of the organization, find out about its goals and purpose and decide whether or not they would like to join the group if they are extended an invitation.

Meanwhile, the members of the organization get a chance to get to know all the rushees better.

For most of these groups, this is only one of two rushes that they will hold this year. There will also be another one at the beginning of next semester. For the sororities, this is an informal rush and is only open to sophomores, juniors and seniors. In January, they will hold a formal rush in which everyone will be able to participate.

During the formal rush, which is organized by the Panhellenic Association, every rushee will be required to register, to pay a minimal registration fee and to attend an informational meeting during which she will learn about the rush process. Later on that week, she will begin a whirlwind of party-going.

On the first night, she will attend six parties, one given by each of the sororities on campus. After that, she may choose to go back to any of the other parties to which she is invited. At the end of the rushing period, invitations to membership are extended by the sororities and are matched with the rushee's listed preferences. A mutual interest results in pledging.

Pledging, for both groups is the period when new members of an organization begin to learn all the benefits of being in a fraternity or sorority. They experience the brotherhood or sisterhood, the service projects, the social life and the opportunity to participate and to excel in the areas of academics, leadership and athletics.

Any individual interested in "going Greek" or who wants to find out more about it can contact the Office of Student Aetivities. Formal rush registration for women begins Nov. 1 and there is an Informational meeting on Nov. 16.

Be unique . . . Go Greek!

Sigma Nu Fraternity Receives Charter

Saturday, September 17th marked the formal installation and chartering of the Kappa Zeta Chapter of Sigma Nu National Fraternity at Villanova. Formerly two separate local fraternities - Zeta Rho and Alpha Nu Omega - Sigma Nu capped off a year of hard work and preparation with the festivities of last weekend.

After the formal ritual on Saturday morning, when 43 undergraduate and alumni brothers were initiated into the fraternity, a reception was held in the Connelly Center. Parents, friends and distinguished guests joined in honoring the new chapter.

Later that evening, a formal installation banquet was held in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. Guests included Harry Wilcott, the Vice Regent of Sigma Nu National Fraternity and the Executive Vice President of the John Hancock Insurance Company: Mo Littlefield, the Executive Director of Sigma Nu Fraternity; and Mike Boyd, the National Fraternity's Chapter Consultant to the Villanova Chapter. Other dignitaries included Dr. Richard Neville, Villanova's Vice President for Student Life; the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., Dean of Students; Gary Bonas, the Assistant Director of Student Activities and the Director of Fraternity/Sorority Affairs; and Dr. Oliver Ludwig, the Chapter's Faculty Advisor.

The evening's program included comments from Bonas, Littlefield, Wilcot and Ludwig and were highlighted by the formal presentation of the chapter's charter.

Sigma Nu is Villanova's eighth fully-chartered national fraternity. The Kappa Zeta chapter is the national's 213th chapter across the country. Founded in 1869 at the Virginia Military Institute, in Lexington, Virginia, Sigma Nu still continues its "tradition of honor."

A two-part mini-lecture series, "Main Line Communications: A Personal View" will be held Sept. 26 and 27 from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. in the Villanova room of the Connelly Center.

Sponsored by Villanova University and the Main Line Chamber of Commerce, this event will be moderated by the Communication Department Chairperson, Warren O. Richardson and Villanova professor Dr. Teresa Nance.

Various Main Line communication representatives will contribute to the forum, including Villanova professor, Michael Pearson who will speak on the future of the communication industry.

Special Committee Votes 8-1 to Restore Football at I-AA

By DON CREAMER, '70

A special committee appointed by the Board of Trustees voted 8-to-1 to recommend a grant-in-aid Division 1AA inter-collegiate football level for consideration by the University's Trustees. The recommendation came at a presentation by the special committee to the Board on June 28.

In a move toward resolving what has become perhaps the most divisive issue in the University's 141-year history, the Board of Trustees took the first significant step by appointing the special committee on Dec. 14, 1982. The committee had been charged to make its report to the Board, so the latter can reconsider its April 14, 1981 decision dropping football, by no later than December, 1983.

Villanova versus Cincinnati.

The Reverend Edward J. McCarthy, O.S.A. (Chairman of the Board of Trustees), chaired the special committee. McCarthy appointed the committee from among the University's major constituencies, comprising the following:

Assisting the special committee were James Brown, athletic business manager and Dr. Ted Aceto, athletic director.

In its inaugural meeting on Feb. 24, the special committee was presented with three criteria from the Board of Trustees to guide the committee in its deliberations and recommendation:

1. Financial Sustainability, i.e. an annual net operating cost to the University in reasonable proportion to the total athletic budget of the University.

2. Consistency with the University's Mission Statement and its academic goals and standards.

3. Attractiveness to the various segments of the University constituency. The committee's work centered on how effectively each of the four NCAA-approved levels of competition (1A, 1AA, II, and III) met the three criteria established by the Board.

McCarthy noted for the committee that it was his feeling that in many respects the financial issue was of paramount importance inasmuch as the financial losses occasioned by the football program were ultimately what had precipitated the Board action in April of 1981 to discontinue football as an inter-collegiate sport at Villanova.

During the initial portion of the Special Committee's review, McCarthy told the Committee that any proposal considered by the Board must be reasonable in its cost to the University and, as a guideline, suggested that $150,000 to $200,000 annually would be a reasonable level of cost for an inter-collegiate football program. The proposal which has been prepared and is recommended by the Special Committee requires a University contribution for athletic grant-in-aids of exactly $150,000 — less than .3 of one percent of the University's total budget.

Level 1A requires minimums in stadium seating capacity and attendance at home games over a specified number of past consecutive seasons that Villanova had not and could not now meet. Qualification under 1A, therefore, became moot, and the committee considered the three remaining levels: 1AA, II and III.

The Division II level was discussed briefly by the committee, and it was their decision that II failed to meet at least two of the criteria: academic parity (most schools participating in II are state-supported), and it was considered highly unlikely that significant constituencies (alumni and students) would support a Division II program.

Discussion of Division III established that while III has the potential for providing association with some Universities of comparable academic parity (e.g. Fordham and Georgetown) concern was again expressed with respect to constituency support and Division III was rejected.

As a result of these discussions, the special committee focused on the 1AA Division level. It promised to meet all criteria set forth by the Trustees. To assist the committee in reviewing specific information regarding potential revenues and expenses, McCarthy suggested that Gary Fenner, university vice-president for financial affairs, gather financial information for the committee's review. Subsequently, a sub-committee consisting of Fenner, Creamer, DesJardins, Tufano, Aceto, Brown and McCarthy met to prepare a detailed proforma of those expenses and revenues which would be associated with a Division 1AA level of inter-collegiate football at Villanova.

On March 24, 1983, the Special Committee met to review the detailed proforma proposal covering expenses and revenues associated with the reinstatement of an intercollegiate football program at Villanova at the Division 1AA level. Brown and Aceto who had assisted the Financial Subcommittee in the preparation of the proposal information were invited to attend so that all members of the Special Committee might have the opportunity to review the financial implications of the detailed proposal which had been developed. The Committee devoted the entire meeting to a line-by-line review of the proposal and identified specific areas of concern with respect to the proposal which the Committee felt required additional documentation/support information.

The Rev. Edward McCarthy, O.S.A.

Pursuant to the review of the proposal, the Committee concluded that essential to the successful reinstatement of football at Villanova would be the appropriate selection of a head coach and consistent and uniform leadership and support from the University's Administration. It was the Committee's feeling that these elements would ensure that any football program would reflect properly on the University and remain consistent with the University's mission statement, as well as its academic goals and standards.

The Committee concluded this meeting by agreeing to spend some additional time refining/documenting the proposal to restore football to Division 1AA level, and to develop an implementation program to include in the Committee's report to the Board

Class of '84 Recalls Football

The current Villanova seniors, the class of 1984, are the last group of students on campus to see Villanova football. Each student remembers football differently. Some recall their favorite games, others the memories associated with the Saturday event. Three seasons after the sport was dropped, student's feelings remain strong about the game that was snatched away April 14, 1981. Here is what the Class of 1984 says:

"I miss football. I miss the atmosphere."

Marianne Schaab

"Villanova is not a true University without football."

Kyle Foley

"I remember the Homecoming Game against Boston College — it was great. There should be college football here on Saturdays."

John Thacker

Bob Hoch appeared in Philadelphia, Dec. 1, 1982 to raise funds for reinstatement of the 87 year tradition.

"I'm not even a football fan but I miss it. I came over from England and didn't know the sport but I miss it."

Kevin Kelly

"There is nothing to give school spirit. Something's missing in the fall. I was up here last Saturday and it was dead. It has turned into a commuter school."

Chris Bolendz

"We have nothing common with other schools. There is no comparing with other schools. We read about other schools but nothing about us.

Tom Hull

"I miss the electric atmosphere of Saturday afternoons. There was always an air of expectancy."

Larry Goanos

"Having a game to go to at Homecoming."

John Lavery

"What's college without football?"

Tony Hynes

"Beating Temple on the last day of the season put Villanova in the limelight for once in this area.

Mark Labrum

"I miss the Wildcat spirit of getting together on Saturdays."

Joanne Dollymore

"I thought the games were great."

Andy Bertony

"The best part was homecoming when we beat Boston College."

Greg Schratwieser

"I remember winning the last three games against Penn, Holy Cross and Temple, all by lopsided scores, to finish with the first winning record in several seasons."

Tickets Pledged

By Bud Russo, '52

An integral part of Villanova's sports program has been missing for the past two years. Of course, the missing sport I am referring to is football. The autumns at Villanova haven't been the same since the game was abruptly dropped by a few individuals without fully airing their concerns to those many who would have worked to meet those alleged problems. However, when asked point blank to be given the chance, these concerned alumni were refused.

The football program had problems, but none that couldn't have been solved with open communication. The alumni and the students were put at ease when the Labrecque Report had come out in support in football and felt that the $220,000 loss was not excessive for the number of campus oriented groups which benefited - the alumni, the students, the band, cheerleaders, annual giving and others.

However, little or nothing was done to help the problems, such as bettering the publicity or increasing the revenues by increasing the price of tickets, or upgrading the promotion of football. Also, certain members of the administration made sure that student participation was not encouraged.

Selection of teams to be played, could have been better. Instead of playing teams such as Clemson, Youngstown, and Toledo we should have concentrated on teams like Lehigh, William and Mary, Holy Cross, and the University of Pennsylvania - teams more on our competitive level and our background.

To emphasize just how much football is missed at Villanova, students voted overwhelmingly to have football reinstated. The vote was near 97% for football. The vote also included a referendum for $35 a year to go directly to the football program. This would mean an additional $225,000 to support the program when it returns. Now it is up to the ex-students, i.e. the alumni, to join in and support the students. This can be done by purchasing season tickets. It should be obvious to everyone that the days of the $5

Committee to Restore Football: Why? Who? What? When?

By WILLIAM THOMPSON '69

April 14, 1981—a day that will truly live in infamy in the history of Villanova University. On that bleak spring day the Board of Trustees, led by a small group of misguided clerics, voted to drop football. With that precipitious action they not only ended an 87 year tradition of excellence but also effectively managed to rupture the Villanova University Community.

To say that the action was sudden and unexpected would be a gross understatement. Just blocks from where the vote took place, brand new astroturf lay waiting for the opening game of 1981. In the parking area, new lights awaited placement so that a new dimension could be added to the football season — night games. On the very night of the vote the football staff was recruiting young men to represent our school; young men who would join the upper classmen who had already given one to three years of their dedication to the football team and who fully expected to finish out their careers in the newly refurbished stadium.

During that same spring, as during countless springs before, the Board of Directors of the Wildcat Club was involved in its efforts to raise funds for athletics at Villanova. At the meeting immediately preceding the fateful vote, the Club had discussed ways to help members of the baseball and swimming teams get rooms on the campus. The Wildcat Club has a long history of raising funds and helping athletes in any way that it can. The club had always tried to work hand in hand with the University Administration, having always believed that they had common goals and trust. But the football decision changed all that.

The football program had been axed with no forewarning, no chance for discussion, not even a courtesy call to let the club know that the sport's fate was under debate. This led the Wildcat Board to suspect that the Trustees believed there would be no organized dissent. It seemed that they felt that if the blow was catastrophic enough all would be too stunned to react. But the Trustees were wrong. Stunned though they were, the Wildcat Club quickly reacted.

Willie Sydnor (#21) versus U. of Mass.

First the club made an appeal for more time before the decision was made public. But this appeal fell on the deaf ears of Father Driscoll. The Board of Directors of the Wildcat Club then met in executive session and formed the committee to Restore Football. The Board of Directors of the Wildcat Club became the Board of Directors of the Committee to Restore Football. Thus, it was'nt the dropping of football alone that was unacceptable, even intolerable, but the stealthy, secretive manner in which it was done that forced the Wildcat club to review its goals and create the committee.

The decision to form the committee was far from an easy one. We did not ask to go head to head against the leaders of the University; it is not a task we relish. It is not easy to fight something you hold close to your heart as we all hold Villanova. It becomes even more difficult and complicated when, as products of a Catholic education, we find ourselves in an adversary position with the clergy. This is very foreign to the way most of us were brought up. However, we have had to look past the "collar" and realize that we are dealing with men, who, well-intentioned though they may be, are still men and can be as uninformed and misinformed as anyone else.

Once begun, we, the committee, planned and implemented a calculated campaign to again make our University whole. Our initial function was a gathering at the Covered Wagon to start a war chest. There was an admission fee of $50 which gave everyone a concrete means of showing his staunch support of our effort to restore football. The response was overwhelming.

We next felt that it was necessary to show the administration and the Board of Trustees the depth and breadth of our popular support by holding a truly meaningful and visible function. From this concept, "Hope for Villanova Football" was born; a grand scheme to bring Bob Hope to Philadelphia to perform a benefit for football. And on a rainy, dreary December evening, the Academy of Music was the place to be. There were gala cocktail parties before and after, and Bob Hope himself was magnificent. Every Villanovan who was there was proud that night

All of our activities were not as pleasant or as much fun as our evening with Bob Hope. On april 14, 1982 the General Alumni Association representing all of its clubs, took a step which might have been considered rash but one which the Alumni felt, unpleasant as it would be, had to be done. A press conference was held — the resignation of John Driscoll, O.S.A., as President of Villanova University was requested. Driscoll's role in the fateful decision has never been fully explained or defined but it is clear that his personal dislike of football and football players was pivitol in the decision — a decision that has caused more disenchantment in the Villanova Community than any other. It is a sad state of affairs when one man's prejudice, a man who's commitment in life is to serve others, has caused so much pain and frustration to others.

While the main objective has not been realized as yet, there was a real benefit to that press conference — a clear message was sent to the Board of Trustees that Alumni are serious and not just some fringe group that will fade away. The prevailing attitude before our press conference was that we were a small, albeit boisterous group, a mere annoyance. The conference made it clear that this was not the case.

It was not until the request for Driscoll's resignation that the lines of communications from the school began to open up. Since that time we have been allowed to make two presentations to the Board of Trustees and have engaged in numerous smaller meetings. At our last meeting with the Board of Trustees in June we were able to present a viable proposal for Villanova to field a team at the 1AA level through the joint efforts of the alumni, the students, and the administration. The specifics are set forth in another article in this paper; suffice it to say here that the proposal met all of the criteria set forth by the Board of Trustees and more importantly, it is financially feasible.

Thus far I've tried to answer the what, when, and why of our Committee and it's time to answer the who. Are we "heavy drinkers and ex-jocks" as one local tabloid described us, or are we loyal Villanovans who have had the courage to fight the current administration for the things we believe are right? You must decide for yourself.

Douglas J. Murray '61. Probably our most visible member, having acted as our spokesman throughout this entire period. He has given himself endlessly and has certainly been one of the key motivators in our quest. He is a past president of both the Wildcat Club and the General Alumni Association, an engineering school graduate, successful restauranteur, married with 6 children.

James W. Eastwood '68. Current president of the Wildcat Club. Graduate of the School of Engineering. Vice-President of Medifac, a firm in the medical field. Known as one of the basketball members of the Committee, Jim has a knack for keeping everyone loose with his irreverent humor while keeping us on track with his professionalism. He is a recent recipient of the Alumni Medal. Jim is married with three children.

Donald R. Creamer '70. In the last few months Don, more than anyone else, has spearheaded our efforts. He was a vocal member of the special committee formed by the Board of Trustees to study the football question, and thereafter was chosen to present the majority report to the entire Board of Trustees. Anyone who has heard Don speak knows that a finer selection could not have been made. With Don as our spokesman, victory is just around the corner. He is the Executive Vice President and Chief Operating Officer of the Frankford Hospital. Married with two children.

Charles W. Johnson '63. Well, we can't be perfect, we do have some ex-jocks. But I assure you we are all glad to have Charlie on our side. As a member of Villanova's last bowl team, Charlie has great insight into the problem, something none of the rest of us possess. He is a tireless worker and has certainly made the many hours we have spent together more pleasurable — Charlie can tell a story better than anyone I know. He is a key executive with Top Flight and is currently the 2nd vice-president of the Wildcat Club. Charlie is married with two children.

William M. Thompson '69. Your intrepid author. I guess I can best be described as one of the young turks on the committee. I don't say too much at meetings but when I do it's usually to plot a little revolution. I am currently the secretary of the Wildcat Club. District Counsel for the Small Business Administration, and I am married with three children.

Michael P. Manning '69. Michael is one of our detail men who accomplishes all of his tasks with a keen sense of professionalism. He is the one who thinks through that little extra detail that makes something perfect instead of just good. Michael is the current treasurer of the Club and his lovely wife, Liz, performs our secretarial tasks. Mike, a former Navy carrier pilot, is a commander in the Naval Reserve. He is currently an executive with the Mooney Products Company and has one child.

John E. Blatt '72. John is one of the new members of the committee having been selected this past January. He and his brother own Saco East. The committee, never too shy to latch on to a good thing, has been quick to utilize John's business acumen. His business expertise is invaluable in formulating new fund raising methods. John is single.

John C. Bruno, D.D.S. '64. John is truly the silent member of the committee; I suspect every successful board has one. An extremely supportive and hard working individual he lets his actions rather than words do his talking. Quiet though John is, he is an integral and irreplaceable member of our group. He is a successful dentist and single.

Michael J. Daly, Jr. '72. Oh well, here we go again, another ex-jock. Of course, Mike was a basketball player and went to the Final Four so perhaps we won't hold it against him. Mike assures us that while he played basketball, football has always been his

A 87-Year Tradition

By DON FICCO '58

Villanova football, which ceased to be an integral part of the University on the fateful April day two and a half years ago, enriched the lives of most who had at least some contact with it.

Villanova football began in 1894, had its ups-and-downs in the post-World War II portion of its history. The Wildcats, however, were still able to utilize their mascot's spirit, fireceness and alertness to compile an outstanding 87-year won-lost record of 383-337-40.

Future fans following restoration?

The Rev. Michael J. O'Donnell, O.S.A., took it upon himself to compile statistical histories of Villanova's athletic squads before his untimely death in 1969. His book, Villanova Football; A Statistical History, is the authentic and realistic description of Wildcat football from 1894 through the 1962 (Liberty Bowl) season.

Twenty-eight men have held the title of head football coach on the Main Line, and numerous others have been assistants. One of Notre Dame's 'Four Horsemen, Harry A. Stuhldreher, owns the longevity record for that position.

Stuhldreher, who coached from 1925 through 1935, compiled an 11-year record of 65-25-9.

The next coach in terms of longevity was Fred J. Crolius. His record was only 15-38-5 during his eight-year career, which ran from 1904 through 1911.

Two Wildcat grid coaches lasted seven years at the helm of the Blue and White Ship, and both were rather successful. Maurice J. (Clipper) Smith, the successor to Stuhldreher, whose teams won 41 games while losing 17 and tying 3, completed his stay at Villanova after the 1942 season.

The other seven-year mentor was Alex Bell, the most successful coach, at 35-30-0, in the last twenty years. His teams also went to a pair of post-season Bowl games.

Following Smith and Bell, there was Jordan Olivar, who, after seeing his teams post a six-year record of 33-20-2, went on to become a very successful coach at Yale University.

Francis X. (Frank) Reagan, the noted Penn gridder, also spent six years on the Main Line, and although his record was only 16-36, the Wildcats took on some of the finest teams in the country during that era, and despite losing, displayed impressive prowess at times.

Dick Bedesem, who was the coach at the time the University dropped the football program, also put in six seasons at his alma mater, winning 30 and losing 35 while tying one contest.

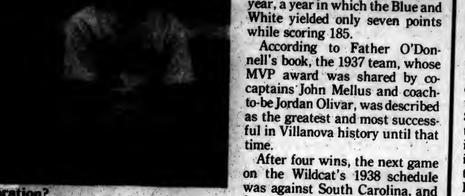
After the Stuhldreher era, which is the one that probably had the most impact on Villanova football, there were many successful coaches, although their terms on campus were not among the longer ones.

The two who come to mind most readily are Art Raimo (1951-1953) whose teams were 16-10-1, and James R. Leonard (1948-1949) whose teams won 12 of the 18 games scheduled in those two seasons. After these two was Jack Gregory (1967-68-69). His teams were a cumulative 16-13.

Gregory was followed by Lou Ferry. His first team, in 1970, was 9-2, but his tenure on campus saw his record fall to 20-23.

In another interesting part of Villanova football history, there was only one perfect season, and that was in the opening season of 1894 when the Villanovans won the only game on their schedule.

Despite some outstanding squads throughout the other 86 seasons, no Wildcat squad could ever duplicate that perfect season.



Dan Ziesel (#43) versus William and Mary.

In 1928, Stuhldreher's fourth squad was the next Villanova team with a chance to make the record books. It closed the season with only a tie against Temple to mar an otherwise perfect season t 7-0-1.

Clipper Smith's first team in 1936 finished with a 7-2-1 regular season record, good enough for Villanova's first post-season appearance, the Bacardi Bowl in Havana, Cuba (7-7 tie with Auburn).

That Wildcat team went 8-0-1, winning seven after the 0-0 game, which was the second game of the year, a year in which the Blue and White yielded only seven points while scoring 185.

According to Father O'Donnell's book, the 1937 team, whose MVP award was shared by co-captains John Mellus and coach-to-be Jordan Olivar, was described as the greatest and most successful in Villanova history until that time.

After four wins, the next game on the Wildcat's 1938 schedule was against South Carolina, and for the second straight year, Smith's squad saw its potentially perfect season clipped by another Southern eleven. The 6-6 game saw many big plays by Villanova, but only one, a 33-yard pass-run play - John Howlett to Frank Bukofski counted.

Again, Villanova came back to climax the season without losing, ending up 8-0-1 for the second year in a row, and putting together back-to-back unbeaten seasons and yet another national ranking.

There were a handful of single-loss seasons in Wildcat grid history, but the best of that lot was the 1949 team, the first under Jim Leonard, which was captained by Dan Brown to an 8-1 record.

In the two preceding seasons, under Coach Jordan Olivar, the Wildcats had posted very good records of 6-3-1 and 8-2-1 with both seasons ending up with visits to post-season Bowl games: against Kentucky (Great Lakes Bowl, 14-24) and Harbor Bowl (27-7 over Nevada).

In 1961, captained by Rich Ross, the Cats went 7-2 before a trip to the Sun Bowl (17-9 over Wichita). In 1962, the Wildcats, under Bell and captain Charley Johnson, posted a 7-2 regular season record and dropped a 6-0 decision to Oregon State in Philadelphia at the Liberty Bowl.

It would take another Football Supplement to scratch the surface of a collective recollection of Villanova Football (much less those individual ruminations that are the rich football culture of Villanova); but here are a few honored moments, proudly recalled:

Special Committee of Trustees.

During the April 11, 1983 meeting the committee focused its attention on the questions and concerns raised pursuant to the review of the Division 1AA proposal.

Because of a concern that the Board of Trustees might raise a question concerning the reliability of the source of specific lines of revenue, the Committee obtained a letter from the President of the General Alumni Association assuring the acquisition of 3,000 season tickets by alumni; a letter from the President of the Wildcat Club committing to place $100,000 in an escrow account within thirty (30) days of the restoration of football at the Division 1AA level; a letter from the (then) President of the Student Body pledging the purchase of season tickets at $35 per student; and several letters from individual alumni pledging annual contributions totalling in excess of $50,000 in support of the restoration of football at the Division 1AA level.

The Committee also reviewed the draft implementation plan presented by Aceto along with letters received by Aceto from other universities indicating a willingness to schedule Villanova when football is restored at the Division 1AA level on a grant-in-aid basis. Among those universities expressing interest in reciprocal scheduling were Princeton, Colgate, Pennsylvania, Bucknell, Lehigh, Lafayette, William & Mary, Holy Cross, Massachusetts and Connecticut. In response to a question from the Special Commission concerning the accuracy of the expense and revenue projections, Aceto informed the Committee that he and Brown had taken the approach that revenue projections should be conservative and that expense projections should be confirmed either by appropriately inflating the most recent expense information available and/or through the confirmation of actual expense quotations. The Committee also discussed the Division III alternative with respect to projected costs at III. Dr. Aceto reported that based on information he had developed at the request of the University's Administration several months earlier, he would estimate that a quality Division III program would require a financial commitment from the University of approximately $150,000, i.e. the same commitment that would be required for a Division 1AA program on the grant-in-aid basis. Because it would cost the University the same amount of money to support a Division III program as a Division 1AA program on a grant-in-aid basis, and since the Division III level did not hold the same attractive potential for association with institutions of similar academic excellence to Villanova University and, finally, because there was substantive questions as to whether a Division III program would be supported by the students or the alumni, the Special Committee did not consider Division III as a viable alternative since it failed to meet the criteria which had been set forth by the Board of Trustees. In order to provide the Board of Trustees with appropriate information concerning Division III, however, it was concluded to include some specific remarks with respect to a Division III program in the Committee's final report.

At the conclusion of this meeting, McCarthy asked the committee members to consider the Division 1AA proposal in light of the Committee's charge to define an intercollegiate program at Villanova that met the 3 criteria established by the Trustees.

Following a brief discussion, the special committee voted 8-to-1 to recommend the Division 1AA level proposal to the Board of Trustees pursuant to the fact that the proposal met all of the criteria set forth by the Board in its charge to the committee.

On June 27, the Board of Trustees, having heard the presentation of the findings and recommendation of the special committee, decided not to rule on football's restoration, but to take more time to study further the special committee's report.

The next regular meetings of the Board of Trustees will be held in October and December of this year.

Notes:

The Alumni's Committee To Restore Football was founded on May 7, 1981 when 500 alumni paid $50 each at a meeting at the Covered Wagon Inn in Stratford, Pa. In May of this year, the Committee To Restore Football voted to support the special committee of the Trustees in their recommendation to restore football at the 1AA level.

The Student Government's Committee To Reinstate Football conducted a survey of the Student Body in October of 1982 to determine the level of student interest in a Division 1AA program and to assess the Student Body's willingness to support such a program financially. More than 96 percent of 4300 students polled confirmed their support. They pledged a per student of $35.

The American Association of University Professors' (AAUP) poll of faculty members indicated that more than 65 percent of the faculty voting supported restoration. DesJardins reported to the special committee that a primary concern of many faculty was the number of awarded football scholarships. The grant-in-aid approach eliminates this concern, and renders Division 1AA supportable by all major University constituencies.

A New York Times article, "Colleges Seek Status Gains by Rubbing Shoulder Pads With 'Right' Schools" offered the observation that many colleges and universities beginning to "examine all of their activities in terms of marketing and positioning beginning with sports," suggesting that, "you don't want to play the wrong kind of schools because it might put you in the wrong class in someone's view."

The Division 1AA grant-in-aid approach will give Villanova the opportunity to compete with schools with similiar overall programs in geographic proximity to Villanova, including: The University of Pennsylvania; Lehigh University; Lafayette College; Bucknell University; and Princeton University. Association with institutions having program and mission parities with Villanova would, undoubtedly, be of tremendous value in positioning Villanova favorably in the challenging years that confront the University.

A significant change in the NCAA regulations has resulted in establishment of Division 1AAA, and, in essence, the creation of that "middle ground" for colleges and universities (like Villanova) that wish to compete with other institutions with similiar mission and commitment to academic excellence. Heretofore, those institutions were forced to struggle for an identity between the "big business" of Division 1A college football and the state-supported Division II group.

Alumni President Recalls "Good Ol' Days"

By Frank B. Rodgers, '36

With the summer months behind us, we once again look forward to the beautiful autumn months of October, November and December and the fun and excitement of the activities that go with them. Not so with Villanova. It will once again be a gloomy autumn for the students, alumni and friends of Villanova without football.

When I look back on my college days at Villanova, I should say: "the good old days," (I know the younger generation is sick and tired of hearing about the good old days). We had four football teams: the freshmen team, the 150 lb. team, the junior varsity and the varsity. This enabled approximately 150 students out of a student body of 800, the opportunity to participate in a contact sport — almost 20 percent of the student body. Today, with a student body of over 3,000 male students, none have that opportunity. First, the 150 lb. team was dropped in the mid 50's, followed by the junior varsity, then the freshmen, and, finally, the varsity in 1981.

Villanova, today, is not in the same class with Penn State, Alabama, Kentucky, LSU, Auburn, or Texas A&M, but we played these teams in previous years and beat them. Villanova went undefeated in 1937 and 1938 under Coach "Clipper" Smith, ending the season ranked in the top ten in the country.

We played Temple at Temple Stadium with Coach "Pop" Warner before a sellout crowd of some 35, 000 spectators - and beat them. We played such teams as Auburn, Tulsa, Marquette and Detroit with Gus Dorais (the other half of the Dorais-to-Rockne pass combination of Notre Dame) as coach and many others in that class before sellout crowds and won. Sorry, students and younger alumni, but they were the good "old days".

So much has been said and written about the restoration of football at Villanova that I won't dwell on it any further. My only hope and prayer is that the student body will again band together this year as they have in the past to show their support for football and its return. I know the alumni and friends of Villanova will, May be next autumn won't be gloomy on the Main Line.

ticket are gone, if football is to be properly supported, the price must be increased.

Therefore, the charge per game must be brought to a reasonable level, a suggested price of $10 per game, as part of a season ticket. Therefore, we feel that $50 for a season ticket is quite reasonable. Of course, individually, the tickets would sell slightly higher at $12.

Thus, to match the students, some 4,500 tickets a game must be purchased by alumni and friends.

This will take an extremely vigorous selling campaign, something which has never been done, but is essential in order to have a firm financial support for the football program. There are several ways to achieve this. A suggested method would be:

a. $50 a season ticket, for five games
b. $35 for three tickets
c. One ticket for $12
d. Encourage group ticket rates - alumni could support the football program by buying tickets and then letting the Wildcat Club distribute these to the underprivileged and youngsters in the area.

These are just a few of the ways that the Falls could become exciting again and that friends would again meet friends. Classmates could come together again, children of friends would be seeing the band and the cheerleaders do their thing and the Villanova community would once again come together and join hands to help make Villanova the center of love, learning and alive with mutual trust and respect.

Bob "Hope for Villanova Football"

By MIKE MANNING '69

Like a paradox. Try this:

The world's foremost comedian appears in Philadelphia to correct one of Villanova's premier tragedies. On December 1, 1981 . . . there was "Hope for Football."

Bob Hope was in his finest form that evening. Said Ed Riley, ex-Alumni President, "I've never attended a Villanova affair that had such appeal. It was a magic event, a real happening." Bob Hope played before a packed house at Philadelphia's grand dame of theaters — the Academy of Music. Hope performed comedy, sang, and even returned for an encore after receiving a standing ovation from the Villanova crowd. "What is college without a football team," Hope asked. "It's like Dolly Parton without a tight sweater," he replied. In doing a benefit for the restoration of football, Bob Hope said that he himself was "an old football player," stating that "I used to play center, but I had to quit because I was ticklish."

The Bob Hope show was one of the initial projects of the Committee to Restore Football. "It was organized as an event to demonstrate that University groups can raise money," claimed Doug Murray, past president of the General Alumni Association. "This could be done every year, and the Villanova community could have fun in the process."

In many ways, the Bob Hope show was a media event. Hope mentioned his appearance on the Johnny Carson Show and the performance was recounted in newspapers and on "Entertainment Tonight." The unpublicized background to this happening was the ability of a group of alumni to produce a first class professional event.

"Those weren't dog faces in the audience at the Bob Hope show," said former Villanova All-American Charlie Johnson. "The audience was one of three-piece suits and evening gowns, and they were there because they want an 87-year tradition restored. That audience simply wanted football back at Villanova."

According to Villanova alumnus Jim Jordan, "We put together the Bob Hope show because we wanted to show what we could do if the University would only ask for alumni participation."

Committee members agreed that the show was actually a lot of fun. "Meeting with Bob Hope and his agent the night prior to the performance was especially enjoyable," commented former Wildcat Club President Lou Kahl. "We met Bob Hope at the Philadelphia Airport, and his humor was nonstop." During an airport press conference, Hope indicated that he believed the committee's intentions in staging the performance were certainly well intended, and that is why he consented to do the show. Hope mentioned that he needed to do a similar performance in Los Angeles. "The way things are going with the Rams, we don't have a football team, either," Hope said.

Hope indicated that he felt that football had a place on the college campus. "Maybe I can do a return performance for a Homecoming football game," mentioned Hope. "We'd love the chance to award you a game ball," replied Charlie Johnson.

It was a great night on December 1, 1981. For on that night along with Hope, there was faith that the game would return to our campus.

first love. Based on all the hard work he has done for the committee no one will dispute that fact. Mike is employed by Medicaon, Inc. He is married with two children.

Michael J. Danaher '70. Mike has recently re-located to the New York area due to a career change and has not been able to be as active as he was when he was a vice-principal in the Philadelphia School System. Mike played football at Villanova and spent time as an assistant coach. His knowledge has been invaluable in helping us to appreciate the problems associated with running an intercollegiate football program as well as helping us to be sure that any proposals we make are in compliance with NCAA rules and regulations. Mike is single.

Edward R. Hennessey, Jr. '59. Eddie is our resident printer. He tells us the hows and the cost of all our mailings and brochures. Putting together our various mailing lists with labels, etc., was certainly made easier because of Eddie's expertise. Eddie owns his own printing business and is married with four children.

James S. Jordan '60. Jim is another of our detail men. He is always ready to roll up his sleeves to do the dirty but necessary tasks to make an endeavor a success. A prime example of Jim's careful work are the excellent job he did coordinating the pre and post concert parties at the Bellevue and handling ticket sales with the Academy of Music. Jim is co-owner of the Columbia Hotel with Doug Murray and is single.

Rev. Bernard A. Lazor, O.S.A. Another new member, Father joined our group in January with John Blatt. Father is affectionately referred to as the last living Augustinian. He is a fine man who deserves the respect of all Villanovans regardless of how they feel about the football issue. Father Lazor is a man who is not afraid to stand up for his convictions no matter what the odds or pressure. We should all be as strong.

Gerald A. Lee '45. Gerry is our idea man. He dreams up the impossible and then proceeds to make it a reality. We used to laugh at Gerry's ideas, now we shake our heads in amazement. Bob Hope was his idea. When he first proposed it, we just rolled our eyes and told him to "get more details." When he got the details we told him it couldn't be done. Of course, you know what happened next. This supplement is another of his ideas and we are all holding our breath to see what he comes up with next. Gerry is a salesman — what else! — and married with eight children.

Martin F. Whalen '63. Marty is another one of our classic storytellers, occasionally he even rivals Charlie. Marty works extremely hard and is truly dedicated to our cause. I think he may have felt the most betrayed by the surprise decision as he has many friends in the Augustinian Community. Marty is a partner in M.W. Orthopedics. He is married with two children.

Ronald F. Russo, M.D. '52. If I am one of the young turks on the Committee, then Bud is the "old" turk. He has been ready to plot a little treason for quite some time. He has been active and involved in the Villanova scene for the last 30 years and has experienced the shabby treatment of the alumni by the administration first hand. Bud has received numerous awards the most recent being the prestigious Loyalty Award. He is President Emeritus of the Wildcat Club. He has an active medical practice in Ardmore and his married with eight children.

Louis R. Kahl '55. Another President Emeritus, Lou's term was tumultuous since the decision was made during his term of office. He was in Europe at the time so we can't blame him, of course. Seriously, Lou is one of the hardest workers in our group. He is another who eagerly gets his hands dirty performing the non-glamorous jobs. Lou owns his own engineering company in Wilmington, Delaware. He is married with five children.

Well, there you have it, seventeen individuals who make up the executive committee of the Committee to Restore Football. I might be prejudiced but I think it is quite a group. For me personally, if there is anything good that came from the decision to drop football, it is my association with this group of men. We have spent many hours together, many in heated discussions, and an incredible bond has developed between each and every one of us. I love every one of these men and am honored to be part of such an august group. That is one thing for which I can thank the Rev. Driscoll.

Sept. 8, 1983

Last weekend I delivered my daughter, Karen, a freshman, to Villanova. The visit evoked memories of a similar trip I made to Villanova 23 years ago to begin four of the more meaningful years of my life.

The circumstances of my visit brought into sharper focus the changes to Villanova, most of which happily signify the growth of my alma mater. Most obvious was the absence of the anticipation of a new football season.

During my first weeks at Villanova, I remember feeling more a part of the University because of the spirit engendered by our football team, albeit one that found it very difficult to win that season. I remember well my first home game and how a feeling of belonging was enhanced; I met my first Augustinian at that football game. I remember the homecoming weekend, the alums — I remember too, some of the football players, some of whom became friends and all of whom were part of the student body.

That my daughter can't experience the same enjoyment I and my classmates experienced 23 years ago certainly diminishes Villanova. Villanova was always unusual, having a sense of community that is rare. One reason was the existence of our football team which provided a bond for students, faculty, and alumni.

My most recent visit has reinforced the feeling that Villanova has lost something that was very important to the sense of community I found on the Main Line. The Trustees can make only one decision on the football issue, and that is to bring back our Wildcats.

An All-America Remembers

By CHARLIE W. JOHNSON, '63

When I was asked to write an article for this unique supplement to the Villanovan, i thought it would be a simple outline. I had planned to write about the "Hall of Fame," the Varsity Club "Man of the Year," the "Senior Athlete Award," the "Varsity Club Newsletter" (issued ten times a year) and other club functions. Membership in this club is approximately 800 with mailings to over 1200 people.

I would like to speak to the issue of the football situation here at Villanova University (or lack of a football situation if you will). I was a member of an assembly that witnessed the Villanova Chapter of the American Association of University Profesors (AAUP) open forum on what the faculty's position should be concerning the restoration of football. I listened to Dr. Charles Cherry (assistant to the vice president for academic affairs, the vice president is the Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A.) point out that "we need to place football in its proper perspective . . . not providing a farm club mentality for professional leagues or a series of athletic mercenaries." With Cherry's remarks, one must wonder how sincere the administration is in trying to heal the wounds of the past 29 months. Not only is this difficult and offensive for me (along with many other "Alumni-Former Athletes") to understand but how can an ongoing study-panel operate in a spirit of honesy with regards to the return of the sport? If Cherry is speaking his own feelings, so be it; if he in fact is stating administration policy before all of the facts are in, then this truly is another matter! (One that has to be reviewed very carefully).

Villanova constantly recruited the student-athlete. It is not uncommon today to meet a former Villanova University Football player with "Dr." in front of his name or "Esquire" after it. These former players are engineers, sales executives, bankers, educators, and politicians. Many of them would not be functioning as they do today had it not been for Villanova football. Football players are not dumb jocks who do nothing other than play football and cause trouble. Over the past 20 years, approximately 400 scholarship football players have attended Villanova. I do not recall Villanova University's Football Program ever being cited for recruiting violations by the NCAA.

The saying goes that "you are known by the company you keep." Wasn't it good for Villanova to be competing on the football field with Holy Cross, Colgate, William & Mary, Army, Navy and the University of Pennsylvania? In reality, it was an affair of prestige for our school to be closely associated with these fine schools. Ask the question, "why does a student pick a college?" An answer perhaps, "how is a college perceived by the public?" So many ingredients go into that public perception of a University; importantly, the academic image of the school, its campus, its gradute schools, and, yes, its athletics. Dwell for a moment upon these names: Colgate, Yale, Army, Stanford, Lehigh, Bucknell, Holy Cross.

Now, for a moment, dwell upon these names: LaSalle, Providence, Seton Hall, Xavier, Loyola, Drexel, St. Joe's.

There are, of course, many differences between these two "fine" groups of schools as well as many common things shared. There is, I believe, a sense of completeness to the first group — they yell out as you and say — "We represent the complete college experience." The second group does not. It is obvious what is missing from the second group.

Tradition — the oft maligned and probably overused term — is also part of this intangible story. There are so few things that Villanova or any other university has been doing on an uninterrupted basis for 87 years that it would seem inherently important to retain those traditions that we do have. Football — Varsity Football — was an honest-to-God tradition here at Villanova. Isn't the reason that we work to achieve some measure of material success so that that we may relax with our families and friends enjoying the traditions of life?

We all need it — in reality it's why we go forward in life — remembering and teaching.

What football player at Villanova will ever forget that small, frail figure standing on the sidelines at practice and never missing a home game. Thank God Father Rafter was taken from us before the game he loved so much was taken from him! I hope the spirit of Father Rafter enlightens the present administration to be bold enough to restore a sport that truly will encourage and indeed insure the continued growth of the University's Annual Fund and all capital campaigns.

The restoration of the football program at a respectable level will reignite the alumni as active recruiters of students for Villanova. Football back on campus will insure that our growing alumni will in the future have a vehicle, an occasion, to stay close to their University.

Football Restoration: Its Time Has Come

By GERRY LEE, '45

When the Trustees voted to discontinue inter-collegiate football on April 14, 1981, we ventured that only time would reveal the wisdom (or lack of it) of the decision.

Almost everyone who had ever gathered on this beautiful campus on fall afternoons has to be drawn back in time to fond recollections: crisp, sunny, cool days (after summer's "dog days"); the gathering of students and alumni and their friends at tail-gating parties in lively, friendly communication — finally broken by the sound of the marching band, cheer leaders and band front, stopping in their line of march to the stadium to serenade the Villanova family of football fans; the roar erupting when the first of Villanova's Wildcats emerged from their dressing rooms to do battle; the galactic groans when things went wrong; the roars capable of cracking the walls of Goodreau Stadium when progress toward victory — and victory — were won.

Who can forget? Who can block it from recollection?

Restore football at the IAA level. Students and alumni have pledged their support. Wisdom and the events of the past 29 months counsel football's return. Mending of many student and alumni grievances will be assured by returning THE GAME.

A Book Exploring Ties That Bind

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

The bond of friendship is that intricate relationship that defies an ordinary explanation. It is the sharing and blending of personalities, characteristics, traits, strengths, and weaknesses. Friendship possesses not one, but many shared experiences that can develop two people into lifetime soulmates who revel in each other's company. Millions of dollars are spent annually on cards, poems, and gifts detailing these small, shared experiences of pleasure and pain that dictate the masterplan of a lifetime. Yet, a few lines in print and a material possession do not adequately capture that sense of trust and love that ever marks the infinity of a friendship for all to acknowledge.

In the Best Of Friends: Profiles of Extraordinary Friendships author David Michaelis shows the importance of friendship in the lives of fourteen men, both famous and unknown, who have enjoyed the presence and participation of a "best friend." Michaelis devotes his study to seven unique friendships.

Very little has been written on the subject of male friendships. Libraries and bookstores store a glut of the traditional tales of mother-daughter, father-son and husband-wife relationshps; but there has been too few literary explorations of relationships between men. An exception, as an example, might be the established bond between the old fisherman Santiago and the boy Manlin in Hemingway's The Old Men and the Sea. However honest this male relationship, it is basically that of mentor and pupil.

What sets this book apart from other attempts at the definition of friendship is that the author presents the facts that call for the reader's acknowledgement of the relationship and then leaves it up to the reader to decide how strong that bond became. The facts presented are not simply praises sung by friends as a mutual admiration society reminiscing over good times, but honest, gut feelings put forth by the principal and their other friend. Contradictions are as frequent as agreements, as often occurs in exchanges. Yet there emerges one one true vision of comarderie conjured up by the given examples.

The most vivid examined relationship is that between Dan Ackroyd and the late John Belushi, the two actor-comedian-musicians, who for a short span of time during the late '70s were that decade's Martin and Lewis. Friends and acquaintances of both recall their early careers, rise to the limelight and stardom for the two "partners in crime"; with Ackroyd filling in the details that others had forgotten about what made their friendship a necessity for both.

As Michaelis writes, the two "formed a strong friendship and a business partnership that proved, for both men, an emotional support system as well as a seemingly permanent base from where to launch their careers in tandem."

The account of the friendship is timely: Belushi died in 1982 of a drug overdose, six thousand miles away from his wife and his closest friend. Two months later Michaelis was the first journalist to interview Ackroyd about the effects of Belushi's death on his own life and career.

The other arresting example of an extraordinary friendship is the thirty-year give and take between John F. Kennedy and K. LeMoyne Billings, who as roommates at the Choate School formed a bond that flourished until Kennedy's assassination in 1963. The strong differences in the up-bringing of the two men only highlights the truth of friendship transcending all obstacles. Considered "muckers" at the prep school — bad apples in the basket — Kennedy and Billings succeeded in almost getting expelled for forming an illegal "mucker's club."

According to Michaelis, the two friends were equipped as students with "restless optimism which was intensified by the sensibilities and interests they had in common." The sharing of cars, women, and the Kennedy fortune are detailed. So devoted was Billings to Kennedy that he decided to spend an extra senior year at Choate so that the two friends could continue their adventures together. Billings adjusted the year of his birth so he would be the same age as his best friend.

As Kennedy entered politics, following his World War II heroics, and began his ascent toward the presidency, Billings became a successful business executive who helped create the soft drink craze of the '50s, known as "Fizzies." Both friends became successful in their individual way, but never forgot their friendship. When Billings visited the White House, Kennedy would identify him to other dignitaries as "Admiral Billings," or "General Billings," or "Congressman Billings." The friend never knew which title to expect from the President.

After Billings death in 1981, Robert Kennedy, Jr., whose father also counted Billings as a close friend, wrote "To one generation of Kennedys he was a friend and gifted counselor. To my generation he gave an even greater gift. The stories he told and the examples he set gave us all a link to our dead fathers and to the generation before us. The 'Titans' became men whom we should not fear to emulate."

Such declarations of the honesty of friendship are also found in the other five stories of a male relationship: Donald Lourie and George H. Love were roommates at Princeton University in 1922, who later became chairmen of Consolidation Coal and Quaker Oats; Isamu Noguchi and Buckminister Fuller began their friendship in 1929 when Fuller was considered crazy and Noguchi was a virtual unknown. The two espoused an independent spirit and were only recently recognized by the world; Duncan Spencer and George Cadwalader set sail for a record-breaking transatlantic voyage in 1969. A three-thousand mile journey and a twenty foot boat proved to be an "emotional breakthrough" in a ten year friendship that still continues; Dave Knowles and Rob Taylor, professional Alpine climbers, scaled peaks together in a relationship that required "mutual trust." L.F. Protte and Michael B. Edwards are men who survived the Vietnam war and entered into a binding friendship based on the mutual sense of understanding about their profession.

Michael's co-authored with John Aristotle Phillips, Mushroom: The Story of the A-Bomb Kid (1978) before his graduation from Princeton University. Michaelis has turned out a fine book that asks the reader to examine his own friendships as described in the Best of Friends. The importance of friendship is explored in depth and will leave the reader with a lasting impression of what the word "friend" really means.

What sets this book apart from other attempts at the definition of friendship is that the author presents the facts that call for the reader's acknowledgement of the relationship . . .

Let's Laugh the Night Away

By MICHAEL NOTARO and JIM DeLORENZO

Viewers of "Late Night with David Letterman" have become familiar with the comedic talents of Jay Leno. This hot young comic performed this weekend to a full house at Philadelphia's Comedy Works. Everyone there got more than they paid for.

Jay Leno

Leno performed for more than an hour and a quarter, with material ranging from the absurdity of the Ginsu knife to why women do not care for the Three Stooges. He even took time out of his routine to joke with the audience, our table in particular.

Leno has appeared many times on Johnny Carson, Letterman and numerous other shows, including a recurring role as Brenda Morgenstern's boyfriend on the cult classic, "Rhoda."

At one point during his performance, Leno alluded to the ludicrous title of the recent James Bond movie, in particular how embarrassing it is to say it (let alone print it).

Rounding out the evening's entertainment were Philly favorite Wayne Cotter, and the pixieish Pam Matteson. Cotter, who quite often opens Comedy Works shows, cut up the crowd with his reminiscence of his brief college career. A woman with a talent for unusual impersonations, Matteson regaled the audience with her versions of Barbara Eden, Hayley Mills, Dionne Warwick, and Diana Ross. Matteson has previously appeared on the television programs "Tucker's Witch" "Love, Sidney" and the Broadway production of "Annie."

For those seeking an alternative to the usual weekend fare, the Comedy Works is well worth the trip. Located high atop the Middle East Restaurant at 126 Chestnut Street in Olde City Philadelphia, they offer top-notch comedy Wednesday through Saturday nights. Wednesday night is "open stage night," where aspiring comics may sign up as little as a half hour before the curtain.

Admission for open stage night is usually $3.50. Thursdays through Saturdays there are two shows, at 8 and 11 p.m. The second show usually runs longer than the early show. In the past, many up and coming stars, like Eddie Murphy, Shirley Hemphill and Prof. Irwin Corey have performed. In the next few weeks, the Comedy Works will be showcasing Jerry Seinfeld, Bob Nelson, and a return engagement of Elayne Boosler.

Another look at Jay Leno

There is no minimum age to gain admittance, with tickets ranging in price from $5 to $7. A modest selection of snacks is available, including alcoholic beverages; however, prices are exorbitant. As Leno said, "How can they make a profit with these prices?" All in all, be prepared to laugh for close to two full hours and that's no joke.

Dining Out: Sweet Basil Restaurant

By DILIP JAIN

If Sweet Basil were a cliche, the best way to describe it would be that "it is a nice place to visit, but I would not want to live there."

My companion and I arrived at Sweet Basil during lunch hour. We were the only people there, and a hostess was prompt in getting us seated and giving us our menues. The menu at Sweet Basil is said to be international, but I found only a few European and Oriental dishes to choose from. The menu offers soup (average price $2.50), salads (average price $1.50), entrees (average price $5.50), grill foods (average price $6), omelettes, quiche (real men beware) and desserts. There are soft drinks available, but wine or beer lovers must look elsewhere.

I began by ordering a fruit salad and found that it contained an interesting variety of fruits, including mango. My companion ordered Duck Noodle Soup, which was delicious. It had very thin noodles and large pieces of duck. For the main course, I ordered Fettucini Primavera and my companion ordered Polynesian Roast Chicken with vegetables and rice. The Primavera was absolutely mouthwatering. It contained noodles in a cheese sauce and a variety of vegetables. The Roast Chicken was also tasty, but turned out to be only two small pieces of meat, served with vegetables and rice, although my companion enjoyed it. I also had an Indian drink called Lassi, which is a sweetened plain yogurt shake and is very good. The desserts were not impressive, and the cheesecake that my companion ordered tasted second-rate, while the icecream I had was of the supermarket variety.

This meal cost us $25 and this was, in my opinion, too expensive, especially when you consider that there are not any alcoholic beverages available. The prices are inflated, and this type of meal should not cost any more than $20, therefore, I am indifferent in recommending it to anybody. Sweet Basil is not quite an international restaurant, but they charge international prices.

For those who would like to try Sweet Basil, it is located at the corner of 40th and Chestnut Street and is easily accessible by car, but there is no parking lot provided by the restaurant. For those who haven't a car, Sweet Basil can be reached by taking the Norristown trolley to 69th Street and then the Market-Frankfort line to 40th Street.

Joel Pays Tribute to Loves

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

Billy Joel is in love, and his new LP "An Innocent Man" is proof that things are looking up for the piano man.

Joel, one will remember, badly hurt his hand in a motor-cycle accidinet almost two years ago. For awhile there wasserious doubt that he would be able to play the piano again. On top of this, Joel went through a separation with his wife Elizabeth, who doubled as his manager.

With the release of "The Nylon Curtain," and its ensuing tour, Joel proved that his musical prowess is still intact. As for his personal life, Joel has been seeing Christie Brinkley, to whom "An Innocent Man" is dedicated. Joel is back on his feet again and he wants everyone to know it.

While "An Innocent Man" is certainly not a great album by any standards, it is an album that is both nostalgic and a lot of fun.

The main theme throughout the LP is relationships and how to handle them. But rather than making this album a downer, Joel has written upbeat music to lyrics that are either confessions or friendly words of advice.

"Easy Money" which was written for the movie of the same name, is a song about the search for the good life, and hoping for the big bucks. "I want the Easy Money/Easy Money/ I could get lucky/ Oh, things could go right," This song is reminiscent of Sam and Dave from the horn arrangements down to Joel's raw, (or infamous?) piercing voice.

The title track in this writer's favorite song on the album. "An Innocent Man" tells the story of a guy who feels compassion for a brokenhearted woman. He can relate to her hurt because he has been through it. His advice is to give love another chance. "I know you don't want to hear what I say/I know you're gonna keep turning away/But I've been there and If I can survive/I can keep you alive/I'm not above going through it again." This track no doubt relates to Joel's personal life and his feelings on love.

'Keeping the Faith" paints a picture of life during the 50's. "Drank a lot of take-home pay/I thought I was the Duke of Earl."

"Tell Her About It" the current hit off "An Innocent Man" is pure pop, to the point of being sappy (the video, by the way is dynamite). But Joel couldn't care less. That's what happens when you're happy and in love.

In fact, the songs are a conspicuous tribute to the music of the 50's and early 60's, as Joel wears his influences on his sleeve.

"Uptown Girl" tells the story of a streetpunk and rich girl who are falling in love. "She's getting tired of high class toys/and all her presents from her uptown boys/ She's got a choice."

After one hears the first line of "Uptown Girl," visions of Frankie Valli and the four Seasons are sure to be dancing in your head. Joel accents this song with choppy drums and the famous (or infamous?) piercing voice.

Keaton Gives 'Mr. Mom' Pop

By MARY KAY KNELLI

Some men just don't know how to handle it when their wife goes back to work. In "Mr. Mom" Michael Keaton tries his best to be a housewife and mom to three kids when he is unexpectedly laid off, and his wife goes back to work. He looks forward to spending his free time with the children, that is, until his wife's boss shows up at the front door ready to drive her to work in his limousine. Not to be outdone, Dad quickly changes out of his bathrobe and greets his wife's boss by coming in the back-door dressed in overalls, goggles and carrying a buzzing chainsaw. "Just working on the addition," he shouts, as his wife's boss slowly backs away from the chain saw.

Dad goes on to make the usual Dagwood Bumstead blunders of putting too much soap in the washer and unsuccessfully using a vacuum cleaner lovingly nicknamed "Jaws," Jaws eats everything but the kitchen sink. Dad also tackles the supermarket. Besides keeping kids from climbing out of carts and produce from rolling down the aisle, he has to deal with aggressive women, who would gladly attempt to beat him over the head when he can't decide what kind of cheese to buy at the deli counter. He realizes that it is not such an easy job.

For example, he is the token "househusband" in the neighborhood and, therefore, falls prey to some of the divorced women on the block who consider him a challenge. His wife, on the other hand, has her hands full with her boss who is impressed with her ideas. So impressed, in fact, that he makes a pass at her. But never fear, the liberated woman of the 80's manages to fight him off deftly.

All in all, despite the lack of originality in the script, both Michael Keaton and Terri Garr present likable and realistic characters. They deal with the role reversal problem in humorous, but sincere situations that show the need for both sexes to adapt and understand this contemporary problem. More and more young mothers are going back to work and both sexes are going to have to cope with it. As the little boy said, "Hey Mom, it's a jungle out there!"

Old Dogs Learn New Tricks

By JOHN F. LYNCH

Elvis Costello's new release "Punch the Clock," which is accompanied by The Attractions, is a fresh ensemble of thirteen new songs.

Costello born Declan McMannus, has tried and succeeded at any and every type of music on his previous albums. Ranging from jazz to the blues, Costello's new album is a slick production with a heavy influence of saxophones and keyboards.

"Everyday I Write the Book" exemplifies the use of keyboards. This song tells the story of a love affair as if it were a book, proceeding chapter by chapter. Steve Nieve plays a fine Bosendorfer piano on this cut which gives the listener the feeling of being in love.

"The Greatest Thing" is a fast-pace song which tells about a girl who is so beautiful that she's "the greatest thing". Costello adds a clear, yet powerful guitar throughout the song which controls the fast beat.

With the release of "Imperial Bedroom" and now "Punch the Clock," Costello has become affable which is quite a contrast from his earlier angry, young man image. The lyrics are now less sarcastic than previous efforts which makes his music, though consistently good, even better.

The success of "Punch the Clock" is that unlike many artists, Costello has put together such a variety of songs that at no point does the listener become disinterested.

Costello has hopefully gotten into a musical groove which will last. It is evident by this album that Costello has decided to grow both musically and personally sans the belligerence.

What's important for Costello's continued success lies in his realizing his potential and working to maximize it. There was a point in his career where he was confused as to what he wanted to do, that he even considered changing his name back to his given name, just to get out of the rut he was finding himself in. However, with "Punch the Clock" it's clear to hear that Costello knows who he is and what he wants to do.

By BILL SANTOS

The second album by Asia is titled after the first letter in the Greek alphabet, Alpha; the album takes on a different approach than the first LP. This time, the four members of the group, (Geoff Downes, Steve Howe of Yes, Carl Palmer of ELP fame and John Wetton from the group U.K.) combine to create an album of love songs, unlike their first album. Asia has established itself as a superstar group, mainly due to reputations of the band members. The first album (rather calculated), set the stage for what promises to be a successful career; the second album, although somewhat different than the first, still carries the Asia sound with it.

Many of the songs contain references to the eyes, the telltale of someone's inner feelings. Some compositions are "The Smile Has Left Your Eyes," "Eye To Eye," and "Open Your Eyes." Asia's top ten song, "Don't Cry," also uses the theme of eyes and is the song that best exhibits John Wetton's vocal talents.

In understanding the complexity of Asia's compositions, one must focus on the foundation of the group, namely John Wetton. Wetton was previously in the group U.K. with Eddie Jobson, Allan Holdsworth and Bill Bruford; a year later Terry Bozzio replaced Bruford and Holdsworth left. Although U.K. was only together for two years and produced only two records, Wetton was greatly influenced by Jobson through the joint composition of the group's songs. Jobson, playing electric violin and keyboards, and Wetton on bass and vocals combine to form an intricate array of songs. This experience has spilled over into Asia's songs and their performances.

Although "Alpha" only took four months to record, Mike Stone has done a fine job producing this album. Wetton's voice sounds rather unusual and almost ethereal. The background music forms a tight balance between the instruments. The weaving of the keyboards, guitars, and the drums combine to enhance Wetton's vocals, although it needs no enhancing. "Alpha" is aptly named for it is only the beginning of what should be a long career for Asia. One can expect to hear bigger and better albums in the future. The members of the band are accomplished professionals and the band's chemistry exudes a sophistication that is rare in the musical world. Groups such as Asia are few and far between.

Dangerfield Movie Earns Him Some Respect

By MIKE MATHIS

"Easy Money," the latest film starring Rodney Dangerfield is nothing more than a vehicle for the stand-up to showcase his array of one-liners. As the film begins, Monti Capuletti is seen as a baby photographer on Staten Island, N.Y. He even goes as far as to model his daughter's wedding gown while simultaneously hurling an insult at his mother-in-law. Capuletti wants his daughter's wedding to be a gala affair.

He also enjoys drinking, gambling, smoking and eating mainly pizza. He does most of these things with his pal Nick, played by Joe Pesci, who is remembered for his performance as Jake LaMotta's brother in "The Raging Bull." Pesci was nominated for an Academy Award for that portrayal.

In the process of arranging the wedding, Capuletti is put in several rid culous situations. After getting stoned with Nicky, the two men search for a place to find something to eat. Nothing is open, but there is a wedding cake in the back of their van. While the two don't eat the cake, one can predict what ensues.

One of the better parts of this movie is the wedding scene. As Capuletti walks down the aisle with his daughter, he sees that his daughter (Jennifer Jason Leigh) is marrying a Puerto Rican. Quickly, we see a contrast of the bride and groom's families: One side stereotypical Italian, the other stereotypical Puerto Rican. The groom's name is even Julio.

The reception takes place in what first appears to be a lavish setting, a la "The Godfather," with hundreds of people. An aerial shot shows that the party is actually being held in Capuletti's cramped backyard. Watching Dangerfield dance during this scene is hysterical, as the bug-eyed comic looks almost cartoon-like.

It is only for the one-liners that "Easy Money" succeeds at all. Capuletti's daughter utters "Julio is everything I've always wanted." Dangerfield replies "You don't ask for much, do you?

The newlyweds stay at a sleazy motel with Julio not only carrying his bride but a "box" across the threshold.

But hence, this is not what the main theme of the movie is. Capuletti's mother-in-law dies and (if he straightens out his life) a huge sum of money will be his. Did someone mention the name "Arthur?"

Anyway, "Easy Money" is a film that will not have you laughing non-stop. The reason for this is that there isn't any substance of flow. Even a comedy must flow to be successful. But if one is a Rodney Dangerfield fan, there shouldn't be any hesitation, for he is hilarious. Who says Rodney gets no respect?

Student Government's Position On Football

Student Government, as the voice of the entire student body, and the only direct means of communication between the students, administration, and alumni, reports its stand on the continuing issue of football.

From the Student Body President to the appointed Vice-Presidents, elected Senators, and voting Secretary, STUDENT GOVERNMENT UNANIMOUSLY SUPPORTS THE RESTORATION OF FOOTBALL.

The reason why this special report does not appear in the alumni supplement is directly based upon actions taken earlier this year.

After the vote for football was postponed at the June 28 meeting of the Board of Trustees, a certain element within the alumni threatened to disenfranchise themselves from the University. This group would still generate revenue for Villanova, but to be donated when and where it sees fit. Thus, for example, if the Board of Trustees — a group comprised of 22 people, all but FOUR alumni of Villanova — reach a decision that this element finds not to be in its interest, this group could withhold its donations and dangle them before the Trustees to sway the decision.

In effect, this element would hold ITS interests above the BEST interests of the University, and would have the potential power to damage the overall well-being of Villanova.

To reiterate, Student Government — the elected voice of the entire student population — UNANIMOUSLY supports the restoration of football. We have chosen to take, however, a different avenue from the alumni's Committee to Restore Football. We admire and applaud the Committee's ultimate goal, but disagree with its methods.

Since football has been dropped, there have been discussions, debates, and clairfications of issues on numerous occasions. All have been involved: students, through the poll conducted by Student Government; the faculty, through the A.A.U.P. poll; alumni, through fund-raising events; and the administration. As a result of this on-going divisive issue and Villanova University has suffered.

At this crucial time, we support the efforts of the Board of Trustees in its endeavor to clarify the issue at hand and reach a final decision that will benefit Villanova, both now and in the future.

Nova Bows to Lehigh; Now 1-1

Last-second Goal Drops Cats

By BOB HELLER

The Villanova University field hockey team lost a tough one on Tuesday. The defeat came at the hands of the Engineers of Lehigh University. The 2-1 loss was the first for the Wildcats and evened their record at 1-1.

The Wildcats were outplayed during the first half, but their defense was able to contain the Engineers. Villanova's offense was unable to produce anything, however, managing just four shots on goal the entire half. Late in the first half, Nova started to wake up but was unable to put the ball into the net as the score was 0-0 at halftime.

Second-half play was much different than the first half. The Engineers came out strong and dominated the play throughout this half. Nova's defense was equal to the task as Lehigh's offense held the ball in Nova's end for over 12 straight minutes and was unable to score, managing just a few weak shots on goal. Lehigh finally broke the ice when Mary Werner put a shot past Villanova goalkeeper Lisa Buschmann at 24:15 to make the score 1-0.

About one minute later, the Wildcats tied the score at 1-1 when Amy Hutchison took a penalty corner hit from Bonnie Bell and whacked it past the Engineer's goaltender. Villanova's play improved slightly after this goal and they began to have more of an offensive attack; however, they were unable to score again.

With just 12 seconds remaining in the game, a Lehigh player got ahead of the Nova defense and placed a well-timed shot past Buschmann to make the final score 2-1 Lehigh.

The Villanova offense managed only five shots on goal during the entire game, one in the second half as compared to Lehigh's total of 17 shots on goal. Nova goalie Buschmann played superbly in stopping 12 shots.

The Wildcats will be on the road this weekend to take on defending Division II National Champions Lock Haven State. After that the Wildcats return home to take on Kutztown and Bloomsburg State. These games will be held on Monday and Thursday respectively. Kutztown and Bloomsburg are the Division II teams ranked 3rd and 2nd respectively. Victories over these national powers could help propel the Cats into the national tournament.

Irish Spearhead Harriers

O' What a Team!

By PAUL MACCHIA

As the school year opens many athletic teams go through vigorous demanding hours of training. The men's cross country team is no exception.

The Wildcats have a strong squad this year led by the experienced Irish veterans, Marcus O'Sullivan, Brian O'Keeffe and Tony O'Reilly. Dermot Anderson, JJ. Clark and John Keyworth are proven veterans who will contribute their talents to this iron tough team.

Preview

Coach Jack Pyrah recently indicated that the team is strong and should fulfill the goals that have been set. Pyrah added, however, that Big East rivals Providence and Boston College have strong teams this year; Providence, for instance, is basically a cross country oriented team on which all varsity runners are back from last year.

As the new year begins there are some new faces on the Villanova team. Sean O'Neill, a 19-year-old from Ballymena, Northern Ireland (located 20 miles north of Belfast), is a strong, versatile middle distance runner who has run the 400 in 48.1, the 800 in a blazing 1:47.9 and the 1500 in 3:51. His list of accomplishments is lengthy as he holds all (the Northern Ireland age group records in the 400 meters. Sean is a five time Irish Schools champ and was a representative of Northern Ireland in the Commonwealth Games in Brisbane, Australia, where he missed a spot in the final by .01 second. Sean was also a member of the Northern Ireland senior team at age 15 (seniors are usually 19 and older).

Gerry O'Reilly (no relation to Tony) is another Irish prospect in the Villanova tradition. Gerry hails from Dunboyne, Ireland, which lies on the outskirts of Dublin. Gerry was a member of the Irish junior team where he was coached by Eamonn Coghlan's mentor, the late Gerry Farnan. He runs for the same club as Coghlan — Metro.

Jack Pyrah

Villanova has also recruited one of the nation's top high school hurdlers, Tony Valentine of Plainfield, New Jersey. Tony was a high school teammate of Villanova 800-meter standout John Marshall.

Tony's specialty is the 400-meter intermediate hurdles. This year he took the National Junior crown in a meet that was held at Penn State. He also won the 300-meter intermediate hurdles at the International Prep Invitational meet, breaking Wildcat Alumnus' Rod Wilson's meet record.

Another one of the Wildcats' top recruits is Kevin Davis, who has transferred from the University of Florida. Davis was John Marshall's high school rival in the 800 meters when he competed for Trenton Central. Davis, who has run 1:47.6 for the 800 and competed for the Atlantic Coast Club, will be an invaluable man to the team as his talents will be showcased in relay duties and the open events as well.

The Cats will open their cross country season tomorrow in a triangular meet with George Mason University and Georgetown at Georgetown. It will be a competitive race as all three teams are strong and have depth.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Luba and Zenia Matkiwsky

Because of their equally outstanding performances during the past week, two Villanova women's tennis players have been chosen as Budweiser Athletes of the Week. And, surprise, they're sisters!

With the season still in its early stages, Zenia and Luba Matkiwsky have helped their team to a 4-0 record. Luba, a sophomore, now holds the number one singles slot while Zenia, two years older, plays in the number two position. Zenia began last year's season in the number one spot but was replaced by Luba after injuring her ankle. Thus, the two sisters are expected to compete against each other for the top position this season.

Both Zenia and Luba have won every match they've played in this year. So far, the women's team has defeated Franklin and Marshall (6-3), Temple (7-2), Bryn Mawr (5-0) and Mt. St. Mary's (7-2).

In addition to their singles play, Zenia and Luba are first doubles partners. Although they most often play first doubles, they sometimes sit out that position if the opposing team is not as competitive.

Despite a broken wrist, Luba finished 10-1 in match and 22-3 in set play last season. Zenia chalked up a 14-2 mark. While Zenia finished runner-up for the '82-83 PAIAW Division IIA number two singles title, Luba wound up first in that division's number one singles play and runner-up for the Division II number one singles title.

According to coach Robert Langran, Zenia and Luba are irreplaceable assets on the women's tennis team. "Almost every time they go out, you can count on them to win," he said. "I wish I had had Zenia for four years instead of two. And I'm glad that I have Luba for four."

Cats Off to Sluggish 0-3 Start

By MICHELE NAPOLI

After returning from a successful two week trip to Ireland, the promising Wildcat men's soccer team has gotten off to a slow start by adding two losses to their early season record.

Against Navy on Sept. 17, the 0-3 Cats suffered a 1-0 loss. "The team did an outstanding job against Navy," said Coach Howard Graff, "especially after Navy had just beaten Penn State which is ranked sixth or seventh in the country."

Paul Neugebauer, Nova's goalie, kept the Navy offense under control, yet early in the first half the Midshipmen broke through the Wildcat defense to score their only goal.

The second half began with an aggressive V.U. passing game. Although bothered by the Wildcat's John Valickus and Steve Maillard, the Navy goalie seemed to hold up strong until late in the second half when junior Dan Regan crossed the ball up to Steve Maillard whose shot at the net deflected off the goal post and another attempt by Mike Dettra ensued. Again opportunity knocked for Nova when David Sprows scored a goal with 5:51 left in the second half of the game. Unfortunately for the Wildcats, the whistle had blown, making the goal void.

Following this, the Cats continued to bomb the Navy goalie, keeping the Midshipmen's defense on its toes. However, Navy held up, leaving Nova with its third disappointment. Despite this loss, Coach Graff said, "The team lost seven of its starters and it takes time to pull the team together." He looks forward to having a winning season despite the team's slow start.

Cat Clips: Previous to the Navy encounter, the Cats had suffered a 5-0 loss to Loyola on Sept. 14 . . . Loyola's offensive attack produced fifteen shots on goal against John Grendi, the Nova keeper.

Women Booters Drop Two in Wildcat Tournament

By SUZANNE ONNEMBO

The Villanova women's soccer team opened its season Sept. 17 by hosting Adelphi and the University of Connecticut in its own round robin tournament. And it was no surprise that UConn, which recently defeated number-one ranked North Carolina, swept the tourney by defeating Adelphi, 2-1, and the Wildcats, 2-0.

The Wildcats were excited about their new talent and felt ready to take on their extremely difficult 1983 schedule. They were, however, disappointed with their play against the powerful Adelphi squad. The Cats dropped the game 5-0 with three of the opposing goals coming in the first half, two of which were off corner kicks. Villanova had seven shots on goal but failed to put any in the net. Walking off the field after the match, the Cats knew it was necessary to leave the game behind and mentally prepare to take on the Huskies later in the afternoon.

Villanova got over its first game jitters and gave the University of Connecticut a run for its money. Villanova goalie Sue Onnembo set the tempo for the game when she stopped a one-on-one breakaway in the first few minutes of play. Onnembo was supported with an outstanding defense led by Patty Woods and Katie Graney. At the end of the half, Villanova had held UConn scoreless. It wasn't until late in the third period that the Huskies scored on a cross to the midfield from the right wing.

The VU midfield, controlled beautifully by Lisa Morgan and Sue Stavaros, fed the Villanova offense as it fought to get the goal back. Offensive star and last year's leading scorer, Cathy Ford, lead the onslaught for the Cats but was unable to score. Denise Finn, Mary Lou Hurly and Ann Brennan were also outstanding in battling against the tough UConn defense. Connecticut eventually scored again with six minutes left to play.

Women Outrun Area Teams

By JOHN WIDDECOMBE

A week and a half ago, the 1983 women's cross country team competed in the Philadelphia Metropolitan Championships and came away with a decisive victory over five other teams from surrounding Philadelphia and southwest New Jersey schools.

Coach Bob Shoudt ran a group of freshmen and some upper-class, experienced runners at the 2.9-mile Wildcat home course in Philadelphia's Fairmount Park. The team collected 20 points to capture the overall title, with eleven Cat runners finishing in the top twenty places. Second place St. Joseph's was far behind with 46 points.

Dawn Cady, representing the Hawks, nailed down first place individually with a 17:21 time. Villanova freshmen Coleen Gallagher, Lauren Searby, Melissa Grubb and Cassie Bradley led the team by finishing second, third, fourth and fifth respectively. Gallagher ran a 17:44, Searby a 17:54, and Grubb and Bradley finished with times of 18:02 and 18:12. Senior captain Patty Bradley and freshmen Kathy Redden placed sixth and seventh in 18:13 and 18:18. And to close out the top ten finishers, Wildcat junior Jane Ashton and sophomore Lisa Polzinetti placed ninth and tenth.

Last Sunday the team was scheduled to compete in the Lafayette Invitational but bowed out in order to rest up before the season jumps into full swing. Coach Shoudt has also been resting his four best varsity girls — Mary Ellen McGowan, Vicki Brown, Joanne Kels and Nancy Fleming, for the first few meets this season. They will start this Sunday at the Trenton State Invitational.

Ruggers Trounce Penn

By FRED MURPHY

The Villanova rugby team successfully opened its season on Saturday with a decisive 9-3 victory over the Penn Quakers.

The contest's first score did not come until midway through the first half. Mike Scalzo converted a penalty kick from 22 meters to give the Wildcats a three point lead that lasted for the remainder of the half.

Second-half play echoed the first, as both sides remained deadlocked at midfield. Then, after 20 minutes, Tom Murphy made a successful break from a scrum down. A Wildcat wing sweep ensued in which Mike Ward scored the try. Scalzo converted the extra points and gave Nova a 9-0 advantage.

Penn did not give up so easily, though. With five minutes remaining in the match, the Quakers converted a penalty kick to narrow the score to 9-3. Four minutes later, Penn recovered possession and made a break for the Villanova goal line. But good support and excellent pursuit enabled the Cats to regain possession and run out the clock.

Notes: Next weekend the ruggers will meet another divisional rival, Princeton. The match will be played at Princeton and will start at 1 p.m.

The Mailman Cometh

By LARRY GOANOS

O.K. sports fans, listen up. This week I've reached deep into my mailbag and pulled out some letters which ask probing and provocative questions about the world of sports. This practice of reprinting your letters along with my replies is in keeping with my commitment to provide our readers with innovative sports coverage while getting this column written with minimal effort. Here goes:

Just One of the "Gang"

Dear Larry,

I'm only a freshman here at Villanova so perhaps you can help me out. A few of the upperclassmen on my wing have told me that Al Capone, the famous gangster, funded the Field House. Is there any truth to this rumor?

Joe Quick, Fedigan Hall

Editor's Angle

This was a loughie but I sent my research staff on an extensive investigation and they've uncovered the facts. It seems that there was an Al Capone who graduated from Villanova shortly after the turn of the century. While he was enrolled here records show that he played on the men's basketball team. According to an old newspaper account Capone was feared by Wildcat opponents for his "shooting." Capone also worked as a student trainer for the football team during which time he introduced a new play into the Villanova offense — the bootleg.

Penn but not State

Yo Larry,

I was watching T.V. yesterday when I heard the announcer call a guy a "light heavyweight." Now to me that seems like a contradiction in terms. Can you point out any other contradictory phrases that sportscasters use?

John Lewiston, Stanford Hall

Come to think of it, I can. Just the other day I heard an announcer mention "Penn football."

The Hawk is Wounded

Hey Larry,

Why does the St. Joseph's Hawk mascot keep moving constantly during all basketball games?

Sid Stone, Sullivan

It's just instinctive action. When you go to school in West Philly you learn quickly that it's a lot healthier to be a moving target than a stationary one.

One Lump or Two?

Dear Larry,

Peter Liacouras, the president of Temple, told his football team that they had to be in the Sugar Bowl by 1985. Do you think they're going to make it?

Durnin Clemson

Temple lost its most recent game 35-0 to Pittsburgh. That must've felt like a Sugar Bowl to them because although it wasn't sweet, they sure got their "lumps."

From the Horse's Mouth

Dear Larry,

Last year Villanova's Sports Information department billed Stewart Granger as the "Lone Granger." Are there any more equestrian related publicity campaigns slated for this season.?

Jim Collins, St. Mary's

I'm glad you asked that because as a matter of fact there is. Junior All-American candidate Ed Pinckney is going to appear on a poster with sophomore sharpshooter Dwight Wilbur. The duo will be promoted as "Mr. Ed and Wilbur." I guess that they'll be this season's "mane" attraction.

Flashbacks of Seasons

Gridders Maul U. Mass

By TONY ONOFRIETTI

For the second year in a row, the Villanova Wildcats won their home opener last Saturday by routing the Minutemen of the University of Massachusetts 35-7 before a delighted crowd of 8,500. The win evened the Wildcat's season record at 1-1 while taking much of the sting out of the previous loss to Maryland.

The Cats established a lead midway through the second period when Pat O'Brien hit freshman wide receiver Tim Robinson with a 41 yard pass. "That play turned the game around," remarked O'Brien, who completed eight of 11 passes for 110 yards and ran for 82 more. "We moved the ball well up to then but kept stopping ourselves with turnovers. That play got us rolling."

Two minutes later, transfer sensation Willie Sydnor returned a punt 64 yards for a touchdown which gave Villanova a 14 point lead at the intermission. "I was going to fair-catch it," recalled Sydnor," but I decided not to at the last moment. The lane just opened up for me."

Things kept opening up for the Cats when on the first play of the second half Tom Leonard recovered a U. Mass fumble of the kick-off. Four plays later Mike Gold took the ball over the goal line.

The embarrassment continued in the fourth period when Pat O'Brien completed a 59 yard scoring drive with an eight yard sprint to the goal line. A 41 yard pass from second string quarterback Bob Loscalzo to Sydnor set up a seven-yard scramble by Shawn Passman making it 35-0 late in the fourth quarter.

The lone Minuteman touchdown was set up by a 22 yard pass from quarterback Mike McEvilly to receiver Mark Paglione. With just under seven minutes to play, McEvilly hit Bob Barbiasz with a two yard pass to ruin the Wildcats bid for a shutout.

The defensive effort was a team one led by Steve Duda, who had seven tackles. Howie Long also contributed five key tackles, a tipped pass and a QB sack. Dan Burke and Bernie Haber contributed 14 additional hits to round off the Cat's defense.

Chuck Bushbeck completed all five of his extra point attempts. The Wildcats will visit the Eagles of Boston College tomorrow. "We have to play with intensity for 60 minutes if we want to have a shot of winning. We have to be error-free, and that includes penalties," stated Offensive Coordinator Dick Bedesem Jr., "We must be patient in looking for opportunities."

Boston College is both experienced and talented. They have two potential All-East linebackers in Jeff Dziama and Jim Budness. The duo, combined with a big line, make defense the Eagles strong point. Quarterback Jay Palazola had an outstanding game last week as Boston College lost to Tennessee 28-16. Defensive Coordinator Lou Ferry remarks," He seems to have taken leadership on the team. He can throw the ball, sprint out and run. They're certainly going to be high for the game, because they played well against Tennessee. We want to continue our winning ways. The team that's going to win will be the one which wants it the most."

Willie Sydnor (31) had a 64 yard punt return for a touchdown against the U. Mass Minutemen.

The Committee To Restore Football at I-AA

Administration Responds to I-AA

By JAMES B. DeLORENZO and LEONARD J. La BARTH

Reaffirming its position on football at Villanova, the University administration has publicly revealed its negative response to the call for restoration at the I-AA level — a 22-page document detailing all aspects related to possible restoration, based on past performance, including the final Division I football season financial loss of more than $600,000.

The "Administration's Response to I-AA Football proposal," authored by the Rev. Lawrence Gallen, vice president for academic affairs, and dated June 22, 1983, disclosed that losses for the 1980-81 season totalled $652,780. Figures for 1971-80 were also presented. These figures had not been previously made available outside the administration.

"We have not released various statistics in the hope of avoiding public discussion of internal affairs," the report claimed. "But the result has been a void filled with rumors, innuendos and inaccuracies."

The administration response is in direct opposition to the proposal prepared by the Special Committee on Football. According to Gallen, the I-AA proposal submitted by the committee fails to meet the criteria established by the Board of Trustees.

The report concluded that "the Board of Trustees made a prudent and proper decision two years ago to drop football. Except for difficult relations with a segment of our alumni, that decision has been well received and its effects have been positive."

Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for academic affairs.

Replying to a decision in favor of Division I-AA football by a special committee appointed by the Board, Gallen stated in a letter dated June 23 "The dropping of I-A football has made us a better, more respected academic institution, returning football at I-AA level can only hurt the University."

"We have no objective evidence to gauge future alumni and student support of I-AA Football. . . Do we accept future promises or honor past performance."

Villanova's football program was discontinued on April 14, 1981. In response to criticism of its decision, the board appointed on Dec. 14, 1982, a special committee on football chaired by Trustee Chairman the Rev. Edward McCarthy. At that time, a deadline for a decision was set for December 1983.

The special committee was assigned by the Board to define an intercollegiate football program for Villanova satisfying the following criteria: financial sustainability, consistency with the University's mission statement and its academic goals and standards, and attractiveness to the various segments of the University's constituency.

Villanova Buys Out Pizza Palace

MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

Pizza Palace in Sullivan Hall will close permanently Dec. 22, 1983, while Stanford Hall's Pizza Palace is undergoing new management after both five year contracts expired and the University denied a renewal to Pizza Palace owner Andreas "Andy" Boukidis.

The University's five-year contract with Sullivan Pizza Palace expired in September 1983, but controversy sparked when considering the delays in converting the office space to a pizza parlor forced Pizza Palace to set back its opening date until March 30, 1978, conflicting with the contract's opening date of September 1977.

"The Pizza Palace should be open at least until March 30, 1984," stated Boukidis. "We had an oral contract agreement to extend the contract since the University's delay in completing the construction set back my opening date by six months."

Vice President for Student Life, Dr. Richard A. Neville, noted there was no verification of that verbal agreement and therefore did not have to be honored. "We wanted to close Pizza Palace over the summer," said Neville. "There are conflicting needs for that space." The University has tentative plans to convert the area into a laundry room or storage space.

Villanova's plan to turn the Sullivan Pizza Palace into a laundry room does not seem realistic to Boukidis. "When I signed a contract to bring my business to Sullivan Hall, the Rev. Martin (then the dean of students) and the Rev. Deegan (then the vice president for student life), promised me they were going to build a laundry room behind the Pizza Palace." That area eventually was designated to the photography department to use as a dark room.

Also, in setting up his restaurant in Sullivan, Boukidis recalled that there was a problem in finding one drain for a sink in the laundry area. "How they will work the drainage for a laundry room is questionable," said Boukidis.

In September 1982, Villanova's food service took over the Stanford Pizza Palace and the Director of Food Services, William Geis, commented on his new responsibility as "just another job."

Boukidis claims that in a conversation with Geis, he confessed "that he did not want the job and did not know why the University gave it to him."

Last September, Villanova offered Boukidis $3,700 for Stanford Pizza Palace facilities and claimed they would run the business themselves without giving Boukidis an option of renewal.

The reason Villanova denied a contract renewal option, according to Neville, "concerned the issue of keeping it clean and neat internally rather than through an outside source. The Pizza Palace was a business venture we gave Boukidis and by offering him a five-year contract, gave him a period long enough to recoup his original investment."

Neville continued to comment that Boukidis was a tenant, only paying for rent ($350 a month). "The equipment was his to use or sell based on his decision."

"The equipment I had invested in for Pizza Palace cost me $13,000 in 1976, but I had to take their price to sell," said Boukidis. "What would I do with all that equipment?"

Business for the Pizza Palace under the University's management has "not been great," according to Geis. "It does not draw anyone except those from the building and maybe a few girls from Good Counsel."

The decline in business has caused the shop to open only five nights a week, rather than have a seven-day service, "because we were losing money," added Geis.

Boukidis feels Villanova has not stood firm in other verbal contracts, one concerning the responsibility of keeping the Sullivan

License Denial Defended

By WILLIAM BURNS

"The students of Villanova University do not have a 'tremendous drinking problem': rather, Villanova encompasses a typical college population, and the amount of drinking which occurs here is no greater than it is on many other campuses." In these words, Vice President of Student Life Dr. Richard A. Neville summed up the alcohol situation here at Villanova. Neville was one member of a Villanova committee of seven who represented the University's interests in a recent Liquor Control Board (LCB) hearing on Campus Corner's application for a Malt and Brewed Beverage retail dispenser license.

At the advice of Villanova's legal counsel, a committee consisting of Neville; Chris Janosik, director of residence life; Sgt. John Harrity, of Villanova security; Dr. Angelo Armenti, dean of University College; the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of students; a resident assistant; and Villanova University's legal counsel, represented the University. Testimony was given by Neville, Armenti, Stack and the R.A. Although their testimoney reflected great concern about the close proximity of Campus Corner, Neville stressed that never was mention made of a "tremendous drinking problem."

When asked about the recent stringency of the administration concerning the drinking policy on campus, Neville stated that this occurred as a result of a different climate in Radnor Township regarding drunk-driving laws and the serving of alcohol to minors. The Pennsylvania LCB has recently become very strict in the enforcment of the Commonwealth statute which prohibits the sale of, possession of and consumption of alcoholic beverages by those under 21 years of age. Currently, with 2,663 resident students, 146 of whom are seniors, clearly over 90 percent of the student population is underage.

It is Neville's opinion that on-campus parties at which alcohol is served are much better than the current environment and infinitely better than the administration turning its back and allowing liquor to be sold next door. "When parties are sponsored by the University, many effective techniques, including carding and volume control, may be implemented to avoid unpleasant scenes and breaches of the law. However, the simple fact is that the LCB will not sanction such events." Neville applauded the rejection of Campus Corner's application by the LCB as "in the best interest of the University."

While Villanova University does not seem to be experiencing "tremendous drinking problems," the Administration feels that many problems which might have arisen with the sale of beer so close to campus have been avoided by the license denial.

Administration Reveals Facts Behind Football Decision

On June 27, 1983, the special committee recommended the restoration of football at the Division I-AA level, but the Board postponed a decision until its October or December meetings.

In a letter to McCarthy dated June 23, 1983, Gallen stated, "The I-AA proposal submitted (never officially approved) by the special committee fails to meet (the Board's) criteria."

Gallen said in the "Administration's Response" that "students and alumni did not support IA football, so it's difficult to see how playing football at a lower level will change that situation.

"We see . . . a serious redirection of funds away from our primary mission," added Gallen. "Money lost to football will certainly mean able students lost from the University.

"Sports, especially intramural activities, can contribute to the development of an individual," Gallen's report continued. "But an intercollegiate athletic program in no way figures as a primary part of the University's mission statement. In fact, an expensive, unsuccessful football program can only detract from the University's primary academic mission."

The Board reaffirmed its April 1981 decision at its July 1981 meeting. On May 7, 1981, the Alumni's Committee to Restore Football was founded. Then, on April 14, 1982, the General Alumni Association called for the resignation of University President Rev. John Driscoll.

An October 1982 survey conducted by the Student Government's Committee to Reinstate Football found that 96 percent of the 4300 students polled confirmed financial support of football.

"The student vote in favor of football was made without complete information. The University has never publicly made a case for the dropping of football," Gallen's report stated, "so students and alumni would naturally be unaware of the facts contained in this report."

Among the facts revealed, there was never a sold-out game in the University's 11,828 seat stadium. Also, adult season ticket sales declined from a high in 1974 of 887, the final season's total of 691. Student season tickets in 1980 amounted to 61. The average attendance at the games since 1974 was 7,107, with an average of 1,754 complimentary tickets.

Losses in the 1979-80 football season amounted to $611,320. In its final two seasons of Division I competition, the football programs' losses totalled $1,264,100. Income for that two-year period amounted to $536,503.

"The Committee on University Structure and Programs, established in 1973 to examine various cost centers of the University . . . recommended in 1974 that because of its high costs and limited benefits, the University discontinue intercollegiate football," Gallen noted. "The Board voted not to accept this recommendation, but rather to provide more time for IA football to become successful. Clearly, this did not happen."

Gallen's report claimed that "for at least the past ten years, basketball and track have proved to be our most visible, most successful sports in terms of national publicity. Basketball especially is proving to be not only a public relations but a financial plus as well.

According to the response, "resources gained from dropping football have been substantial. Other benefits have also accrued to the University. By dropping football we have freed scarce campus playing fields for use by a variety of varsity and intramural teams. Also, students occupying beds previously given free to football players are paying all expenses. Finally, resources made available by the decision to drop football have immediately been channelled into student financial aid (a critical area), into the purchase of needed computer hardware/software, and into other athletic programs."

Additionally, the response of the administration noted the need for resources in other athletic areas.

"The Board simply could not allow football to absorb the bulk of resources within the Athletic Program, nor allow it inevitably to impinge on general University expenditures. Resources redirected from a program benefiting a relatively few students and alumni enabled the University to improve facilities and programs for the benefit of the many. For instance, in conformity with federal law and a just sense of the equity due to the substantial female population at the University, a concerted effort has been made to improve athletic programs for female students. The total amount of money spent in 1974-75 on women's sports was $41,734. For 1981-82 that figure was $447,008. Money expended for intramural programs has risen from $25,032 in 1974-75 to $71,462 in 1981-82.

"Unlike football, which drained substantial amounts of money from University and athletic programs, basketball has begun to produce revenues for these programs. The stark truth is that the University football programs did not generate much publicity, certainly not beyond the areas where we already have a solid reputation," the report added.

Dropping football has not had any "demonstrable impact" on alumni contributions, Gallen claimed. Also, "members of our admissions staff unanimously agree that dropping football has had no apparent effect on enrollment."

The proposal for Division I-AA football included financial aid for players based on need. The draft of the proposal dated March 16, 1983 noted that such a policy would "enhance the number of minorities on campus." Gallen asked in his report, "Isn't it better for the University to recruit minority students and have them concentrate on their academic work, rather than to recruit them as student-athletes with split allegiances?"

"Comparable institutions such as Fordham and Georgetown have done quite well without major football programs," claimed Gallen. "Both schools dropped football and then very gradually moved from club sport to their current status as Division III, with which they are content."

Gallen continued, "A logical assumption would be that a compromise at Division III might be in order. However, football advocates have said that they would in no way support this program.

"Having a Division III program in place would cost the University money and would subject Board and Administration members alike to harassment and pressure from those who would wish to move Villanova to a higher football division. The administration plans to support (the Board's original) decision," Gallen concluded.

In April of 1983, the Villanova chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) conducted a survey of its members. Of the 229 who responded, (49 percent of the faculty), 35 percent opposed entirely the restoration of football, while 65 percent favored football at some level.

A letter from Gallen to "chairpersons, directors" dated July 8, 1983 stated that "as I read the results, 68 percent of the faculty believe that football should not return at all or at a level no higher than Division III."

The final results of the AAUP poll noted that 29 and one half percent voted for football at Division I-AA, with two percent voting for Division II and 33 percent favor of Division III.

According to a letter to the special committee from member Donald Creamer, dated March 17, 1983, the subcommittee "assigned the responsibility of reviewing the financial implications of Division I-AA . . . is comfortable with both the expense and revenue projections which were developed.

"The subcommittee is particularly enthused about this proposal inasmuch as it successfully addresses all of the criteria set forth by the Board of Trustees." Created Colonial Football Conference, scheduled to commence play in 1985, have committed to schedule Villanova at the I-AA level.

Members of the conference include: Holy Cross, Colgate, and the Universities of Richmond, Delaware, and Pennsylvania.

Villanova has also been mentioned as a possible member of the Yankee Conference, which includes the Universities of Massachusetts and Connecticut, as well as Boston University.

In May, the alumni's Committee to Restore Football endorsed the special committee's proposal.

Last week, the Villanova University Financial Alumni Club of New York petitioned the University to join as the seventh member claimed.

The subcommittee's proposal for Division I-AA football, based on a schedule of five home and five away games, projected expenses at $435,350, and revenues of $696,498.

Included in the revenue projection were student admission fees of $217,595, based on the student government's survey indicating that students would pay a $35 yearly fee for football. The figure was computed based on 6,217 students, the 1982-83 undergraduate enrollment figures.

Also included were Alumni season tickets. A projected total of three thousand seats per game at $10 each, were allocated, based on discussions with officers of the Wildcat booster club, who guaranteed the purchase of any unsold tickets up to 3,000.

The subcommittees' proposal indicated that members of a proposed Colonial Football Conference, scheduled to commence play in 1985, have committed to schedule Villanova at the I-AA level.

Members of the conference include: Holy Cross, Colgate, and the Universities of Richmond, Delaware, and Pennsylvania.

Villanova has also been mentioned as a possible member of the Yankee Conference, which includes the Universities of Massachusetts and Connecticut, as well as Boston University.

In May, the alumni's Committee to Restore Football endorsed the special committee's proposal.

Last week, the Villanova University Financial Alumni Club of New York petitioned the University to join as the seventh number of the proposed conference and that the "restoration of intercollegiate football to the playing field of V.U. can and should be accomplished on a basis of academic excellence and achievement."

Editor's Note: "The Administration Response to I-AA Football Proposal" was edited due to space limitations. However, the major tone and substance of the original document has been retained.

"Thus we fail to see anything convincing in the I-AA proposal that should make the Board reconsider its decision to drop football. The dropping of I-A football has made us a better, more respected academic institution; returning football at I-AA level can only hurt the University."

Administration Reveals Response

It's turning out to be an interesting fall at Villanova. One cannot go anywhere on campus without hearing or seeing some reference to the possible restoration of football at the University. Just when the initial furor over some aspect of the issue slackens, the flames of the fire lick out again and the two sides in the controversy start the mud-slinging and name-calling again. Last week, the alumni and student government expressed their intentions concerning restoration at I-AA. This week, the administration is presented on the soapbox in reaffirming its position against restoration at any level. The "Administration Response to I-AA" was released to the Villanovan this week,and it revealed information only hinted at previously outside the administration.

The last season of Villanova football, played at the Division I level, resulted in a loss of $653,780. The ugly truth is that Villanova football was a losing proposition; a loss of more than $600,000 seems like a small amount on paper but when it's understood that this amount could finance one year's tuition for at least 69 students, the sum is magnified tenfold.

The administration's report also included the fact that the program lost over $500,000 four seasons in a ten year period.

The anti-football advocates have based their argument against the I-AA football proposal on past figures, including season tickets purchased by students, alumni giving and home game attendance. The facts are not pretty.

The main contention is this: the Special Committee on Football claims in its proposal for I-AA is that the University's fiscal responsibility for football would be $252,687. The University disagrees, reporting that the University would actually accrue a debt of $574,537 on football.

The Board of Trustees will decide either in October or December whether to swallow its collective pride and restore a program based on promises and a financial accounting that differs from the administration's or take the easy way out and simply stand firm on its original decision to drop the sport because of the financial liabilities involved.

It's going to be an interesting fall, indeed.

O'Brien's Death A Family Loss

A member of the family died this week. Jim O'Brien, the 43-year old weatherman, anchorman, disc jockey, show host and local personality was killed last Sunday in a parachuting accident. The news hit everyone hard as word spread following the afternoon accident. No one was convinced it was true. The vibrant man had predicted a beautiful weekend weather forecast only 48 hours before. So all eyes were riveted to their television sets for the 6 p.m. news — and we found out it was true. The man who was a part of our lives for 13 years, who had brightened many of our days with his zany banter, had died, robbing us, his audience, of a vital part of our daily routines — watching the news as we wanted to — with Jim O'Brien.

He came to Philadelphia in 1970, joining the — then successful WFIL radio as a disc jockey and doing weather occasionally for Channel 6. He joined WPVI exclusively in 1977 as the weatherman. With Larry Kane and Joe Pellegrino, O'Brien was one-third of the news team that knocked Channel 3 off of the number one perch. O'Brien's charisma on camera annoyed television critics but endeared him to the viewers. Often his affected Texas drawl and his constant references to the "dribs and drabs" in the weather fronts began us laughing at him until we realized we were laughing with him. There were many viewers who can attest to the fact that when it was time for the weather, they switched off any other station and tuned on Jim O'Brien.

When fellow newsman and friend Jim Gardner shed his tears a few hours after O'Brien's death, we all sobbed with him. A small part of our lives, brought to us for a decade by the immediacy of television, has been taken from us. We've lost a member of our family.

Endorsement of "Bring Your Own"

To the Editor:

I would like to challenge the editorial position taken by the Villanovan which recommended that students simply accept the alcohol policy that has been adopted by the Office of Student Life. ("Alcohol: No Choice — It's The Law," 9/16/83)

Ostensibly, all of the blame for the no-alcohol-on-campus policy is attributable to threats and actions by the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board (LCB). Actually, a careful reading of the front-page interview with the Vice-President for Student Life, Dr. Richard Neville, shows that there is more to this policy than simple acquiescence to a state law.

Admittedly, the LCB can and did raise serious questions about the serving of alcohol (beer) to minors by university-approved groups. However, the LCB cannot force university personnel to act as state police to stop minors from consuming alcohol on university property or at university-approved activities if the minors "bring their own."

That the university cannot serve alcohol to minors — that's the law; that the university will prevent the consumption of alcohol by minors — that's the university's choice but it's not the law.

Dr. Neville's interview reveals a university administration which was (is) uncomfortable with the amount of drinking that was going on on-campus, which believes "you don't need beer to socialize," and which feels that a reduction of alcohol consumption on campus will "add to the quality of life at Villanova."

It seems too convenient to make the LCB the "whipping boy," a kind of irresistible force which leaves our university with "no other choice" but to adopt "the only possible decision and punish any consumption of alcohol by minors on our campus.

From my perspective as a person who survived a number of near-expulsions as an undergraduate student in the 1950s and who benignly acknowledged covert consumption by minor students in our dorms as a priest-proctor in the 1960s, I was pleasantly surprised by the flavor of life on campus when I was able to share openly some occasional beers with students in our dorm and at bumping and bopping socials on and off campus.

Last year, students gathered and bumped at Friday and Saturday "TGs" in our dorm lounge;

"dayhops" and "off campus residents" came back to campus at night to bop and check the crowd at Friday and Saturday mixers; residents invited proctors and priests into their rooms to "share some suds" with them and their friends.

This week, a DJ mixer played for about ten rockers on Friday nght, a hired band played for about a dozen boppers on Saturday, and I walked through a nearly-empty campus "Center" and an eerily-quiet dormitory before going off campus to a couple of student mixers and socials.

This year, our students bring their own to other college campuses in our area, our students buy their own at any number of recognized public places from Philadelphia to Paoli, and our students hold their own socials at gatherings everywhere except on our campus.

Our students go away from our campus to mix and have fun and coincidentally, not primarily,they drink. As a "Father" who has chosen a position which is "in loco parentis," I want our students to feel that they are welcome to make themselves at home at Villanova. As a person who has savored the flavor of life at Villanova for the better part of the past thirty years I want to voice a resounding "NO!" to the no-alcohol-on-campus policy and advocate, instead, a policy which allows our students opportunities to "bring their own" home to campus.

I urge the Villanovan to reexamine the administration's rationale for the non-alcohol policy and to reject the administration's efforts to create clean (non-alcoholic) fun and games for capable young adults.

I urge our students to demonstrate a determined dissatisfaction with a policy that forces them to leave home for their friends and fun.

I urge Fr. Driscoll to encourage our students' parents to "bring their own" to Parents' Weekend and enjoy our campus openly at least on those days, and I urge him to encourage our graduates to "bring their own" to Homecoming Weekend and enjoy our campus openly with the present batch of undergrads.

I urge the Resident Assistants to ask for a relaxation of the "seize and report" mentality in the dorms so that they can focus on their primary responsibilities as friends rather than as state police.

And finally, I urge our student leaders to initiate serious discussions with the members of our administration to formulate a realistic and responsible alcohol plan and policy which we can all live with and which will add to the quality of life at our University.

Sensing Shame

To the Editor:

Thank you for publishing my recent observation about the unkindness of some of our faculty and staff, parking as they do in such a way as to block pedestrians

It is now the students' turn to take heat for thoughtlessness: four times today I have seen cyclists — one motorized — hurtling along the thoroughfare between Kennedy and Dougherty halls at a breakneck (literally) clip. This during changes of class, when the area is crowded with frangible bodies.

Doesn't anyone here think of the safety and convenience of others?

The rules of common decency, if not common sense, would seem to have been repealed!

Perhaps the Villanovan might take some space each week to pillory a few of these egregious offenders. Perhaps shame might prompt what humanity does not.

(You might include the maniacs who drive their cars past the library as if they were on an interstate highway, but I suspect that they are beyond shame. Sensing shame requires intelligence.)

Know Alternatives

To the Editor:

Since the notice in the FYI column concerning Planned Parenthood appeared in the Sept. 9 issue of the Villanovan, two "letters to the editor" have been written. Both these letters expressed valid opinions.

We agree with the need for pregnancy counseling. We cannot ignore the problem of an "unwanted" pregnancy — it will not go away if we simply refuse to believe it exists. Family planning is a necessary and pratical part of a person's educational growth. We support pregnancy counseling centers that provide the individual with guidance and professional advice. Our organization is becoming actively involved with Amnion Crisis Pregnancy Center, which has just recently opened up in Wayne.

Planned Parenthood has some valid family planning programs. However, Planned Parenthood is not just a counseling service, as one might think after reading the notice in FYI. Planned Parenthood advocates abortion as the preferred option to "unwanted" pregnancies — regardless of the circumstances. Planned Parenthood is a business, and an important part of its business is the abortion clinics it operates. As a business, it has a right to advertise. The notice in the FYI column asks for counselors; counselors help promote Planned Parenthood's abortion business. In effect, the notice is an advertisement and does not belong in the FYI column. The notice is a wolf in sheep's clothing: an advertisement disguised as an opportunity for students to take part in a social service program.

Yes, we support pregnancy counseling services. But Planned Parenthood's "counseling service" does nothing more than take advantage of a pregnant woman in need of counseling, using her distressed state to convince her to have an abortion. Abortions make money for Planned Parenthood. There are plenty of counseling centers that offer a woman understanding, medical care, live-in accommodations, financial aid, foster home care — and even post-abortion counseling. Their concern is for the individual in trouble, not in making money. People have the right to know other alternatives besides Planned Parenthood's alternatives. PBD V.U. History?

To the Editor:

As president of Pi Beta Delta, one of two local sororities on campus, I am finding it more difficult to attract new members. With the big rush programs put on by the national sororities through the Panhellenic Council, and the new chapters being established at Villanova, a large percentage of freshmen and the majority of upperclassmen are opting to pledge a large, national organization.

As a Greek, I am thrilled to see the boom in sorority population, but, as a member of a small, local organization, I am fighting to keep PBD a vital part of the Villanova Greek Community. It is very disappointing that the advantages of a local sorority are being overlooked by prospective members.

For the past six years, we have won Greek Week five times and tied for first once. We own intramural championships in basketball and softball. We are conspicuously involved in every aspect of Villanova life. Our small membership is a diverse group that encompasses fifteen different majors and a wide variety of extracurricular activities.

Without the constant recruitment of new members, Pi Beta Delta will become just a part of Villanova history. We're looking for women who are interested in becoming a part of Villanova's future. Help us maintain a Villanova tradition. We need you.

A Letter to Patrick Leahy

Villanova General Alumni Association

Mr. Patrick Leahy
President
Student Government Association
Villanova University
Villanova, PA

Dear Mr. Leahy:

Some response is appropriate by the General Alumni Association of Villanova University to the advertisement that out-lined the student government's position on football in the September 23rd issue of the Villanovan.

It is the opinion of the General Alumni Association that the best interests of the University ARE being served by the position of the alumni. The Alumni Association has no intention whatsoever of withholding funds from its members from the University. The football issue and the restructuring of the Alumni Association are distinct questions. How the football question was resolved merely pointed out the need for a reanalysis of the position of the alumni vis-a-vis the University.

For the past five years, the General Alumni Association has been studying the overall effects, both positive and negative, of changing their operating procedures. A decision as to the future operations of the Alumni Association has not yet been made; and, most probably, will not be made for some time. The Alumni Association, should it change its method of operation, has no intention of dangling funds in front of anyone.

For the Student Government Association to refer to all of the officers of the General Alumni Association's Executive Committee, the officers of the Association's area clubs and all members of the Association's Board of Governors as "this element" is strange indeed. Perhaps it is nothing more than a sincere emotion fired by misinformation.

Since football has been dropped, there have been numerous discussions, debates and clarifications of the many issues associated with the discontinuation and possible restoration of 1AA football. Many segments of the University were indeed involved, including the alumni, students, faculty and the Board of Trustees. The Administration, which serves at the pleasure of the trustees, was noticeably absent from these discussions and, in fact, attempted to thwart all attempts made by the alumni to create a meaningful dialogue. The Alumni Association, the elected voice of the entire alumni population, also unanimously supports the restoration of 1AA football. The Alumni Association, over the past several years, has been in harmony and agreement with the student government association and will continue to support the efforts to help accomplish the restoration of 1AA football.

The most interesting sentence in this recent statement by the student government association was "have have been involved:" Students through the poll conducted by the student government; the faculty through AAUP poll; the alumni through fund raising; AND THE ADMINISTRATION? EXACTLY WHAT ACTION HAS THE ADMINISTRATION TAKEN? A few of their more positive steps were:

1. To withhold financial information from the study committee of the Senate Committee.
2. To refuse to even discuss the possibility of restoration with the alumni.
3. To embarrass the university committee by lining up the Vice Presidents of the University and the faculty members on the University Senate demanding votes of confidence.

The alumni created dialogue with the trustees (do not confuse the administration with the Board of Trustees). The alumni worked diligently to get the facts, talked to literally thousands of the Association's members and plainly and publicly presented its position.

There is, in the opinion of the Villanova General Alumni Association, nothing that the ADMINISTRATION would like more than to create a problem between student government and alumni government, but the alumni government will not allow that to happen. Alumni government encourages student government to continue its campaign for the restoration of 1AA football. Alumni government encourages the new student government at Villanova to get the entire story on all of the issues associated with this problem and to go forward using the ways and means available to it to accomplish its goal.

The Villanova University General Alumni Association, without qualifications, supports the students and the Student Government Association of Villanova University.

basement dining area clean. "Villanova said they had special government funds and could hire students to work there to clean and keep order," cited Boukidis. "Last year, however, when I returned in September, the place was a mess with two broken pinball machines and roaches. I called to complain and once, maybe twice, they sent someone to fix up the place."

Neville stated that "the Pizza Palace was closed partially because there was dissatisfaction with the main tenants," and continued to deny any knowledge of a verbal agreement by Villanova to maintain the area.

"It is questionable as to the responsibility of maintenance," according to the Director of Housekeeping, Carl Clapper. "I knew nothing of this verbal agreement and was not involved at all in any discussion about it." The service housekeeping did provide said Clapper, "was periodical checks to fix up the area. As supervisor, I understood a group of students have keys to the area and take care of the place."

Boukidis noted that "if students are hired, they are not staying to do their job. I am in charge of all business behind the counter, but end up sending my employees to clean up."

As to the present condition of Sullivan Pizza Palace, Clapper cited that "the place is a disaster."

Neville also commented that it is "questionable as to how on top of that (the maintenance of Pizza Palace) we were."

Another verbal promise that never surfaced, according to Boukidis, was consent given by Martin and Deegan (during Connelly Center's construction), assuring Pizza Palace a spot in the building when it was ready to open. Once construction was near completion, however, Boukidis claims Deegan, " ashamed he was now unable to help," sent him to Mark Tuchman, director of Connelly Center, with his request. Tuchman turned down Boukidis' business proposal due to lack of space.

"I was satisfied with my business as it was on campus, so did not pursue that particular restaurant business venture," said Boukidis. "I was told that Pizza Palace and Connelly Center would not be competitive because I am open after 6 p.m. and late into the evening when Connelly Center is closed," added Boukidis.

Now, Boukidis claims Villanova wanted to eliminate his food service in Sullivan because it took business from the Connelly Center.

Neville emphasized that the University was taking this action to "replace a service with a service. There are other alternative needs the students have for that particular area other than their pizza needs." Besides Connelly Center, Neville pointed out other take-out services are available and convenient to the students.

Boukidis continued to retaliate against Villanova's choice to turn away his food service since he is "convenient to Villanova students and has always been there. I am open seven days a week, no matter what. When my restaurant in Bryn Mawr closed during last year's snow storm, I still kept Villanova's Pizza Palace opened knowing the students were stranded there on campus.

Pizza Palace soon to be closed.

Other services Boukidis gave to Villanova were through its various organizations. "Whenever any group on campus came to me for donations or a special service, I always helped them out. Donations for ads in the school newspaper, on the school radio and in the year book I never denied," reported Boukidis.

Last year his business donations did decline "because of the start of the contract conflict," said Boukidis.

According to Boukidis, his attempt to set up two $500 scholarships was at one time discouraged by the University. "Deegan warned me not to expect anyone to thank me for it."

Boukidis commented that for the past few years, communication between himself and the University has disappeared aside from the contact between the lawyers. "As soon as Martin and Deegan left their offices at Villanova, it's been as if maybe they (the University) had something against the two and are taking it out on me. I as far as I can tell, have always been friendly to everyone in the administration and being satisfied with my business on campus, kept any complaints I did have to myself."

"I did not want any problems to come out when my contract came up for renewal," continued Boukidis.

Boukidis is however, upset about his loss of business at Villanova "because of the success both financially and on a personal level."

Resistance of business has compounded recently for Pizza Palace, with the loss of the business transaction for the annual freshman orientation picnic. Pizza Palace had provided its services at the freshman picnic since 1978, when first approached for the job. In the past, Boukidis has charged the University only for the number of hoagies ordered, anywhere from 4,500 to 6,000 and donated 200 to 300 pounds of salads, cups, plates, napkins and forks.

"I challenged the orientation chairman to shop around for a better price and told them to come back to me and then I'd see if I could offer a lower bid," said Boukidis.

"I made sure the orientation group received exactly what they ordered and made sure the sandwiches were fresh," said Boukidis.

Field House Construction Update

By AMELIA McGOVERN

The new athletic field house is scheduled to be completed in time for the 1985-86 basketball season, according to William Clause, director of construction at Villanova.

Clause, who is "responsible for the coordination and administration of the design of the new dormitories-south campus, multi-purpose athletic facility and other capital projects" according to a letter from Villanova's President, the Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A., "anticipates "intercollegiate and intramural basketball definitely by the 1985-86 season. If construction moves rapidly some activity may be seen in the latter part of the 1984-85 basketball season, in February or March."

The new building, a multi-purpose athletic facility, will include a 200-meter indoor track, four intramural basketball courts which can also be used as two tennis or volleyball courts and a swimming pool.

Existing facilities will be renovated to accommodate the new facilities. The Butler Annex will be converted to racquetball courts. The swimming pool area in the present field house will be converted to two floors. The top floor will be offices and the bottom, lockers.

Construction of the field house itself cannot begin until final approval has been given. This process is a lengthy one. The first step is township approval, expected this week.

There are certain qualifications which must be met to get this approval. Specific plans must be filed with the Delaware County Commission, 226 parking spaces must be added and the capacity must be limited to 6,400 seats.

The next step is to obtain county approval. Drawings of the plans must be sent to county officials. County approval is expected next week.

Once given township and county approval, an application is sent to the township for a foundation permit, which will allow construction of footings to begin. While this is being done, the balance of the architectural drawings will be completed.

The next step is to get the approval of the Building Officials and Code Administration (BOCA), a national body which reviews construction drawings. In addition to BOCA approval, the State Department of Labor and Safety has to approve the building for the health, safety and welfare of its occupants.

Once this is completed, the township can give its final approval and actual construction can begin.

When the pool is completed in the new building, the pool portion of the present building can be reconstructed as planned.

The machinery and noise on campus at present is due to the relocation of existing sanitary lines. A grading permit has allowed this to be done while final approval is being sought.

The new facility will cost $9.5 million and is being paid for by the same bond issue which is paying for the new south campus dormitories, said Clause.

V.U. Internships Reviewed

By HENRY Di BENEDETTO

"Interns are placed in assignments for five days a week for a whole semester with a chance to earn up to 15 academic credits, six in the individual's major and nine in elective credits," explained Dr. Albert Dorley, director of the Villanova Internship Program.

Villanova provides experiential learning opportunities for students through the University's internship program.

"By meeting experienced professionals and performing some of their tasks, the student will learn to apply, in a practical setting, academic experiences and realize the relationship between what may be prescribed and what is actually applied," claimed Dorley.

Some of the work in the program include the student intern working in courts, news rooms, law offices, as probation officers and in various social and political affairs. The Internship Program extends outside the Philadelphia area, as several interns work in New York and Washington D.C. Housing is provided with the regular payment of the student's tuition acting as his or her room and board.

"One can look at the placement of a few Villanova students and see the fascinating type of work," said Dorley. Bill Harahan and Bruce Turgiss are with the law firm of Kiles and McDermott in Georgetown. Locally, Eileen McGrath is working with Congressman Bob Edgar at his district office.

"There is no limit to the number of interns per semester," said Dorley, "but the requirements for a student to be eligible include one's gradepoint average to be at least 2.5, a junior or senior status and enrollment in the College of Arts and Sciences," explained Dorley.

Once the program has begun, the student intern is required to keep a weekly log of his or her work, and a final paper is due at the end of the semester. Grades are determined by a midterm and final evaluation by Dorley, and a pass/fail grade is assessed.

"Traditionally, most students have spoken highly of their experiences in the program and have gone on to continue in a successful field of work," remarked Dorley.

A Tribute To Philly's "Good Guy"

By CAROLYN MILLER

Last Sunday's sunny, warm weather was perfect for the barbecue I had been enjoying with some friends, until the greatest "thunder boomer" of all was dropped on the Delaware Valley. The 4:30 p.m. phone call alerting us that Jim O'Brien, news anchor and weatherman for WPVI-TV (Channel 6), was killed in a sky-diving accident that noon just did not register.

Immediately my disbelief turned to shock as a silent announcement of his death ran across the TV screen broadcasting the Phillies-Cardinals game.

Dead? How could Jim O'Brien be dead? The first person EVER to make the weather understandable was not dead. He taught us that thunderstorms were "boom-booms," that strong winds separated the "good guys" from the "bad guys," that the combination of rain, sleet and snow was "gloppy gook." He was not really dead.

O'Brien and I go way back; I grew up with him. He moved to town about the same time as I. We were both transplants to this area and practically related. My family loved him and he visited our home often, for almost an hour every day.

Jim O'Brien.

As a teenager, I bopped to the old bubble-gum format of WFIL, the radio station at which he first worked when he was new in town. During vacation, I survived those long summer mornings watching "Dialing for Dollars" and the noon news on which he worked.

At 6 and 11 p.m., I enjoyed his sizzling summer forecasts promising good swimmin' weather for the following day. His winter declarations of snowy blizzards, which resulted in no school, were not bad either.

What was the attraction to this "wild and crazy" friend who behaved in such an unheard-of news format? O'Brien ALWAYS made me smile. How could one not laugh when, after delivering a blistering forecast, the cameraman zoomed from his suit jacket to his shorts, skinny legs and sneakers?

Since I was nine years old, there were four things with which I associated Philadelphia: the soft pretzel with mustard, the Philly cheese steak, the Museum of Art and Jim O'Brien on "Action News." No questions asked; they were here to stay, especially Jim O'Brien — my buddy; my pal.

As I grew up, I wanted to meet him. My wish came true last year when I worked as an intern in the Channel 6 newsroom. "Jimbo" was truly a nice guy. Through the most hectic days, he always found time to share a joke with me or sing me a song. Five minutes of his time were worth the hours of newsroom pressure.

Those not from the Delaware Valley have surely heard of O'Brien. It was because of him that we did not go to Kelly's until after 11:30 p.m. on weekday evenings!

The newspaper, the radio and the look on Jim Gardner's face Monday night confirmed that O'Brien is dead. Philadelphia's best asset is now its worst loss.

He was worth every penny of his rumored $400,000 per year salary. O'Brien's zest for life touched us all and made us laugh. The void he leaves is great. In his last weather forecast on Friday, who but O'Brien could describe the chilly temperature as a "brillyunt?" The only chill in the air now will be the mourning of his death.

MASH Mania on V.U. Campus

By PAUL DON VITO

When introduced to David Reiss, the foremost authority on the popular television series MASH, the question which comes to mind is, — Why? Why did a seemingly normal Californian (maybe a contradiction in terms) take the time and effort to become the foremost authority on the series? Why did he spend over two years on the set of MASH with no other purpose than to "get to know" the cast?

These answers and more can be found in David Reiss's MASH, The Exclusive Inside Story of T.V.'s Most Popular Show, which is probably the most definitive (and possibly the only) full-length writing on the series. The book, although not one of the most controversial of the twentieth century, is nonetheless an enjoyable and insightful look at the television show. It includes an in-depth look at each of the characters and the actors who played them.

Cashing in on a pop phenomenon, David Reiss now takes to the college lecture circuit. Packing an assortment of audio-visual aids, Reiss' lecture to a crowd of about 800 people was predictably rehearsed, as was the audience's responses. As Reiss' lecture progressed, he covered far too personal and often uninteresting aspects of each actor's personality. These in-depth views covered everything from the characters' upbringing to those fateful days of filming.

The juicy bits of gossip about the members of the 4077th included Alan Alda's bout with polio - which was later cured by a nun, and Klinger's real life childhood in Toledo. And did you know that Gary Burghoff is a jazz drummer . . . did you care? The list of tidbits is endless (or at least seems that way). But it was nice to hear that the comraderie shown on the set is paralleled by the close feelings the members of the cast have for each other.

Afterwards, in a personal interview, David Reiss presented a bleak picture of future television. Although shows such as MASH prove that the American public will watch quality programs, he feels prime time is still stacked with garbage. As a writer for television, Reiss must face the dilemma between quality writing and sensationalistic scripts designed to do nothing more than shock the audience. Reiss believes that television has chosen the latter and shows with a message will remain the exception and not the rule - if people will watch it, the networks will play it. Despite his intense interest in MASH, David Reiss admits that he seldom even turns on the tube. It is easy to see how a man whose favorite film is Frank Capra's classic, "It's a Wonderful Life" could become distraught over the present state of television.

In closing, David Reiss ended the interview by extending a special thanks to his Villanova audience for being patient and attentive despite his laryngitis. As for his future, we'll just have to wait, but don't be surprised if you see Three's Company-the Inside Story at your local bookstore.

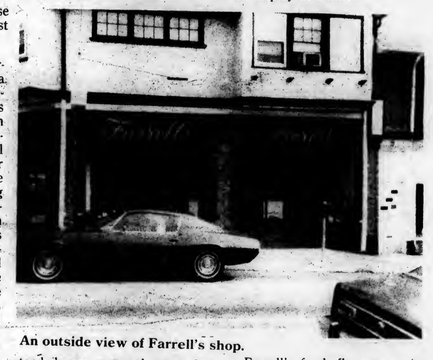
A Flourishing Flower Business

By BANITA S. WILSON

While most college seniors are setting up interviews to get into business, one industrious senior is setting up his own business. There is a newly renovated florist shop located in Drexel Hill that is the brainchild of Timothy Farrell, a senior accounting major at Villanova. At 21, he manages to attend classes, own and operate his own business, study and direct an occasional C.Y.O. play for his parish.



An outside view of Farrell's shop.

Farrell's Florist, according to Farrell, is a "modern, abstract" floral shop, due to his own innovative designs. The shop is divided in two sections; a rustic patio type display area and a modern abstract area.

The rustic section is characterized by its outdoor summer bar-b-que atomosphere. The floor is composed of imported black Italian slate, such as one would find on a modern patio. Plants are suspended from the ceiling, which provides both practical and visual beauty. Another wall consists of a three-tiered display covered with various types of house plants.

A unique floral arrangement is displayed at the center of Farrell's shop. It is a modern abstract design in which Farrell takes much pride. The floor of this section is designed in black and white alternating tiles, which off-set the flowers in a dazzling manner. The modern section is characterized by the use of glass cubicles displaying everything from flowers to gifts and porcelain dolls. All of the flowers in this area are imported silk from Japan and China. They range in price from 29¢ a stem for mini-carnations and roses, to $4.98 a stem for Amaryllis, a long-stemmed, broad blossomed flower (approx. 6 in. in diameter), which is hand-made and painted in Thailand. It is so detailed that one could easily mistake it for a live flower. There are approximately 7500-10,000 silks on display at a time.

Farrell's fresh flowers are inside a custom-made, refrigerator in the left rear of the shop. These are imported from Holland, Australia, South America, and Israel, though some are from various regions of the U.S. Their prices range from 10¢ for a pom-pom to $3.50 a blossom for a Protea, an Australian import, and $15 a blossom for the ever popular orchid.

Farrell got the idea to open a flower shop, after he'd been working at one after classes for eighteen months. When a friend of the family told him of an ideal location for his shop, he jumped at the chance, says Farrell. "We heard about it Friday, looked at it Saturday, and signed the lease on Monday," recalls Farrell. Farrell was in a rush to beat out other potential buyers for the property.

"This is a perfect area for this type of business because it has a few florists, but they're all traditional," which, of course Farrell is not. In fact, his specialty is european design, in which a few flowers are arranged in a highly styled manner, as opposed to American design where more flowers are used in a bunched style.

The financing for this endeavor was supplied by his parents and a small business loan from the bank. In the beginning he had a hard time establishing credit. "A lot of the suppliers didn't take me

Thomas of Villanova, A Life Dedicated to the Poor

By THE REV. PETER DONAHUE, O.S.A.

On October 31, 1841, two Augustinians, Father Moriarty and Father Kyle, purchased the Belle Air Estate, the country home of Mr. John Rudolph, for the sum of $18,000, with the purpose of opening a Catholic college. On September 18, 1843, Father John O'Dwyer opened the college with an enrollment of ten students, giving it the name of Villanova. The name, Villanova, or "New House" comes from a city in Spain which was the home of Thomas of Villanova, an Augustinian bishop who lived during the early 16th century.

The feast of St. Thomas of Villanova was celebrated last week, September 22, by the Augustinian Order. Thomas is honored throughout the Order as the patron of studies. The easter Province of Augustinians in the United States has been established under his patronage. As we take time out to remember this man of God, it might be helpful to focus some attention on his life in the hopes of adding to our own understanding of our relationship with God. Thomas was born in the Province of Toledo, Spain in the year 1486 and grew up in the city of Villaneuva. At the age of sixteen he entered the University of Alcala where he obtained degrees in Theology and later joined the faculty of this university. Sometime later he was offered a teaching position at the famous University of Salamanca but turned it down in order to pursue his goal of becoming an Augustinian Friar. He was admitted to the Order of St. Augustine and professed his first vows on November 25, 1517. The following year, Thomas was ordained a priest. In the Augustinians he served as Prior of three different communities for a total of nine years. He was twice elected to the office of Provincial and it was as the Provincial that Thomas sent the first Augustinians to the new world where they established the Order in Mexico.

In 1542, Thomas was nominated by the King of Spain to be Archbishop of Granada but he refused. Two years later he was nominated again by the king, this time to the city of Valencia. Thomas accepted the position only under obedience from his Provincial. Though Thomas served for ten years as Archbishop of Valencia, one of the wealthiest dioceses in Spain, he always maintained the style of life he had professed as an Augustinian. He preferred to wear the religious habit of his community to the finery of the prelates of his day.

During his time as Archbishop Thomas made his priority the visitation of his diocese for nine months of his first year in office. By increasing his prayer life, performing greater and more numerous acts of sacrifice and self denial he sought to affect much needed changes in the lives of the clergy and laity alike. Revered among his people as "Father of the poor" he provided money for young women to be married in dignity, he opened his kitchen to feed the hungry who came daily to his door, and he provided lodging in his home for those who had none. Above all, his charity was one that came not only from his purse but from his heart. In 1545, Thomas was summoned to the Council of Trent but asked to be excused because of desolate conditions in his archdiocese. In 1551 he was summoned again to the Council but at this time was too sickly to attend. Exhausted by his endless efforts to secure a better lifestyle for his people, Thomas requested the king to be relieved of his responsibilities. The king ignored his request. On August 28, 1555, the feast of St. Augustine, Thomas of Villanova celebrated the liturgy for the last time. He died on September 8, 1555 and was buried as he requested in the Augustinian Monastery where he last resided before becoming Archbishop. He was canonized in 1658.

St. Thomas of Villanova has left us an example of a Christian life dedicated to the well-being of others. Because of his great efforts in both the field of education and social justice, the Augustinians who founded this universitv have given it the name Villanova to honor the achievements of one of their brothers.

oo seriously at first," he says. But hanks to a little persistence, the ellers are now calling him to ake orders. After almost two weeks of operation, he's doing well. "I thought it would be good, but it even exceeded my expectations," Farrell jubilantly stated.

Farrell seems to have a firm grasp in a potentially taxing situation of balancing both school and work. "The newness of the shop, the novelty of it; it's so new that I don't mind being there twelve hours a day, then going back home to study and do homework." He receives much support from his family and friends wo are always there to lend a helping hand. At present he's trying to find the time to teach his family floral arrangement, as he does all of his arrangements himself.

In dealing with business, Farrell has finally found a practical use and motivation to go to class. "I never realized how much I learned until now; once applied to real situations it makes more sense," he concluded.

J.F.K. Debate

By SUE SPAGNOLA

Sponsored by the Villanova Political Union, Dr. Cyril Wecht, an expert in the details of the Kennedy assassination and an investigator independent of the Warren Commission, will support his claims that there is enough evidence to reopen the case in the debate forum on Oct. 3, 1983.

Wecht, one of the most respected pathologists in the country, candidly offers several possible explanations of the Kennedy assassination.

In the debate this Monday at 7 p.m. in the Wayne/St. Davids Rooms of Connelly Center, Wecht will make his presentation and members of the three political parties of the Union debate the issue. A reception will follow.

A's Members Go Their Separate Ways

By NICK ANASTASIO

After six years, two albums, and one EP, the A's, one of Philadelphia's finest bands, have called it quits. They played their last show at the Ripley Music Hall on September 20, in front of many old friends and fans.

The A's

"It was a pretty good show," said A's bassist Terry Bortman. "It was the madhouse we thought it would be. A lot of our friends from the Northeast (Philadelphia) were there."

The A's had decided in July that it was time to go their separate ways. Lead vocalist Richard Bush and keyboardist Rocco Notte had become convinced that synth-pop, or techno-pop, (Soft Cell, Sparks, Eurhythmics, etc.) was the wave of the future. They started making demos as a duo, and stopped writing songs for the A's. Meanwhile, guitarist Rick DiFonzo started doing studio session work for such singers as Rachel Sweet. With no new material, the A's sets became stale.

"It was time for it to happen," said Bortman, referring to the breakup. "Keeping the band going would have just run the A's into the ground."

So now Bush and Notte are trying to make it as a synth-pop duo, and DiFonzo is moving to New York to become a studio musician, (working with Rick Chertoff, who produced the first A's album and part of the second). Drummer Michael Snyder has been working with the Bricklin Brothers, who were the driving force behind the Schoolboys. Bortman, meanwhile, may be ready to hang up his bass. "I've been talking to a few bands, but it might be time to buckle down and get a real job." (For the record, Bortman, in his mid-thirties, is the only member of the band over 30.)

The A's had their share of ups and downs. Bush, Notte, and DiFonzo started out in a cover band called 42nd Street, playing clubs on the Jersey shore. They eventually grew tired of being a cover band, and decided to do their own songs. Fearing a lack of security, the bassist and drummer quit, and were replaced by Bortman and Snyder. Bush then changed the band's name to the A's, partly because it would put their records at the top of the album racks, since most record stores stock albums alphabetically by artists.

As soon as the A's started playing all original material, one week bookings became one night stands: get booked at a bar, play one night, get fired. The pattern often repeated itself until, slowly, the A's built up a modest following. Then they signed with Apple-Chipetz Management. Apple-Chipetz eventually got the A's an audition for Arista Records.

"It was one of our highlights," recalls Bortman. "It was what we had been building to. Arista rented out a rehearsal studio in New York and we auditioned there. We did a live set — even wore out stage clothes — for three people. After it was over the president of Arista said, 'Boys, I think we should talk.' They took us to dinner, then afterwards we hired lawyers, who huddled with Arista's lawyers, until a contract was drawn up."

The A's debut album was released in the summer of 1979. It would have sold less, had it not been for a brief tour of the Midwest. The A's played in such cities as Cleveland, Chicago, and Cuyahoga Falls. In Chicago, they opened for the Cramps and the Talking Heads. The Chicago audience responded better than any audience outside of Philadelphia.

The crowd at the Beacon Theater in New York was far less responsive. The A's were opening for Rainbow, but they were not advertised at all. Said Bortman, "Everyone settled in their seats expecting to see Rainbow, and we came on. People were ripping stuff off the seats just so they could run up and throw them at us."

The A's also played in Toronto, Washington, D.C., Boston, Providence, the Palladium (in Manhattan), and Buffalo. They opened for Steve Forbert at an outdoor concert at Buffalo College, and DiFonzo was stung by a bee.

They also opened for such acts as the Ramones (by the time the A's broke up, they had opened four times for the Ramones), Robert Palmer, (again at the Beacon, this time to a somewhat more receptive crowd), Peter Tosh, Southside Johnny and the Asbury Jukes (at the Tower Theater), and the Kinks (at the Spectrum). "We actually played the Spectrum!" mused Bortman.

Yet after all this exposure, "After Last Night," the single from the first album, only sold 5,000 copies. "We had a meeting with our manager," Bortman recalled, "and he said, 'Well, the single sold 5,000 copies,' and we said, 'Oh.' Then he said 'At least it did better than 'Parasite.' We looked at each other. None of us knew that 'Parasite' had been released as a single."

Said Bortman, "When we started back in 1977, there was only one place where local bands could play original material, and that was the Hot Club. Today, it's gotten better to the extend that there are more places to go for local bands even if they don't pay much."

This lack of promotion continued with the release of the A's second Arista album, "A Woman's Got the Power," which came out in early 1981. Despite almost no promotion at all, the title track made it into Billboard's Top 100 Singles Chart, and stayed on the charts for about five weeks. By now, the A's had become dissatisfied with Arista (and vice-versa), and left both Arista and Apple-Chipetz.

On their own, the A's played just about everywhere in the Philadelphia-Camden-Wilmington area. They usually played the Ripley Music Hall once a month (this, combined with their performance at JFK stadium as part of the Phillies' World Series Parade in 1980, gives the A's the distinction of being the only band ever to play in Philadelphia's four main concert spots: the Spectrum, the Tower, JFK, and Ripley's).

After seeing Robert Hazard ride his own successful EP to a recording contract with RCA, the A's decided that it was their turn to put out an EP. The result was "Four Dances," which contains what is probably the best ever A's song, "Do the Dance." Despite extensive air play however, the EP fizzled, and sold only 3,000 copies.

As the EP fizzled, so did the A's interest in the band. The feeling among the band members was that the A's had gone as far as they would go. It was the time to move on.

Does Terry Bortman have any regrets about the A's breakup? "I regret being unemployed. Otherwise, it was time for it to happen."

Bergman's Latest and Last

By BARBARA SIMON

Three tedious hours of mind-wrenching concentration, chuck full of symbolism in the guise of reality. It is not entertaining, in the commercial sense, nor is it a relief from the pressures of life. This is "Fanny and Alexander," a typically profound Ingmar Bergman movie, (Swedish,English subtitles). Nonetheless, the cinematography is excellent; bright lights and rushing water are the "good" motifs contrasted to darkness and fire which represents "evil" themes.

Fanny and Alexander

It is 1907 and the Ekdahl family, bourgeois and close-knit, stage the minor story-line. Time, place and characters are less important than themes. It is a literary movie and universal ideas dominate the screen: life versus death, love versus superciliousness, and religion versus the facade of being religious.

Religion plays a dramatized part in an allegorical fashion seen through the characters and the scenes. It is Christmas and the nativity scene is not only enacted in a play, but a nativity picture is also intermittently flashed upon the screen. Bergman suggests the true value of religion juxtaposed to the deceptively religious. For example, the Bishop, a representative of God and the church, is, in reality, the devil. Oscar (young Alexander's father) dies and represents the resurrected Jesus Christ, when, dressed in white he appears to Alexander.

Equally important are Bergman's literary themes. Alexander's grandmother, Helen, reiterates the idea that we are all actors and play many roles in our lives. "Everything is acting a part . . . and the thing is not to shirk." One must bravely face hardships because, although God is strength, the devil pervades.

Bergman's dramatic cinematography continually stresses this point: God performs miracles-the devil deceives, angels are guardians-evil never dies. These theological motifs are the effervescent qualities of opposing forces. Indeed, a masque is enacted in every scene.

"Fanny and Alexander" is the title bearing the names of two adolescents in the Ekdahl family. Their roles prove to be a significant contrast to the roles of adults. Children are fearful and obedient creatures. They must not tell lies (as Alexander often does); even if the lie is metaphorically true. The world of children is one of ambiguity against the authority of adults. Authority, whether good or evil, controls the lives of Fanny and Alexander.

Close-up shots catch appropriate expressions as an alternative to speaking. Fanny rarely opens her mouth, and in one scene a zoom lens effectively captures her angry response to Alexander's beating by the Bishop. Alexander is also viewed from many close-up shots portraying his diversified emotions. Words are not necessary because the messages are pictorially conveyed.

Like Bergman's other films ("The Seventh Seal," "Wild Strawberries," and "Persona"), "Fanny and Alexander" is an allegorical film that reflects man's problems of being. Christianity and its earthly connotations is as disturbing and deceiving as it is comforting. Bergman reveals these ideas through magnificent cinematographic techniques, and more symbolism than one can digest in a sitting.

This Monday, skip classes and go see "Fanny and Alexander." It's a fair exchange of philosophy, literature and religious classes rolled into one. Be prepared to think analytically and reflectively for an evening of intensity.

Farewell Concert A Real Disappointment

By T. C. BIGGINS

Last Tuesday night at the Ripley Music Hall, the A's gave their final performance to a near capacity crowd of long time fans. After rising to nationwide popularity with the hit single "After Last Night" in 1978, the A's retreated to relative obscurity(due to an inability to produce any reasonable follow-up)and have spent the last few years floundering for a piece of even the local action once again. The performance was lackluster and predictable, two traits that seem to be a trade-mark of their live shows. Sleepwalking through "After Last Night," their opening song, the band left very little to look forward to during the rest of the show.

And indeed the few expectations the fans had for their final show were far from met. The band, sluggish and still very amateurish, seemed to care very little about the show and therefore the audience. One would think after devoting so many years and so much of their energies to one project they would at least have the pride to go out and give everything they had one last time. Instead the band saw fit to whimper to the crowd for the two-hour duration.

Since the band handled the show so poorly, the best gauges of the evening would have to be the crowd itself and the Ripley. These farewell concerts have become all too frequent in the last few years. They do, however, serve a purpose. The chance to have a last party with your best fans must mean a lot to a band. At the A's show, however, there was none of the electricity in the crowd that usually characterizes these shows. The crowd seemed as unmoved by this non-event as the band and their reaction to the whole thing was kind of sad.

The second gauge of the show was the Ripley. These are the people who have their ear to the ground when it comes to Philadelphia music. And they saw fit to hold the show on a Tuesday night with a $4 ticket, a bad night and practically giveaway tickets as far as prices go. Well, so much for the A's, they're dead and gone and no one would suppose any of us are that upset anyway.

The opening act, Dick Tracey, who scored some points earlier this year with their remake of "The Sounds of Silence," checked in with a completely superior show. Doing several "atmosphere" songs that definitely hit the mark, the band seems to be developing at a fairly rapid clip and is worth keeping your eye on.

As Dick Tracey proves, the Philadelphia music scene is very much alive with such bands as Pretty Poison, The Vells, Bonnevilles, The Alan Mann Band, and Beru Revue. These bands all have great potential and are developing and refining themselves in local venues such as The Ripley, J.C. Dobbs, Filly's, the Cabaret chain, Khyber Pass and Bigilows.

Philadelphia now has an extremely vital and interesting local music scene. Centered around South St.,it has been flourishing for the last few years. With such acts as Robert Hazard about to break national, it won't be too long before the rest of the country notices it. These are the bands that you'll soon be hearing on record, so go out and support them now while you still have the chance.

Cruisers Hit Rock Bottom

By MIKE NOONE

In a season of weak movies, "Eddie and the Cruisers," has been offered by its producers as a substantial alternative. Throughout the heavy advertising which "Eddie and the Cruisers" has received, it is shown as a classic movie of deep meaning and strong emotion. Unfortunately, the movie fails miserably in these, as well as other aspects.

"Eddie and the Cruisers" is a story about a so-called rock star with the hottest band in the country. Apparently this "genius" lived during the sixties, or so the director Martin Davidson would have us believe, traveling around New Jersey with his band the Cruisers. One night, after a recording session, Eddie drove his car off a bridge and his body was never found. Now, after 20 years, a reporter has come up with the greatest scoop of the decade: "The Return of Eddie Wilson." This reporter tracks down Eddie's keyboard player, Nick (named "Wordman") and begins to discover what occurred the night Eddie "died."

The potential for a good movie is certainly there, but through a series of loose ends and a hodgepodge editing job, the director manages to make a mess of the entire project. Somehow after the initial introduction of the reporter and her appearance in the last scene, the audience loses touch with her as she disappears from the story. As the director leaves us hanging as to what the reporter is doing, he entangles us in the mystery of missing tapes, supposedly of the last recording session.

As for the band, it is an absolute rip-off of Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Band. The audience never really gets to know Eddie or any evidence of his professed genius. The movie tries so hard to be profound but really offers no message and is almost laughable. Frankly, the band itself is terrible. The acting in this movie leaves much to be desired, and at times it seemed that the actors were actually reading their lines from a cue card while straining desperately to produce emotions and tug at the hearts of the audience.

Of course, toward the end we are all in "suspense" about the possibility of Eddie still being alive. The director could not resist showing us a glimpse of Eddie at the end, watching himself on early tapes, then turn and walk off into the distance.

Overall, this movie of one-sided idolism is a complete failure. We are constantly told that Eddie was ahead of his time and his life should tell us much about our society, but really this movie only illustrates the mystery of our disappearing dollar.

Quissett: Food for Thought

By JAYNE M. STUART

Have you ever thought about having dinner in the library? Probably not, but it is possible at Quissett Restaurant. This establishment doubles as an exclusive bookstore. For some, this is probably the main attraction but I would say that the fine cuisine would be the primary allurement for me.

To begin with, Quissett can boast of a comfortable atmosphere with whitewash walls and exposed beams. The dining room is not terribly large, as it is an attic, so reservations are recommended. On the wall is the chalkboard to tell you of what specials the cooks have prepared for the night. Trout, sweetbreads and lentil soup were a few offered the night we were there.

Although the menu is small, there is a variety of dishes to choose from. As an appetizer I ordered lentil soup and my companion ordered the French onion soup. Soup price is approximately $2.50. Both were delightful, as the lentil soup was hearty and thick and the French onion soup had plenty of onions and gruyere cheese on top.

As an entree,(prices range from $8-$15), I had the Chicken Saffron. This dish was lightly flavored chicken served on a bed of rice with accompanying snow peas. The chicken was tender and juicy and didn't leave me feeling over-stuffed. My companion ordered the Thai Beef Stir-Fry and was correctly warned by our waitress that it is very spicy. This dish was composed of a variety of vegetables, such as sweet peppers, onions and tomatoes. My companion enjoyed it very much but kept a glass of water handy.

The waitress tried to tempt us with a plateful of desserts such chocolate mousse, chocolate mint cheesecake and tortes but we had no room left. They were all homemade and looked delicious.

Feel free to visit Quissett for just a drink or a light soup and salad dinner as they offer quite a variety of both. There is, however, a $5 minimum charge per person.

The one complaint I would voice was that the wine list was rather limited and over-priced. Many of the wines were appealing but simply too expensive. Quissett does also have a bar area available if one was interested in just a drink.

All in all, Quissett is a charming restaurant that serves cuisine, rather than just food. It has a relaxing atmosphere and is a nice change of pace from the rushing around of everyday college existence.

Quissett is located in Haverford Square (379 West Lancaster Ave.) in Haverford. It is easily accessible by train or car and parking is available. It is open every night for dinner and every day for lunch except Sunday.

The Ins and Outs of Choosing a College

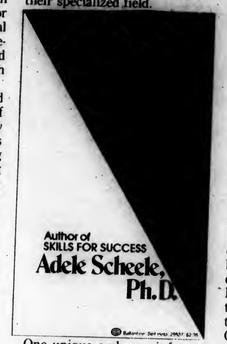
By MIKE MATHIS

In any student's life, perhaps the one decision that will make or break his college life is the choice of which college to attend. As many of Villanova's freshmen have discovered, this decision should not be based solely on academic life and merit, even though these are the primary reasons for attending college; but also social activities and career planning before and after graduation should be considered when making such a decision.

It is with these ideas in mind that Dr. Adele Scheele's "self help" book, Making College Pay Off is written. Dr. Scheele strives to point out that although getting accepted into college and doing well while there is important, it is of equal importance to plan one's career while still in school and to enjoy college at the same time.

The book begins by compairing similarities and differences between large universities and small, community colleges and private. Scheele then discusses which school is right for one's needs and expectations, both socially and academically. Both factors contribute to how well one will perform while in school. According to Scheele, "preparing for life after college while still in college is beneficial to both the student and the world in which they will live and work." This philosophy is taught throughout the book. Scheele urges the college student to "use college as an experimental laboratory of life." Seeking the right college is the safest way of experimenting with life before going out into the "real, cruel world."

Students are urged to "dabble in" and experiment with various social functions, community service organizations, career planning organizations within the college community, and internships outside of the university atmosphere. Each of these is designed to acquaint the college student with a liberal, well-rounded socio-academic life, while at the same time to prepare the student for a promising career in their specialized field.



One unique and very informative section of this book is the last chapter, in which 16 famous people relate how they used college to their advantage. Dr. Art Ulene, the resident physician of NBC's "Today show" revealed how even though medical school was his first priority, he was still able to join a fraternity.

Though there have been many "self-help" books written on the subject of succeeding in college and in life afterwards, Making College Pay Off is perhaps the most outstanding work of its type; it provides valuable information for the smooth transition from college life into the working world that few other books provides.

Buckley Explores Cold War

STEVEN E. McCHESNEY

The classic spy thrillers in recent literature, most notably Ian Fleming's James Bond series, have been the predecessors of a long and tedious line of cliched, unrealistic penny-novels and beach readers. William F. Buckley's Marco Polo, If You Can, is a much needed breather and a glimpse of intelligence in the wake of all of these mass-production novels.

Buckley, too brilliant, witty and experienced to lower his writings to stereotypes, presents a novel worthy of its long-standing best-seller status.

Marco Polo, If You Can reaches beyond the fantasized spy world of 007's to a intelligent, personal and gripping story of a human being entrenched in a career that he reluctantly lets dominate his life.

Blackford Oakes, CIA, is our man. He is the subject of nearly a half dozen Buckley thrillers, his character becoming more developed and complex with each. The development of character is a Buckley strength, if only because the character directly parallels the author. Our ficitious spy, Oakes, is the product of the American upper-class structure. Mr. Buckley is a famed American patrician in action and demeanor. Buckley's prototype is a graduate from the same university in the same year as the writer: Yale, 1950. Both were recruited by the CIA for their collegiate display of hatred for Communists, highly intelligent perceptions of foreign affairs and a daring spirit. The sheer cockiness and freedom that tend to evolve in people with too much intelligence and too much security prove to be the downfall of both.

Knowing the writer's background is instrumental in believing Buckley's expression of the experiences and feelings of our main character. We can assume that these are the experiences and feelings that very often confront intelligence agents who, in reality, are not bedding beautiful, wifty astro-nuclear physicists in outer space at the end of an assignment, they are not drinking shaken (not stirred) vodka martinis in the middle of saving the earth's population from annihilation and playing with cigarette lighters that can kill secret agents from 50 yards away. Buckley does not attempt to attract the "gee-whiz" readers who drool at the mention of such things, then see the movie in 3-D with Roger Moore chasing yet another nymphomaniac Russian agent. Buckley realized that not only is such trash ineffective in writing, but it is grossly unrealistic. Buckley is a man of thought and political strategy; this is reflected in his novel.

After several chapters of development and introduction to characters and the spy networks, the complicated and exquisite plot unfolds: Soviet Premiere Nikita Kruschev, while on tour of the United States, is at Camp David with President Eisenhower, the General, having a few late evening drinks and attempting to be congenial. Kruschev is incapable, as are most Russians, of controlling his inherent love of downing shots of vodka. Eventually the Soviet premier is trashed in front of the president of the United States. As Kruschev babbles on to his host, he sputters out that Eisenhower's language is offensive in front of his advisors in National Security Council meetings, directly quoting a phrase from the N.S.C. minutes. Eisenhower instantly realizes the implications of this quote; someone, somewhere, somehow has leaked the minutes of the Top Secret meetings.

The old war lord calls out the troops of intelligence masterminds and cabinet officials to solve this latest twist in the Cold War. The power struggles, and paranoia of the President and the cabinet, some being personal friends of Buckley, give an outrageous yet not far-fetched setting of White House maneuvers. If the plot alone weren't interesting then the humorous characterization of historical figures is worth the $3.50 paid for the paperback. But the plot gives the reader more than his money's worth and grabs the reader's constant attention.

The CIA tracks down the leaks in a complicated, tedious and lengthy process that is expected of a good government agency. Oakes' personal commitment to the Agency and its people draws him into being the pivotal figure in uncovering a massive spy ring that involved unsuspected characters.

To explain the storyline would be ruinous for the lovers of the thrill of the unknown diplomatic intrigue, and doublecrossing among countrymen, friends and family.

If you need to take a break from the textbooks without trashing your mind, pick up the book, read into it for a few pages and you will be entrenched in the story until the final page. You are sure to be entertained, informed about the elusive world of the CIA and changed in your outlook of world affairs. Buckley's wit, knowledge and delivery are captivating. If you have ever heard him lecture and debate, read his editorial columns, or seen his weekly PBS show, Firing Line you are well aware of how the mind engages the subject matter and the tongue darts its vile, biting and brilliant commentary. These talents are transposed to his novels and in Marco Polo; If You Can make for a fascinating journey through the intrigue of the Cold War.

Nova Field Hockey Drops Two

By BOB HELLER

Villanova's field hockey team dropped another game on Monday to Kutztown by the score of 3-1. The loss was the third in five games for the Cats this year.

Kutztown dominated the early minutes of the first half, scoring all three of its goals within the first 11 minutes, as Nova's defense collapsed. Two minutes later Nova coach Diane Moyer changed goaltenders and the Villanova team slowly began to come back to life. With five minutes left in the first half, the referee awarded the Wildcats a penalty corner hit, which the Cats turned into their only goal of the day. The ball was hit into play by Bonnie Bell to Amy Hutchinson, who blazed a shot past Kutztown's goaltender.

Nova's defense contained Kutztown throughout the second half, but its offense, while having many opportunities, was unable to produce another goal and Kutztown came away with a 3-1 victory.

Nova's substitute goaltender, Sue Ruff played very well, stopping all 16 shots she faced. The loss dropped the Cats record to 1-3-1.

In earlier hockey action, the Wildcats traveled to Lock Haven to take on defending Division II National Champion Lock Haven State University.

Lock Haven started the scoring in the first half, putting a shot past the Nova goalie at 11:14. In the second half, Nova quickly evened the score at 1-1 when Danine DiBernardi placed a shot into the net at 1:22. Lock Haven kept pressuring and scored two more goals, despite excellent play from the entire Wildcat team. The final score was 3-1 Lock Haven.

Two days before that game, Villanova was in South Jersey to take on Rider College. Both teams played well in the first half, but it was Nova getting on the scoreboard first as Sue Lora took a pass from Robin Garczynski and put it past the Rider goaltender at 27:06. Rider came back late in the second half to knot the score at 1-1. The score remained tied at the end of regulation time and two 10 minute overtime periods had to be played. Neither team scored during the overtimes and the game went into the record books as a 1-1 tie.

Villanova's goaltender, Lisa Buschmann played superbly in both the Rider and Lock Haven games, stopping 19 shots in each game while allowing just four goals. Going into the Kutztown game she has recorded 56 saves for an 88.8% save rate.

Villanova takes to the road for its next two games, traveling to Lafayette on Saturday and to Textile on Monday.

Booters Skid Continues

By JOE BAGLEY

With an 0-3 record and no goals scored by the offense, the last opponent that the men's soccer team wanted to play was Philadelphia Textile. Rightfully so, it seems, as Textile trounced Villanova in typhoon-like weather conditions just one week ago. The sky poured sheets of water onto the turf and soccer balls into the Villanova goal. A miserable game at a miserable time in miserable weather. Enough said.

It was tempting to start pointing fingers when the next game, against Haverford, plunged the team to an 0-5 record. But midfielder Johnny Valickus would have none of it.

"Our goalies have had so many shots taken on them per game that it's by no means their fault. It's basically everyone's fault from the line back to the defense. . . the goalie is just the last person the ball goes by," the senior stated.

When asked if he was satisfied with his own performance, Valickus replied, "No. I think I could play better. I don't think I've hit my prime yet. I was playing center halfback and I wasn't really doing the job. I moved over to right halfback which I played last year. When we played against Haverford, I felt a lot more comfortable at it."

At Haverford, the Wildcats played a great first half. Sophomore Steve Maillard scored early and Villanova defenders proceeded to bury the Haverford forwards. Their combination of speed and ballhandling served to place most of the play deep in Haverford territory.

The second half though, saw Villanova lapsing at defense and Haverford capitalizing when given an opportunity.

The best viewpoint to scan the dismal opening of this season is from midfield, Valickus reflects:

"We just know it can't keep going on. It's going to stop one of these days. We can't keep getting beat this bad. We have a lack of confidence but we're striving to fill that gap. We've by no means given up.

"Textile was definitely our hardest game this season and that's behind us. We've got the toughest part of our schedule done. Our first four games were our toughest this season.

Spring Garden comes up tonight at 7 under the lights. As a great on-campus diversion, the soccer team is hoping for a lot of support from the students and is anticipating the Spring Garden threat.

"Last year, and before that, Spring Garden was a pushover," said Valickus.

The Wildcat women's volleyball team began its 1983 season with gusto. Beating Lehigh on Sept. 21 was an expected yet triumphant victory. A good team effort combined with equal playing time from each girl provided for a hands down success: 15-3, 15-12, 15-4.

Friday, Sept. 23 and Saturday the 24, the team traveled to Temple University to participate in the Temple Tournament. Twelve teams were invited and divided into four separate three team "pools." Villanova's pool consisted of Rutgers and Providence.

Friday night Providence edged by the Wildcats in three consecutive games. Coach Dennis McGuinnis commented, "Our skill level is certainly even with the Providence team's, however, this was our first tournament and we just weren't playing up to par."

Later Friday evening Villanova played Rutgers. Senior captain Stephanie Moore and sophomore Karen Rank displayed an outstanding performance. Unfortunately Rutgers dominatd the game, leading to their inevitable victory.

Saturday morning Villanova beat the University of Connecticut in the consolation bracket game. Coach McGuinnis said, "The team made a complete turnabout in their level of play and I am very proud of the girls.

Later that day in an impressive victory against Syracuse University the Wildcats showed their true potential. A total team effort produced a three straight game win and an encouraging ending match.

Mia Grosso and Amy Fairfield, two talented freshmen have surprised Coach McGuinnis with their superior leadership and court presence. Starters Nancy Patriek, Mary Fischer, Alex Zuchowsky, Stephanie Moore, Karen Rank, and Tracy Smith plus the rest of the team have all been working toward the real heart of the season when there will be more tournament play than ever. November 18, 19, and 20 marks the biggest goal of the team — the Big East Tournament.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Marcus O'Sullivan

There's an old adage in sports circles that goes, "you dance with the girl that brung you," meaning when it comes time to compete in the big game or race, an athlete does not turn back on the formula or strategy for success that has enabled him to reach the big game in the first place.

Villanova senior Marcus O'Sullivan employed that axiom to the hilt last weekend, as he waltzed to a first place finish in a tri-angular meet against a pair of Georges (town and Mason) with a 25.53.9 clocking. In posting the fourth fastest time ever on the arduous, winding, 5.2 mile Georgetown course, O'Sullivan led his team to two victories, and in the process, earned himself the distinction of being the recipient of the coveted Budweiser Athlete of the Week award.

"I knew what the course record was," said O'Sullivan, "but I didn't pay much attention to it. I didn't think it was going to be a good time," he added, "because the first mile was really slow, but then the race picked up."

The picking up of the pace meant disaster for Georgetown and George Mason for as it turned out, Marcus was merely the first of a barrage of Wildcat "O's" to cross the finish line for Villanova. Following O'Sullivan came sophomore Tony O'Reilly in fourth, senior Brian O'Keefe collected fifth, and freshman Gerry O'Reilly took seventh place honors.

"For once," Marcus said, "I am taking it step by step and I'm putting cross country as my primary goal. For the past couple of years," he explained, "I kind of brushed cross country aside and concentrated on the indoor and outdoor seasons, but cross country is one of the key things that got me over here (to America) in the first place."

As well as physically conditioning him for the indoor season, O'Sullivan says that cross country prepares him mentally and keeps him "hungry" to do well right through the outdoor season. In essence, cross country is the blueprint that had spelled victory for Marcus in all facets of his career and he had overlooked it.

Now that he has righted himself, however, O'Sullivan has high, if guarded, hopes for the year. "The team still has to run a lot better than it has to do well," he said, "but for now, it looks good."

Cats Fall to 0-4

Women Booters Winless

By COLLEEN LYNCH

Villanova's women's soccer team, under the direction of Coach Lee Stevens, recently entered its first year of varsity competition. The Cats are now 0-4 after two tournaments in which they faced some of the best teams in women's collegiate soccer.

In the Wildcat Tourney on Sept 18, Villanova faced Adelphi and Connecticut, one of the top teams in the nation after finishing third in the country last year with a 16-1-1 record; the Huskies recently upset defending national champion North Carolina.

The Wildcats suffered a 5-0 loss to Adelphi with Nova goalie Sue Onnembo saving two shots. In the Connecticut game, a 1-0 defeat, the junior goalie was credited with nine saves.

On September 24 and 25 the Cats participated in the George Mason University Tournament and met their toughest challenges of the season in George Mason and North Carolina. The results were a 4-0 loss to George Mason and a 9-0 loss at the hands of North Carolina. "They were the biggest, fastest, most skilled team I've ever seen in my life," Coach Stevens said in reference to the powerhouse Tar Heel team. "They beat us soundly." He stressed that the Wildcats played well against both teams; however, "we're not at that level yet."

"We'll be competing against teams more in our caliber from now on," Stevens continued. He seems hopeful that playing such tough teams early in the schedule will help the Cats in the rest of the 1983 season.

Cat Cross Country Teams Excel

Men

By ELIAS PAPSON

Villanova's cross country team won both ends of a "triangular meet" Saturday, beating Georgetown 27-28 and George Mason, 21-34; Georgetown also beat George Mason, 21-38.

Senior Marcus O'Sullivan led the pack, which included twelve Villanova runners, in winning the race with a time of 25:53.9. Other Villanova runners ranking high in the meet included Anthony O'Reilly, who finished fourth with a 26:29; Brian O'Keefe, who came in fifth with a 26:37; Gerry O'Reilly, who captured seventh with a 26:52; and Dermot Anderson, who posted a 27:22 tenth-place finish.

O'Sullivan's time was the fourth fastest ever at this course and has been surpassed by only one other Villanova runner, Ross Donoghue, whose 25:26 time is the second best. John Gregorek of Georgetown holds the record with a 25:17, and Syracuse's Jim O'Connell is third with a 25:52.

By beating Georgetown this week, Villanova evened its record against the Hoyas in the past three years to 1-1-1 on this 5.2 mile course. Last year, Georgetown beat the Wildcats 27-28, while both struggled to a 28-28 tie in 1981.

Coach Pyrah was "very pleased with the runners" and thinks that "the team will improve in the future." He cited John Keyworth, who did not run in August, as the key to the improvement. "If he had run in August," Pyrah said, "John could have easily finished in the top six." Pyrah believes it will take about two weeks for this improvement to manifest itself.

Women

By KEN McELYNN

Once the women's cross country team headed toward the Trenton State Invitational this past Sunday, they never stopped moving. The team soundly defeated fifteen schools from all over the tri-state area to win both the individual and overall team titles.

The meet took place on the 5000-meter course in Washington Crossing State Park. Wildcat junior Mary Ellen McGowan, competing against a field of more than 200 runners, crossed the finish line first to capture the individual crown with a 17:43 time. Three Villanova freshmen standouts were not far behind; Coleen Gallagher, Lauren Searby, and Melissa Grubb placed sixth, eighth, and ninth respectively with times of 18:21, 18:24, and 18:25.

The team accumulated only 41 placement points throughout the meet to earn the championship, and left the Kutztown harriers, with 89 points, a distant second.

Coach Bob Shoudt expressed great satisfaction with hs team's effort and remarked, "Every year our team has improved in this meet. Two years ago we were third, last year we finished second, and now we're managed to win it. I'm also particularly pleased with the team's overall development this year. We have a very promising year ahead of us."

Intramural Football: More Teams, More Fun

By JOE MARUSAK

Football is back at Villanova and no one feels its presence more than senior John Lavery. As Intramurals President, Lavery has had to oversee some 64 teams and fill over 200 time slots in preparation for this year's flag football leagues.

"There's a lot of time involved in just organizing the program," said Lavery, "It took about five or six hours just for the scheduling. We tried to accommodate all the teams, but it's impossible to make everyone happy all of the time."

Those accomodations include the breaking of the men's teams into seven divisions - one 10-member fraternity conference and six others with the remaining 54 squads.

Last year's top playoff contenders, including the title-winning Moon Unit team, have each been seeded in a different division. "Moon Unit should again be the team to beat," Lavery noted. "Almost everybody is back from last year."

The surprise of last season's playoffs, 3MF, also returns most of its players. According to Lavery, "The[illegible] even expected to go as far as they did, considering [illegible] a freshman team. As sophomores now, they should be even stronger."

Those two teams, though, will face some stiff competition from other veteran clubs: the Gladiators, Stallions, Wallbangers and Black Sheep all earned post-season berths a season ago and will head divisions this time around.

Competition for the 1983 Villanova football crown commenced on Sunday under the lights of Villanova Stadium, where the fraternities will play most of their regular season matches; Mendel and Austin Fields remain the only other sites of play.

The league runs six days a week — Saturday is the only day off — which tends to keep Lavery quite busy. He has help though, from assistants Jim Carrazza and Dave Iuro. "They are the master schedulers," said Lavery, who also works closely with Intramural Director Ed Geisz and Assistant Director Lou Ferry in coordinating the football activities.

Jane Simpson, a junior, takes care of the women's side of the football program. She handles 38 teams, up from the 32 of a year ago. "Women's intramurals has really taken off," Lavery noted, "and I think those figures are an indication of the interest."

Top women teams include last year's champions, the Mud Gang, as well as the Football Team, the Beavers TKD and the Mighty Mates.

Figures indicate that over 1500 students participated in flag football last fall, a number sure to increase in this year. "It (involvement in intramurals) is getting bigger all the time," said Lavery, who took over the presidency during his junior year. "With the way the social life is being curtailed on campus, it's a great way to get out and have some fun."

INTRAMURAL NOTES: Soccer is the latest sport to catch the eye of the intramural department. According to Lavery, a weekend-long soccer tournament is in the works for an as yet undetermined weekend in November. "We're trying to get tournaments together for both guys and girls — but it will work only if we have enough sign-ups." Team rosters should be submitted to the intramural department in Alumni Hall no later than Oct. 28.

Villanova Football: Dividing a Family

By LARRY GOANOS

It's tragic irony that Villanova football, once a source of pride and unity for this University, has been transmuted into an issue which eats away at the very traits it fostered. Two polarized camps occupy center stage in this conflict, the Alumni on one side and the Administration on the other. Both are deeply entrenched in defense of their beliefs.

Unfortunately both sides seem to have adopted extreme positions, greatly reducing the possibility of reaching a solution that is acceptable to all.

The Administration, it appears, is adamently opposed to what it perceives as "the football mentality," and all of the undesirable factors which accompany it.

The Alumni, in their zeal, have insinuated that football was the single most important attribute that this University had to offer. They routinely display unsigned checks for huge sums of money to the Administration, advising that signatures will come with the reinstatement of football.

So who is right?

First of all, there is no "football mentality." Football players are students like anyone else. Some study diligently and enjoy great academic success, while others wallow through college in five or six years. Let's face it, they are neither all disruptive influences on the student body, nor are they all doctors and advanced degree holders.

Editor's Angle

Secondly, I feel as if there is more to Villanova University than football. It seems almost sacrilegious to say that, especially with the constant bombardment of Alumni advertising, newspaper supplements, student and faculty votes, etc. etc. being aimed at the student body. Don't get me wrong, I loved football at Villanova; it was an intangible which cannot possibly be measured in dollars and cents. Football enhanced and enriched this University like no other program or activity ever could. But by the same token, I find it sad and disturbing to think that a certain group of alumni cannot identify with a Villanova that lacks football. If they feel that our academic departments and other components of the school are unworthy of their donations then perhaps they are impervious to the Christian ideals which this University strives to install in its students.

One writer in last week's football supplement commented on the "gloomy" atmosphere at Villanova this Fall, as opposed to "the good old days" of his college experience. This attitude is something which I label as the "Alumni Mentality." Granted, this institution is not and cannot be the same as it was with football, but it is far from a gloomy place. The function of this University, first and foremost, is to give its students the best Catholic education that it is capable of giving. I think that the majority of the student body agrees that the school is doing its job, and we're happy to be here. If the situation were as bleak as the Alumni assert, the registrar would need a 24 hour staff to accommodate the masses of students requesting transfer transcripts.

I'm not by any means trying to belittle the Alumni. On the contrary, I feel that the fact that these dedicated Villanovans have banded together into such a cohesive group at a time of need is a great reflection upon Villanova University.

The apathy which runs rampant among the students and alumni of an ever-growing number of colleges has not manifested itself here. The genuine concern of most of the Villanova Alumni is something in which we can all take pride.

Football made an invaluable contribution to Villanova in the past and hopefully it will return to provide us with its benefits again in the near future. But in the interim, unfortunately, it appears as if the schism between Alumni and Administration will continue to divide this community while inflicting wounds which may prove irreparable for both sides, regardless of the final resolution.

Tennis Wins Again

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

The Villanova women's tennis team is off to quite a successful start. Only two weeks into the season, they have in their possession an outstanding five game winning streak. The Cats' recent victories include wins over Mt. St. Mary's and West Chester. In the Mt. St. Mary's game, played on Sept. 18, the team acquired a 7-2 victory. Winning in the singles matches for the Cats were Luba Matkiwsky at first, Trish Stairiker at third, Cynthia Burke at fourth and Abigail Burke at fifth.

In the doubles competition it was the Matkiwsky sisters winning at first and the team of Stairiker and Burke winning at second. Rounding out the Nova wins was a victory from Abigail Burke and Tracy Brewer at third.

In the West Chester game played on Sept. 20, Villanova won an impressive 6-3 clincher. The Wildcats swept the singles with wins by Luba, Zenia, Trish, Cynthia, Abigail and Tracy, respectively. The Millersville game, which was to be played on Sept. 21, was rained out and no match has been rescheduled.

Most pleased of all with the team's excellent performance was Coach Robert Langran. In a recent interview he stated, "I'm very pleased. They are very good. We are starting out very good this year and some of our matches have been against some very tough teams."

Gridders Give Bedesem First Collegiate Win

By TONY DIFRANCESCO

Villanova's traditional homecoming game will be a memorable one for Wildcat football coach Dick Bedesem as his team fought back to defeat Toledo of Ohio, 14-10, and he was awarded his first collegiate victory. Much of the credit though, should go to the defense whose consistent efforts stopped one of the nation's finest quarterbacks, Gene Swick.

After a scoreless, fumble-riddled opening period, Swick drove his Rockets twenty-nine yards and passed short to his favorite receiver, Jeff Hepinstall; for a touchdown. Late in the period a Toledo interception put Swick in scoring range again, but the Wildcat defense quickly assumed the role of a brick wall. On the Villanova six in a fourth and one situation, Swick started to move left but linebacker Rick Aldrich skipped through the line and sacked him for a six yard loss.

Aldrich commented, "Normally on a situation like that it would be a run, but when he started moving out I knew it was a "boot," he would pass or throw, so I just came through a gap in the line."

As for the offense and quarterback Brian Sikorski,, progress was nil. There were four first half fumbles and an interception, but no points. In the third period, Swick was victimized by his first interception of the year and Wildcat Dave Bauer, on the receiving end, raced thirty-nine yards to the Toledo seven. After getting to the five, Sikorski fumbled and Coach Bedesem sent Mike Frazier in for the next set of plays.

"We had just too many turnovers and I felt I had to go with Mike's smoothness," said Bedesem. "He made things happen and generated the whole team."

Frazier marched forty-six yards and scored on a keeper from the one and Gus Fernandes's extra point knotted the score at seven apiece. Frazier, used mostly in running situations, stated that the play was a "keep-pitch" option and when he noticed a Toledo defender on his "pitch man" he kept the ball and crossed the line virtually untouched.

The fourth quarter proved very successful for Villanova, but not until a tough decision by Coach Bedesem and a seemingly fatal fumble had evolved. With 6:29 remaining Swick once again was on the move as he brought the Rockets to Villanova's thirteen before settling for a field goal. The drive consumed four minutes and Bedesem needed some quick results and he returned to starting quarterback Sikorski.

"Mike did an absolutely super job. His poise and ability to run the club gave them impetus and he showed them they could score," affirmed Bedesem. "But we had to go to the air and Brian was the one for the situation; he also had experience in the two minute offense. I told Mike what I had to do."

Sikorski reacted well as he hit John Mastronardo twice for twenty yards and Jeff McGeehin once for eighteen after Bill Bell opened the set of plays with a nine yard gain on the ground. Fate however, awaited Sikorski and Bedesem on the following play as a deflected pass was intercepted by Toledo's Rick Tolland.

It was a tragic moment for the fans and the team which lives with a constant threat of extinction. Loss number three of the season seemed inevitable, yet as most Villanova observers have begun to notice, when in trouble consider the defense as the last resort.

On the play proceeding the interception, Toledo's Tim Zimmerman fumbled and the defense recovered the ball twenty-three yards from the goal line. Three plays later, John Mastronardo raced thirteen yards into the corner of the end zone and Sikorski lobbed the ball over the defender's head for a touchdown and the win.

The post game locker room was a frenzy, but one must wonder what happened in there at the half-time break. Bedesem said, "We played a sloppy first half, but I just told them if they wanted the game it was still there for them to get. We all have the same goals so they knew what to do, I didn't have to tell them."

An hour after the game Dick Bedesem still sat in the stuffy locker room. He was sipping on a root beer soda, but it was victory his first, which he tasted. His team displayed real class and all had a rough road ahead, but Bedesem's mind was in the present; "I'm happy, I really am."

John Mastronardo pulls in a Brian Sikorski pass. Mastronardo caught 10 passes for 116 yards on the day.

Crowd Incites Vandalism at Film

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

Close to $3,000 must be spent on a new movie screen for the Connelly Center Cinema screen after students threw tomatoes at the screen during the "Attack of the Killer Tomatoes" movie last Tuesday night.

The tomatoes stained the screen which, due to its nature, cannot be washed. "If we attempt to wash the tomato stains off, a dark spot will appear," said Marc Tuchman, director of Connelly Center.

Since the screen cannot be repaired, the Connelly Center staff is in the process of collecting bids for a new screen of the same quality. "The cinema has a top quality beaded screen which reflects the greatest amount of light, giving the best crisp, clear picture," according to Tuchman.

Speaking with the screen manufacturer, located in Indiana, their response indicated that an order from the vendor would take approximately three weeks for the screen to be completed and delivered. The Connelly Center cinema has a frame for a 21-by-26 foot screen, "which is a large screen and therefore a special order," noted Tuchman.

The cost of repair will be additional to the $3,000 once the labor cost is included. "A theater company, or one of the sort, will have to come install the screen," said Tuchman. "It will be required that we use a professional in the trade to replace the screen." Scaffolding must be constructed to attach the new screen to the framework.

The Visual Arts Committee is being held responsible for paying for the new screen and its installation. "Hopefully, the Film Series' income will make enough money to cover the debt," commented Jim Lane, chairman of the Visual Arts Committee.

If the movie program is successful during the year, Lane projected that the film series should cover the expense without the movie prices going up. "Our budget at present is not large enough to pay the bill, so the price increase will depend heavily on movie attendance," commented Lane.

"The Union budget is not that flexible to absorb the high expense and I would hate to see the expense be divided among other Union committees," stated Lane. "They should not have to pay for our mishap."

The cinema is still using the damaged screen, "but anyone sensitive to this obstruction will be annoyed by its presence," commented Tuchman. "Some stains are the size of my fist."

"Physically, the screen is okay to be used for now," said Lane, "but if the light is shining on it the stains are obvious."

Some students among the sell-out crowd had been drinking prior to the damaging incident, according to Lane. "I could smell the alcohol on the students through the glass where they were buying their tickets."

Consequently, movie ushers claim to have been careful about letting the students into the theater. "We did hear a rumor that something like this was going to happen, so we were filing the students through the doors and checking them for any extra bags or 'full' pockets," said Lane.

During the movie, the crowd appeared to be "rowdy" but the ushers said they had no way of telling what had happened until the end of the movie when the lights came on. "Once the movie ended, we saw the screen and floor covered with tomatoes," said Lane. "The students had already left the theater, so we had no way of catching the vandals."

The students who caused the damage came in with the intention of throwing a lot of tomatoes according to Tuchman.

"I would have cancelled the movie all together if I thought for sure this would happen, but we have never had problems before with students who came after drinking, so did not stop the movie or refuse the students who had been drinking admittance into the theater," said Lane.

PennDOT Notes Construction Impact

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

To aid students in coping with the inconvenience construction along the Schuylkill Expressway will incur, an official spokesman for the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation, (PennDOT), Jeff Greene, spoke at Villanova last Tuesday on the traffic related goals for the reconstruction of the expressway and the impact it will have on Villanova commuters.

According to Greene, the most ambitious task ever undertaken by PennDOT will be the rehabilitation of the Schuylkill "since the plan includes a program with a minimal impact on the three quarter of a million people who travel the highway a day and the 39,000 truckers passing through daily."

An estimated cost of $140 mil-[illegible] will cover the rehabilitation of 17.7 miles of expressway, extending from the Pennsylvania Turnpike to University Avenue.

All pavement and shoulders will be rehabilitated and guardrails will be replaced with sturdier concrete barriers. Drainage improvements to be implemented will eliminate the puddles and ice flows to improve safety on the Schuylkill. Similarly, a concrete median barrier will be installed in Montgomery County.

Improved signing and sign lighting are to be installed to [illegible] safety along the expressway.

Of the 49 bridges along the Schuylkill extension, 38 will be completely redecked, which includes repairs made down to the steel beams, while the 11 other bridges need only a concrete overlay.

Greene commented that the bridge work actually controls the progress since its work is "extremely extensive."

Interchanges at Route 363 and Route 202 and Vine Street will be significantly upgraded, according to plans, and various ramps will be improved.

After two years of "extraordinary planning," progress is completed in setting the time table for construction and the goals to be kept along the way.

The major goals PennDOT seeks to keep are the maintenance of at least one lane of traffic in each direction during the entire reconstruction process, to assure truckers, tourists and long distance travelers the quickest travel time on the expressway and the re-opening of all lanes to traffic during the winter months of November through part of March.

The rehabilitation plan will

Faculty Positions Filled

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

An "unusually high number" of additional faculty members were hired and 15 faculty members have been promoted for the 1983-84 school year, according to the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for academic affairs.

With the computer major now available at Villanova, an addition to the math department was necessary, noted Gallen. Similarly, there was an increase of faculty members in the college of Commerce and Finance because of the masters in business administration program.

"The positions in the engineering department that have been vacant for a number of years," according to Gallen, "were able to be filled this year." The increase in the engineering staff is also in response to the increased enrollment in the engineering curriculum.

"The physics department has a temporary increase in their staff since there is currently a need for additional classes in that field," stated Gallen. "Those hired under those conditions are aware they will be teaching for a limited number of years," added Gallen, "while our enrollment in the physics department is so high."

Gallen reported an especially high number of positions filled this year in the colleges of Commerce and Finance and Engineering, but added that now the University is trying to level off enrollment, so hiring rate will not continue to be as high as that for the 1983-84 school year.

The cost of new positions is figured into the annual school budget after approval from the Budget Committee. "If the hiring is justified," according to Gary B. Fenner, vice president of financial affairs, "the position's cost is worked into the school's budget."

Positions in the academic fields open after a decision is reached by the vice president for academic affairs and the dean of the particular department where the position is to be filled.

The decision is based upon various conditions, such as enrollment statistics, and size of classes, while the question of whether there is space available plays a role in the hiring agreement.

"The turnover rate at Villanova is very small," noted Gallen. "Some faculty are hired for a specific time period, like in the physics department, where we need a temporary enrollment increase.

The new faculty members' positions were effective as of Sept. 1, 1983. Promoted were Dr. Edward Guinan, Jr., professor of astronomy; Dr. Robert F. Sweeny, professor of chemical engineering; Dr. Theodore Kondoleon, professor of philosophy; Dr. Roger Y. Lynn, associate professor of mathematical sciences; Dr. James Kirschke, of Bryn Mawr, associate professor of English; Dr. Miriam Vosburgh, of Bryn Mawr, professor of sociology; Dr. Pamela M. Blewitt, of Rosemont, associate professor of psychology; Dr. Charissa J. Chou, of Paoli, associate professor of accountancy; Mrs. Lynore DeSilets, assistant professor of nursing; Ms. Donna Lee Faust, assistant professor of nursing; Dr. John Immerwahr, of Wayne, professor of philosophy; Mrs. Elise Pizzi, assistant professor of nursing; Dr. James P. Tuck, associate professor of psychology; Ms. Suzanne Zamerowski, assistant professor of nursing and Dr. John F. Wojcik, of Berwyn, professor of chemistry.

The 1983-84 yearbooks will be on sale Oct.8 in the Connelly Center lobby. The cost is $15 per book.

Graduate & School Admissions Forums

Admissions representatives from a variety of programs (Law, MBA, Public Administration, Arts, Sciences,and Humanities) will be available to discuss admission requirements. Approximately 90 schools will attend the discussions. Meetings will be held in Thomas Hall of Bryn Mawr College Oct.11 from 1-4 p.m. and in the Villanova Room, Villanova University, Oct.12 from 1-4:30 p.m.

History Lecture

Prof. Donald Kelley of the History Department will speak on "John Foster Dulles and the Ideology of Liberation" Oct.11 at 7:30 p.m. in the Haverford Room of Connelly Center. The lecture is part of a Tuesday evening series on "Cold War and Detente."

Memorial Mass

There will be a Memorial Mass for Fr. Shawn Tracy's mother, Marion, who died this past August Oct.10 at 10:30 p.m. in the main chapel.

Opposition Speaks

On Oct.11 at 8 p.m. in Mendel Hall Room 117, Alberto Arene, a United States representative of the Polical-Diplomatic Commission of the Farabundo Marti Front for National Liberation (FMLN), will speak and answer questions on the united opposition to the Salvadorean government. The discussion is sponsored by: the Progressive Student Coalition, the Honors Progam, the Peace and Justice Program, the History Dept., and the Philosophy Dept. Admission is free. For more information call 642-6709.

Philosophy Club

An organizational meeting will take place Oct.11 at 4 p.m. in the North Lounge of Dougherty for all interested in the Philosophy Club. If you cannot attend this meeting, drop off your name in the Philosophy Dept. of Vasey.

Health Education

An all-day conference that gives helping professionals an opportunity to explore their changing roles in the '80s will be held from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Oct.15 at The Lankenau Hospital.

This program is for those serving in or interested in any of the helping professions, including nursing, medicine, social work, mental health, health education, occupational health and pastoral counseling.

Keynote speaker is nationally-known author/lecturer Godfrey M. Hochbaum, Ph.D., professor, Department of Health Education, Univ. of North Carolina. Conference topics include: encouraging voluntary behavior change, promoting self-care for the elderly and disabled and increasing the competitive edge.

Deadline for registration is today. The fee is $20. For more information, call The Lankenau Hospital's Health Education Department at 645-2207.

Great Escape Cruise

This Spring Break, the Villanova Union Recreation Committee is sponsoring a Great Escape Cruise to the Bahamams. An informational meeting on the cruise package will be Oct.19 at 7 p.m. ub the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. At this meeting, there will be a slide show on the cruise. Also, a free cruise worth up to $515 will be given away. Don't miss this meeting, or you may be left in the cold this Spring Break.

A complete cruise, including all meals, costs as little as $425.

Engineering Career Day

The Career Development Center, Engineering Joint Council, and several corporations are sponsoring the Engineering Career Day, Oct.13 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. This program is an excellent opportunity for engineering and science majors to meet with corporate representatives and discuss careers in engineering. Hope to see you there.

Villanova Theater

The Villanova Cultural Film Series will present Fred Schepisi's "The Chant of Jimmy Blacksmith" Oct.9 and 10. This Australian film will be shown Sunday at 3:30 p.m. and 7 p.m. and Monday at 7 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema. Following the Sunday night showing, David Jones will lead a discussion entitled "New Wave from Down Under." Admission for the film is $1.50 for students and senior citizens and $3 for the general public. For further information, call 645-7262.

Set in Australia at the turn of the century, "The Chant of Jimmy Blacksmith" recreates a young half-aborigine's violent struggle to succeed in a hypocritical and racist society.

Communication Arts

A Communication Arts Convocation will take place Oct.20 at 4:30 p.m. in St. Mary's Auditorium. Information discussed will include: new courses, preregistration procedures, career development, new faculty. All CA majors must attend.

Discount Tickets

Student rush tickets will be available for Villanova Theater's production of The Miracle Worker. At 7:45 p.m. on evenings of performance students with a valid I.D. may purchase any unsold tickets for half price. The production will run Oct.12-15 and 19-22 in Vasey Theater. Call 645-7474.

Wishing Well

The Villanovans for Life would like to thank everyone who has contributed to our Wishing Well. So far, we have collected $67.46. The Wishing Well will remain in front of the Connelly Center. All money will be used by the Villanova Committees for the Homeless to distribute soup and sandwiches to the street people of Philadelphia. Thanks again for your generosity.

Gamma Phi Tutoring

Any C & F student interested in being tutored in the following subjects should contact Mrs. Coyle in Room 302 Bartley: Financial Accounting 1 & 2., Introductory Macro & Micro Economics, Calculus 1 & 2, Statistics 1 & 2, Managerial Accounting, Finance 1.

Project Sunshine

If you haven't heard from Social Action Office about your interview for placement with an agency, please stop at Room 121 Tolentine before noon

Communication Arts Society

There will be a meeting Oct.10 at 7 p.m. in the Bryn Mawr Room of the Connelly Center of the Communication Arts Society. Attendance is mandatory, but all new members are welcome. Students will be speaking on their interships. For more information call 527-7969.

Geographical Society

The Geographical Society will be sponsoring a lecture on "Wilderness" presented by Atlantic Richfield, Co. The lecture will take place Oct.11 at 12:45 p.m. in Tolentine Hall Room 309. All are welcome.

Special Olympics

Anyone who volunteered or wishes to volunteer for Special Olympics should attend a training meeting Oct.10 at 7 p.m. in the West Lounge, Dougherty, and Oct.13 at 7 p.m. in the Day Hop.

Fall Fest Week

Fall Fest Week is Oct.9-15. Look for posters around campus for details or call the Villanova Union at 645-7280.

Accounting Society

Accounting Society seniors are invited to attend a reception held in the Wayne, St. David's, and Radnor rooms of the Connelly Center. The reception will be held on Wednesday, October 12 from 6:00 to 9:00 p.m. Representatives from the Big Eight as well as several other firms, will be present to speak with students. This is an excellent opportunity, and should not be missed.

Johnson & Johnson will dicuss "Opportunities in Private Accounting" Oct.13 at 12:45 p.m. in Bartley 110. A Senior reminder: 11 accounting firms Oct.12 at 6:30 p.m. in the Connelly Center.

Bicycling

The Villanova Bicycle Club will be riding to the Jersey shore on an overnight trip Oct.15 and 16 leaving at 7 a.m. Anyone who is interested in the trip should call Martin at 544-8039. For more details see the bulletin board across from the West Lounge in Dougherty.

Bahamas

The Scuba Club is hosting an informational film of a Spring Break trip to the Bahamas Oct.11 in the projection room of Falvey Memorial Library. This meeting is a must for all certified divers and non-divers are also welcome.

Photography

Students, faculty, and administrators: Have the Photography Dept. take pictures at your meetings, social functions, athletic events, etc. We can also do resume pictures, publicity photos, and group portraits. Contact us through the Villanovan at 645-5626.

IEEE

All new members please have applications and money in by today (Monday at the latest). If anyone needs membership forms or to drop them off, please leave a note (or the form and money) in the IEEE mailbox in the Dean's Office.

Hayride

A.C.S. is sponsoring a hayride Oct.21. The cost is $4.50 per person which includes the ride, sodas, and fried chicken. More details will be given at our general meeting Oct.13. Tickets may be purchased in Room 215 Dougherty.

SNAP

There will be a meeting of the Student Nurses' Assoc. of Penn. - Villanova Chapter Oct.11 at 7:30 p.m. in Bartley 209. Find out about the State Convention in Valley Forge and have a chance to win a shirt. Hope to see you there. New members are always welcome.

Center for Concern

If you are looking for quick, up to date information on issues such Urban Problems, United Nations, Amnesty International Latin America situation and others, stop in at Room 121 Tolentine and visit our vertical file for assistance, papers, class presentation or for your own interests.

ACS

There will be a general meeting for commuter students and OCR's Oct.13 at 12:45 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema. New members are welcome.

Literary Magazine

The Literary Magazine holds meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Art Gallery of the Connelly Center. New members and submissions are welcome. For information call Maria at 687-9246.

Parents' Weekend

For those students looking for something to do on Sunday, the Villanova Lacrosse Team hosts the Keystone Lacrosse Club at 1:30 p.m. in the stadium.

Pi Sigma Alpha

The Political Science Honor Society announces an organizational meeting to be held Oct.13 in the West Lounge, Dougherty at 2:30 p.m. Certificates for the national members will be distributed at this meeting. If unable to attend, please contact Tolentine 101 for cerificates. All Political Science majors and minors are welcome.

Rapist Attacks Stanford Man

By LINDA M. ROSSO

An [illegible] was assaulted a 19-year-old resident of Stanford Hall early in the morning of Sept. 17, breaking a beer bottle over the student's head and then attacking the student with the broken bottle.

The resident reportedly answered a knock at his door at about 1:40 a.m. and a thin man with stringy blond hair dressed in black pants and a black jacket burst through the door asking him if he wanted to fight. The resident was pushed to the floor, and suffered lacerations to the head and severe bleeding, according to a Radnor Township police report.

The resident was taken to Bryn Mawr Hospital for treatment and released. A suspect in the case has not been identified.

According to the assaulted resident, at approximately 1:30 a.m. he and his friends saw, from the window in his room, another student outside being harassed by an older man. The resident said that he and his friends yelled to the man for him to leave the student alone and that they then verbally abused the man from their window.

According to the student who was approached outside, the man chained [illegible] previously yelling at him from the windows and grabbed the student demanding to know the room where the shouting was coming from. The resident outside said he made a general reference to a floor in the hall and walked away.

Witnesses claim the man appeared to be in a drug or alcohol induced frenzy when he fled the room of the assaulted student.

"No one really reacted to it right away," remarked the assaulted resident, "they reacted once they saw the bleeding. There were so many people in the hallway. They let him get away. They must not have known what was going on."

The resident further stated, "It was partially my fault, but the guy was obviously out of hand. He's a dangerous person."

The resident said Radnor Police had not followed up with him and that "they are suppose to be looking for him but I don't think they are. He's certainly not going to walk into their arms."

The front doors to Stanford Hall are never locked, according to Marc Thibeodeau, south area coordinator for residence management, and sometimes people prop the side doors open at night he said.

Sgt. John Harrity, acting director of campus security, said that the night crew locks all outside doors and that there is a guard assigned to the Stanford/Good Counsel section of campus every night. Harrity said that students don't cooperate with the efforts made to secure dormatories when they prop their doors open.

"If I had my way," stated Harrity, "we'd have a man at both halls."

The assaulted student said, "I've heard he (the suspect) has been in girls rooms before and they've had trouble getting him out. I've heard he hangs around the campus."

Concerning past occurrences of trespassers on campus, Harrity said Radnor Police issued a citation to a man over the summer for "gypsying" around the dorms, but that the school has not had a problem with this in the past.

Harrity also commented that he had no formal report of the assault. "Nobody comes in and tells us anything. We have to go and scratch for ourselves," commented Harrity.

"Security doesn't get involved in a lot of issues," said the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, "It's the way things work around here."

Picnic a Hit for Union, Panhell, IFC

By. TIM HANLON

The first annual University picnic entitled "An Indian Summer Picnic" was held Oct. 2, at Fedigan field after being postponed Saturday and moved from Mendel field. It was a result of combined efforts of the Villanova Union, Panhellenic and Inter-Fraternal Councils.

Concerns about attendance at the picnic were raised after consideration of the new policy forbidding alcohol, but approximately 300 people attended and no problems were encountered concerning alcohol. Five captains, 30 security workers and 40 people to run food booths were utilized from the three sponsoring organizations. No problems were encountered concerning alcohol.

All the traditional features of an old fashion picnic were present including a pie eating contest, egg toss and volleyball game. ALIEN, a rock band from the Jersey Shore circuit played for most of the afternoon.

Ignas expressed his feelings that low attendance was evident because the picnic was switched from Saturday to Sunday, and the location was moved to Fedigan field at the last minute. "Some students did not know of the change." Alcohol was not a factor because it was never considered as part of the program due to the new alcohol policy. "Obviously, if alcohol had been permitted, a higher attendance would have been evident," commented Ignas.

McGee expressed that all the fraternities thought the picnic was a good idea and that this event during Greek Weekend would be fun for the community and school. "The picnic did not go over as well as it should have because it was relocated and changed. However, the food prices were good and ALIEN was outstanding. Everybody had a good time," said McGee. "It goes to show that alcohol did not have to be present to have a good time."

Because attendance was lower than expected, it did account for a financial hardship on the Social Functions committee and the Union as a whole.

First Career Day Planned

By SANDY KNAIDE

Representatives from over 20 major corporations will discuss career opportunities with students interested in engineering and related fields at the first Engineering Career Day on Oct. 13, sponsored by the Engineering Joint Council in cooperation with the Career Development Center and the several corporations involved.

"It is an excellent opportunity to gain information in an informal atmosphere," according to Dean of Engineering, Dr. Robert D. Lynch. In the Villanova Room, corporations equipped with displays, slide presentations and literature will inform students of qualities and skills required by their corporations as well as benefits and employment opportunities offered by their corporations.

Among the corporations participating in the career day are DuPont, IBM, U.S. Steel, Proctor and Gamble, General Electric and General Motors.

In addition to engineering majors, science, math and computer science majors are also encouraged to attend. Many corporations have requested their presence.

The event will be beneficial to engineering and science majors for several reasons, according to Lynch. "Many students must begin to make important decisions regarding their career plans. They must become aware of their own preferences, such as whether to enter into a large or small corporation, or a private or government corporation. The choices available to these students are numerous," Lynch added.

By confronting students with the choices available to them, Lynch suggested that this event could aid students in directing themselves toward their goals.

"Many students tend to think too narrowly and take a passive rather than an active role in becoming aware of their opportunities," said Lynch.

"As engineers, it will be the responsibility of students to be aware of their own worth," commented Lynch. "Certain skills are common to all engineers, some of these common areas of knowledge being research and development, sales and marketing, and production and construction. Most corporations require personnel to handle these aspects of management.

"With this concept in mind, students can become aware of their own level of marketability and perhaps become more encouraged," said Lynch.

Engineering Career Day will foster awareness of the many career opportunities available to the engineering and science major.

Although this will be the first Engineering Career Day, if it is successful, it will return in two years and expand to include Liberal Arts.

leave the Schuylkill "virtually maintenance-free for a long time," said Greene. "New techniques are being used to repair the expressway with solutions that should last for 25 years."

The reconstruction plan is drawn by a "Task Force" with representatives from 14 local governments, the area chambers of commerce, SEPTA, the State Police, Shadow Traffic and various other conflicting interest groups. "All are able to give input into the plan to keep an even balanced impact on the traffic flow," noted Greene.

To divert and limit traffic, especially during the rush hours, is essential to the construction plan. Expressway work is to be completed over three construction seasons, March through October, 1985, 1986, and 1987.

Off-expressway traffic and transit improvements will be implemented beginning in 1984. Improved signs and traffic lights will be installed along the alternate routes Schuylkill travelers are anticipated to take.

The "Task Force" estimates local roads of alternate routes may experience nearly double its usual traffic flow. Locally, some of these roads are King of Prussia Road and Lancaster Avenue.

Greene warned commuters that they should not use the Schuylkill especially during the peak hours and to take advantage of the alternate routes PennDOT has invested in to accommodate routed drivers.

Within the Villanova area, PennDOT will be responsible for a controller to time the lights along Lancaster in such a way that will move an increased degree of traffic along at the quickest rate possible.

The first construction season, in 1985, will complete rehabilitation from the Pennsylvania Turnpike to I-476 and from Vine Street to University Avenue.

During construction, four lanes will remain open between the Pennsylvania Turnpike and Route 202, while two lanes remain open from Route 202 and I-476. Between Vine Street and University Avenue, two lanes will be open.

Some ramp closures affecting Villanova drivers include the Eastbound Gulph Mills off and on-ramp and Westbound Gulph Mills and Conshohocken on-ramps.

Various other ramp closings along the expressway have been implemented. "By closing the ramps, we are avoiding the problem of sucking in more traffic than the construction route can handle," said Greene.

By November, 1985, the first construction season will be completed and in March of 1986, season two will begin. The second construction season is "quite an undertaking," said Greene, "and some parts may not be completed by the November 1986 deadline."

Upon completion of the 1987 season, rehabilitation will have been made from I-476 to City Avenue, from City Avenue to Vine Street, from Gladwyne to City Avenue (eastbound), from Roosevelt Expressway to Gladwyne (westbound) and within the Vine Street interchange area.

A Final Decision?

The Board of Trustees meets Tuesday to possibly render a final decision concerning the feasability of restoration of football at Villanova. It's one of two final opportunities to meet the deadline the Trustees themselves established several months back. Note the date, Oct. 11. The Trustees will either once again postpone reaching a determination until December or settle the matter once and for all and hopefully end an issue that has ripped the University from its foundations.

To expound on all the aspects of the issue would be extremely redundant and monotonous. Every contention in this controversy has been covered as thoroughly as possible by this newspaper. In the past few weeks, we've published the stands taken by each side in the dispute. For those who need a refresher, here are the major points:

Proponents of restoration, students and alumni, recall the fall atmosphere of days gone by, explicate their feelings of empty Saturdays and claim that academic excellence and integrity can be maintained with restoration of football. The level of competition desired is I-AA.

On the other side of the coin, the Villanova administration stands firm in its intent to prevent restoration at any level, specifying the expenses that could be incurred and displaying its fear of the return of "the football mentality."

There is no sound reason why the Trustees should delay the decision until December. All the facts have been put on the table for the Trustees to digest. All arguments have been exhausted. Every point and counterpoint has been discussed, discredited and discarded. What is needed now is a firm, final decision on restoration. No delay, no further research, no excuses. We urge the Trustees to end the suspense and let all constituencies know whether football will return or forever remain in the dusty memories of a loyal few.

Our Newspaper

"The primary function of newspapers is to communicate to the human race what its members do, feel, think. Journalism, therefore, demands of its practitioners the widest range of intelligence, or knowledge, and of experience, as well as natural and trained powers of observation and reasoning. To its opportunities as a chronicle are indissolubly linked its obligations as teachers and interpreters."

Canons of Journalism
American Society of Newspaper Editors

We try. Each week the Villanova community is presented with a newspaper chronicling all the major events and activities involving the University. What you read is the result of a great deal of hard work compiled by a dedicated number of students interested in presenting all the issues that affect us daily. The Villanovan strives to inform and entertain every reader each Friday. You may not agree with everything we write, but that's not the point. We are the primary source of your information. Read us. Know us. We are here for your benefit, as well as ours.

Stupid, Stupid

Stupid, stupid, stupid. A couple of clowns thought it would be funny to toss a few tomatoes at the movie screen during the showing of "Attack of the Killer Tomatoes." Ha, ha. Very funny. At first we chuckled. But damaging the movie screen, especially to the tune of several thousand dollars, is not something to laugh at after one takes a moment's pause. Destroying the screen deprives students of the cultural enjoyment of films sponsored by the Villanova Union, an organization attempting to add a little entertainment to an otherwise boring campus atmosphere. Are these the same students who claim they can drink responsibly and act maturely? We hope not.

Letters to the Editor

A Letter to Alumni President

Dear Mr. Rodgers:

Thank you for taking the time to write a letter in support of Villanova Student Government.

Our primary interest in writing "Student Government's Position on Football" (September 23rd issue of the Villanovan) was to clearly define our stance in favor of the restoration of football. Secondly, we wanted to state our concern that the divisiveness of this continuing issue was injurious to Villanova University — the very reason for all our efforts and time.

In the same issue of the Villanovan, in the article "Leahy Confronts Student Issues," the word "schism" was mistakenly used to describe the existing relationship between Student Government and the Alumni Association. This issue is not worthy of driving any segment of the Villanova family apart.

We look forward to working together in the future on other issues which will benefit Villanova University and, thus, all those who proudly carry her name.

Patrick J. Leahy
Student Body President

Editor's Note: schism: "A condition of disagreement in opinion; a condition of opposition or divergence; a division of a group into two discordant groups."

Campus Paralysis

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to applaud and support the stance on the alcohol policy taken by the Rev. John O'Rourke in his 9/30/83 Letter to the Editor. Fr. O'Rourke voiced in his article the feelings of many on-campus residents and should be commended for doing so.

As a freshman last year, I enjoyed a very pleasant mix of two worlds — academic and social. The balance of the two was such that neither interfered with the other, creating an extremely pleasant atmosphere around campus (not to mention a vital part of a "well rounded education"). The weekly TG's and Day Hop parties played a large part in making this social aspect of Villanova life effective.

This year, however, the atmosphere is not so pleasant. In actuality, the atmosphere on weekends is more like a morgue than anything else. The elimination of these types of social gatherings has virtually killed the social life at Villanova. True, there are attempts at social gatherings on campus, but poor attendance and lack of enthusiasm and interest demonstrates that they are extremely ineffective in replacing the TG's and Day Hop type gatherings.

The only alternative to this year's gatherings are off-camus parties, and no one has to be told of the potential danger in attending one of these parties, as evidenced by tragic incidents in past years. It seems to me that not only has the

Open Letter to Fr. Gallen: Unimpressed by Position

To the Editor:
Open Letter
to Fr. Gallen:

I read with interest and some disappointment the Villanovan's report on the administration's response to the Trustee Committee's proposal to implement a Division IAA football program. My disappointment stems from the apparent intent of the administration to look upon the football issue as a "zero-sum" game, when in fact all parties to the controversy will be winners if the right decision is made. On the other hand, as one who is convinced that a Division IAA program is the right course, I am impressed by the fact that the administration's position is unconvincing.

The "response" is anything but a response as it misses the issue. The issue is not the restoration of the former Division IA program, nor is it the correctness of the 1981 decision to eliminate that program. Rather, the issue is the Trustee Committee's pending recommendations to implement a different program and the extensive underlying analysis of the benefits of such a course for the University. Reference to the past and the motivations for the 1981 decision does nothing to help create a constructive dialogue. The only proper course is to "forget the past" and look to the future. The alumni and students feel this way and we urge you, Fr. Gallen, to adopt a similar posture. I am sure all factions of the University's community agree that at least as regards the football issue, nothing can be gained by rehashing the recent past.

Since the administration has ignored the real issue, the "response" simply fails of its purpose and does not establish a basis upon which to conclude that the Trustee Committee's recommendation should not be implemented.

I think it important to point out some areas where the response misses the mark and perhaps creates the wrong impression. It simply is not credible to state, "Except for difficult relations with a segment of our alumni, that decision (to eliminate football) has been well received . . ." In 1982, alumni from all across the country met at Valley Forge in a show of unity on the issue never before seen by me or other longtime observers. These representatives from across the country were more than a segment. Other tangible illustrations of broad alumni dissatisfaction with the decision are well known to all of us. The pledge of financial support and the actual contributions to the effort to restore football, as well as the repeated urgings and resolutions of the many alumni clubs, are examples that more than a segment of the alumni are unhappy with this decision.

Similarly, it cannot seriously be said that the student body "well received" the elimination of football nor is it true that the faculty is as happy as Fr. Gallen believes.

I fail to see how it can be said that the termination of football has not had any "demonstrable impact" on alumni contributions nor affected enrollment. I know, and I assume most of the administration knows, that at least one substantial gift has been lost because of this controversy.

The administration must know that every dollar pledged to and/or actually contributed to the various activities aiming for the restoration of football is a dollar lost to the administration. This is a substantial sum. Fr. Gallen, you should ask the fund raisers and I think you will have a somewhat different perspective on this question.

Enrollment as a measure of Villanova's health cannot be assessed by reference to absolute numbers. The relevant comparison should be the change over time in Villanova's relative position in the number and quality of applicants as compared to competitive institutions such as Boston College.

There is much more that can be said about the response, but the important aspect is that it is not convincing and further debate can only create more disharmony. Fr. Gallen cannot feel comfortable with the assertion that implementation of the Trustee Committee's proposal "can only hurt the University." No one can seriously say that an autumn campus activity with competition on the level of, and with Universities such as Harvard, Yale, Penn, Holy Cross, and other great institutions, can hurt Villanova. Certainly, like me, Fr. Gallen must be uncomfortable with the continuing controversy characterized by an administration on one side and essentially all other segments of our community on the other. This truly hurts Villanova.

On Campus

By LAUREN ROACHE and JOHN WALSH

In lieu of the closing of the Pizza Palace, the Villanovan asked students: "How do you feel about the closing of the Pizza Palace? What do you think should be put in its place?"

"I think it's a shame. It was a good place for underclassmen without cars to go for a party. Make it a place for parties!"

Sue Roop
Senior, Nursing

"I think the school should realize that there is a lack of gathering places for underclassmen. In its place, I think Fr. O'Rourke should open a BYOB establishment."

Joe Brady,
Sophomore,
Electrical Engineering

"Very upset. It was a good place to find a date for the weekend. A massage parlour."

Carolyn Casinelli
Senior,

"What Pizza Palace? A Beer Distribution Center."

John Lilly
Sophomore, Finance

"It won't make any difference to me. Rosemont Pizza has always been my favorite anyway! A bar."

Kathy Kirk

"Never had the pleasure of dining there. A 2-hole golf course."

Ken Dardis

"It's just one more thing that is going to hurt the social atmosphere on campus. The Pizza Palace was used often for social gatherings. Some other facility that could be used by the students for get-togethers should be put in its place."

Reaganomics Attacked

By BETH CAPELLI

The "Talks of the Times" lecture series presented Dr. John Logue, a professor of political science at Villanova, speaking on the "Reagan Presidency in perspective."

Logue has been politically active. Recently a Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate, he has oftened voiced his concern with the direction "Reaganomics" has taken in our country.

Logue began by commenting on the current economic situation, questioning the benefits, if any, from the Reagan economic policy.

Being the chief of government, Logue stated, Reagan should symbolize the unity of the government, making him clearly distinguishable from any other.

Added, Logue "As a legislative leader, I'd have to give him an 'A'. He is very skillful."

Elaborating on this idea, Logue mentioned Reagan's skill in dealing with the country's legislature. One example of this was Reagan's pairing down the defense expenditures to please the legislature. The compromise proved to be quite beneficial.

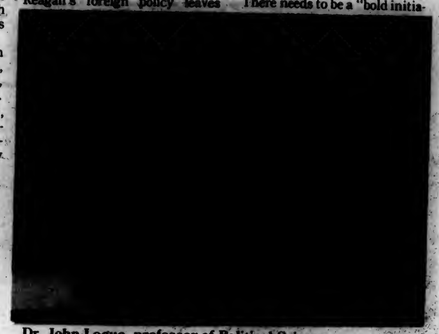
As chief executive and administrator, Logue feels that perhaps Reagan could use some improvement just because of some of the "nonsense" that he has allowed James Watt to "get away with."

Moreover, Logue feels there remain a lot of problems within the administration, itself. He doesn't sense that Reagan is really "on top with all that the administration is doing."

As foreign policy leader, Reagan "leaves much to be desired." Logue continued to state that power is a part of being the foreign policy leader, yet questioned whether or not this power is exemplified in Reagan.

Logue then said that "perhaps Reagan is a little too trusting, sometimes."

Logue believed the weakness of Reagan's foreign policy leaves some danger of an arms race, or a problem with the atomic weapons. Logue stated that "the PLO just might not hesitate, either."



Dr. John Logue, professor of Political Science.

"It's a great shame, even a disappointment," Logue mentioned, "that Reagan doesn't seem to have a vision as to where the country is going."

In conclusion, Logue stated the important role our government should play in the economy. Hence "there should be a pragmatic attitude toward the role of government." The central effort should be directed toward foreign policy and obligations to the human family. Logue questioned whether or not Reagan expressed a feeling for the human family, as his economic policies including the deficits and increased taxes did little to benefit families.

There needs to be a "bold initiative" on the government's part, a stable peace keeping force, and better control over atomic weapons. In order for this world to grow, Logue stated peace and prosperity must be present.

"Our President should preach and teach to help more public opinion in the right direction," Logue stated. In order for the President to gain more respect from the people, he should not underestimate their abilities and interests.

Construction

Closing of lanes and ramps will be set in a similar manner as that of the 1985 season.

Communication between the Schuylkill travelers and PennDOT will be essential during the construction period and to assure these open lines, Greene gave several options travelers may use. There will be a hot line number, three brochures published to address the tourist, truckers and commuters individually, while detour maps will be published monthly and news releases announced when necessary.

Dividing the money to be spent on the rehabilitation project, up to approximately $10 to $12 million will be directed toward the off-expressway improvements to be made.

The undertaking of the construction plan is sub-contracted by ten contractors, six of the contractors dealing exclusively with the off-expressway changes.

Greene explained that they are re-routing the commuters because "they are the best people who can find their way around on the side roads."

Political Union Plans Debates

By SUZ SPAGNOLA

In the next three months, the Villanova Political Union will open its debate forum to Congressman William Gray, Arthur Helnick of the CIA and Richard Trumka, president of the United Mine Workers of America. Kathleen Farrell, moderator of the Villanova Political Union and Caroline Crawford, president of the Union, also mentioned the possibility of getting Wilson Goode, Alan Cranston and perhaps Jesse Jackson for Political Union Debates.

Congressman Gray is scheduled to speak Oct. 17 on the topic of American troops in Central America. Hellnick will attempt to justify current U.S. policy in Central America. Villanova Law School graduate Trumka will speak on the future of Labor Unions.

The Political Union is a student organization which attempts to deal with issues important to the students. Members of the Union met this summer to discuss topics of interest and potential speakers. Controversial topics include Nuclear Power, Arms Negotiations, acid rain and U.S. Foreign Policy.

The Political Union sent letters of invitation, including a copy of the goals of the Union, to various local and national figures whom the members felt would do well in the format of the debate. Many of these speakers responded positively, in spite of absence of monetary gain. Exposure of this type is in the speakers favor, commented both Farrell and Crawford.

University's new "no-alcohol'on campus" policy eliminated the once enjoyable social life on campus, it is asking for trouble by forcing students to go off-campus to attend parties.

The intent of this letter is not to claim that alcohol is the sole factor involved with Villanova students having a good time. Its intent is, however, to state that, with the ineffectiveness of this year's on campus social life (as evidenced by the "dead" atmosphere around campus and by poor attendance and lack of interest at the few gatherings that have been held), it is necessary to resume the TG and Day Hop style gatherings in order to bring the vital social aspect of college life back to the socially lifeless Villanova campus. The spirit and enthusiasm that once filled this campus, especially on weekends, is gone and the blame for that goes not on the LCB or on Pennsylvania state laws, but on University choice. Have these kinds of gatherings been eliminated from other Pennsylvania universities such as Penn State because of state laws? I think not. Then why Villanova? The total elimination of these gatherings has not added to the quality of life at Villanova, it has paralyzed it.

Killer Tomatoes

To the Editor:

As the visual arts coordinator of the Villanova Union, I want to inform the students about a disgraceful episode. Last Tuesday night, my committee sponsored the movie "Attack of the Killer Tomatoes." An unfortunate series of events took place at the second showing of this film. Several students chose to attend this movie drunk, and came with the intention of throwing tomatoes and other debris at the screen and at other students in attendance. Irreparable damage was done to the Connelly Center Cinema Screen, and the replacement cost has been estimated to the order of several thousand dollars. The conduct of these students was extremely disappointing, especially since a complaint of many students is that the administration does not treat them as adults.

This act has not only made the students of Villanova look immature and irresponsible, but has put their film series, which has been a source of enjoyment to students for many years, in jeopardy. The cost of replacement of the screen will put a serious strain on the already small budget of this committee, which has in the past consistently striven to present quality films at an inexpensive price. If this is the way the students show their appreciation for an organization which devotes its time to bringing high quality, low cost entertainment to Villanova, it is a sad indicator of the maturity of the students. I realize that it was a few students who are causing the rest to suffer, and I hope that soon my faith in the students of Villanova will be restored.

Football A Must

To the Editor:

As the father of six Villanovans and a graduate myself, I urge the return of football — Division I-AA — to our alma mater and an end to this damaging and polarizing conflict in the Villanova family.

The lack of acceptance by the Administration of the recommendations of the Special Football Committee appointed by the Board of Trustees is most difficult to understand after the in-depth and comprehensive study which preceeded their findings and satisfied the issues involved.

The problem of cost is certainly overcome by student and alumni pledges of support, the advent of memberships in the new Colonial or Yankee Conferences which offer more attractive scheduling and TV opportunities, and the new lighting facilities for night games at the stadium.

The prejudice against football as being inconsistent with academic excellence and the University mission is equally unfounded in light of the long and successful traditions at the Ivy League Colleges as well as Colgate, Lehigh, Holy Cross, William and Mary, to name a few.

I take issue with the Administration Response that there never has been a sellout of the stadium. In fact, there have been many capacity crowd occasions in the past on Homecoming and Parents' Day weekends, and more specifically, the most recent University of Delaware and Boston College games where nothing but standing room space was available.

We all love and want the very best for Villanova. The return of football in Division I-AA is a must in order to bring us back together again.

Plenty to Do

To the Editor:

Since the inception of the new alcohol policy, there has been a lot said about the lack of entertainment that is available to students on campus. Stephen Bradley's Letter to the Editor (Sept. 23, 1983) typifies many students' responses. In his letter, he stated that he sees ". . . nothing healthy or interesting in a campus where weekends lack parties, dances, concerts, visiting speakers . . . even a library that's open at night."

Well, I don't know about keeping the library open late, but almost all of the campus organizations have been working to provide some sort of on-campus weekend entertainment for students. Over the past three weeks the Association of Communting Students, WKVU and the Union have all sponsored dances with either professional D.J.'s or a band. Last weekend the Union, IFC and Panhellenic ran an outdoor picnic with a live band, food and games.

All the organizations are trying to meet the needs of the students, but thus far have been confronted with poor attendance. We believe, as you do, that a college campus social life is not complete without dances, concerts, parties, etc, but we also believe that you shouldn't have to go off campus to socialize and meet people.

If anyone has any other ideas for programs, I urge them to get involved in a student organization where you can work to help change the social life on campus.

In the meantime, we will continue to run social events, and any other programs people would like — all we ask is that you give these events a chance. You may be pleasantly surprised.

Dead Campus

To the Editor:

We would like to commend Fr. O'Rourke for taking a stand on the alcohol policy at Villanova. It is nice to know that there is a faculty member who is looking out for the student's best interests.

As Fr. O'Rourke so vividly points out, this campus is dead on the weekends. Yet, the frat parties, local apartments and the bars in Philly are packed with Villanova students. Students often have to hitch rides or get a ride home from someone who is drunk. If students were allowed to consume alcohol in their rooms, these dangerous situations could be avoided.

Many of us have come from homes where we were allowed to grab a beer out of the refrigerator and our parents thought nothing of it. We have more restrictions put on us here at Villanova than at our own homes. This causes rebellious attitudes which do not "add to the quality of life at Villanova."

An unhealthy atmosphere has been created here — especially on the weekends. Many students have lost pride and respect for this campus. It should not be this way. This is such a beautiful place we should not be forced to go elsewhere for a good time.

This alcohol policy has been detrimental to campus life already. The results of this policy may be more disastrous than were anticipated. Something should be done about it now before it is too late.

I will end as I began with a request that the administration look forward as I am sure the vast majority of my fellow alumni do. We will accept that the actions in 1981 were taken with proper motivation, just as we expect you to appreciate that our objectives are properly motivated, and that we think no less of our University than you.

Students Find 'Grease' The Word

By LAURA FORTUNATO

Local area dinner theatres will feature two Villanova students, Cindy Keane and Steve Runk, in their productions of "Grease" this winter. Steve plays Eugene, the intellectually superior, yet physically awkward class valedictorian, while Cindy plays the loudmouthed, obnoxious Cha Cha.

To pass the audition, performers had to act, dance, sing and portray the 50's style of person.

Although Steve and Cindy have had little formal training, both have participated in high school productions and are members of the Villanova Dance Ensemble. Steve was also set designer and a member of the chorus for the first session of Grease this summer.

At the suggestions of directors Jean Havor and Tom Pileggi, Steve auditioned for the part of Eugene. Steve said, "the audition was very competitive, but I really wanted to do this. I put a lot of effort into trying out. I'll still be designing the set, but now I will have an active stage role."

Both Cindy and Steve admit they had somewhat of a disadvantage in auditioning for their parts. "Jean and Tommy direct the dance ensemble, which we are both a part of. They know our capabilities and were more critical of our auditions. The extra pressure did make it more meaningful though," said Cindy.

Steve Runk and Cindy Keane

This is the first paid performance for Cindy and Steve. Tom Pileggi added that most of the cast was semi-professional and very experienced. "It's very exciting to work with this cast. Their level of energy and intensity motivates us all," noted Cindy. Director Jean Havor, who has been directing for over 20 years, said that the cast is the finest she has ever worked with. "They are all Hot Dogs. They're energetic, talented and easy to work with. Steve and Cindy are a great addition and fit in very well."

Havor explained, "Steve and Cindy started dancing with the ensemble the last few years. Even though they have had little experience, they have come a long way. Steve is dedicated and learns quickly. Cindy too has amazed us with her progress. It's obvious that she is a natural dancer."

Aside from spending their Sundays rehearsing in Willow Grove Steve and Cindy attend dance practice each Tuesday and Thursday evening. Although the academic requirements at Villanova are difficult, they do manage to fit in their strenuous extracurricular activities. Steve believes that it all depends on how much you are willing to put into it. "I'm doing what I really want to do and that helps me to budget my time. It is also a release from the pressures of studying. I still find time for relaxing with friends."

Cindy has also learned to manage her time. "I made time for doing this because I really enjoy it. I tend to become hyper and energetic, and this is a good outlet for me."

Acting and dancing is a secondary concern for both of these students, although they would like to continue with community theater in the future. Steve does not look toward acting as a career but hopes to maintain participation as a hobbie, while combining his education and interests. "Right now, I don't want to limit my capabilities," said Steve.

Besides the seriousness and intensity behind the effort, Steve and Cindy admit that they love "hamming it up" in front of an audience. "We just want to have a good time," added Cindy. The fact that neither is at all like the characters they portray has not scared them, but the challenge has made it more exciting.

So if you happen to see two people leaping through the quad or dancing across campus, don't stop them. They may be "sleep dancing."

Main Line Communicates

By CAROLYN MILLER

Last week Villanova University participated in Main Line Week by hosting "Main Line Communications: A Personal View" in the Connelly Center on Sept. 26 and 27. Moderated by Teresa Nance and Warren Richardson of the communications department, this presentation consisted of eight speakers from various fields of the communications industry.

Professor Michael Pearson

Each of the Main Line communication representatives spoke on how communication affects the community, both socially and economically, and explained some of the latest developments in the industry.

Speaking on the first night of the presentation were Mahfuz Amom, representative for the United Nations Education, Science and Cultural Organization (UNESCO); John Bartholomew, Mid-Atlantic Amateur Radio Club; Ira Black, editorial board chairman for the Chilton Company and Robert Deddy, community relations manager of Bell of Pennsylvania.

UNESCO Representative Amom informed the audience that the UN is encouraging all nations to allocate more funds to the bettering of communication within the world. According to Amom, "Learning foreign languages is the key to the success of communication in the future."

Bartholomew explained that the Amateur Radio Club, nicknamed "Ham," is a community hobby to serve the public and considered a national resource in the event of war.

"The Chilton Company, press publishers for 20 magazines, helps readers in various industries do their jobs better," said Black. The company's headquarters is located in the Sun Oil Company Building in Radnor.

The speakers for the second night of the presentation were Michael Pearson, professor of Communications at Villanova; Tod Wheeler, national sales manager for WPVI-TV; Steven Feingold, representative for Comcast Cablevision of Montgomery County and Barry Pennell, representative for TV Guide Magazine.

Professor Pearson commented that, Technology changes our world and the fastest move in technology is communication.

"The communication arts major is the largest liberal arts department at Villanova," said Pearson, "and we are teaching our students how to be communicators rather than 'broadcast journalists' specifically."

"As far as television advertising dollars are concerned, network television is still the leader when compared to the pay television companies," confirmed WPVI-TV sales manager Wheeler.

"Main Line Communications: A Personal View" was videotaped by Comcast Cablevision of Montgomery County.

Local Saloons Attract Seniors

By CAROLYN MILLER and CATHERINE GROODY

Senior year is a time of pending graduation, contemplating career opportunities and completing undergraduate studies. However, we all know that senior year is more than just resume writing and thesis papers.

By the time you reach your senior year, it's best to pursue the following course of study.

Upon rolling out of bed at 11:30 a.m. on Monday with his 10:30 Western Civilization class not the only thing that is history, Sam Senior begins the week with an intellectually stimulating outlook. He'll attempt to attend one of his three MWF courses and assume he should be duly rewarded for his efforts.

Following a nine-piece order of Chicken McNuggets at Mickey D's, Sam, a pre-law student, will study "wife abuse cases" at the infamous "You Beat Your Wife," formally known as You Bet Your Life in Bryn Mawr. Equipped with beer mug, Sam will pay the $6 cover for all he can drink.

Tuesday is for primping, thinks Sally Senior, who missed her 10 a.m. Death & Dying class because she was buffing her nails. After a satisfying meal at Salad Alley, she'll use her newly learned social interaction skills at Friendly's Saloon. Here she receives her $6 mug souvenir and communicates with the bartender who keeps the beer flowing.

On Wednesday Sam and Sally have already made it half-way through the week. Their evening course of study calls for a dual celebration. The Strafford Rusty Scupper, with its Malibu Beach decor, provides the perfect mood for a study break. Upon overindulging in the "3-for-$1 before midnight"gimmick, Sally and Sam stumble down that spiral staircase and end up at the Wayne Tavern's doorstep.

Kelly's, the popular Villanova hangout.

After tripping past Billy the Bouncer, Sally and Sam are greeted by Villanova's uproarious future alumni. The rest is history.

On Thursday, Sally works on the planning committee for the 150 days 'til graduation party, while Sam plays a strenuous game of intramural football. Opting to study the "cultural sites" in nearby vicinities, Sam and Sally make a right off 30th Street and end up at Smokey Joe's.

"The" Villanova drinking establishment, is, of course, KELLY'S in Bryn Mawr, this can be frequented by Villanovans three days out of the week: Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

The grand finale of a senior's "work" week is a rip-roaring afternoon at Kelly's. This is where the senior "two-fisted" drinkers leave their "assignment" worries behind.

To those underclassmen who have yet to experience this "part" of college life, never fear; the best is yet to come.

Students Travel To France

By JOHN McCLUNG

Dr. Rene Mongeau's new "French in France" program, with the invaluable aid of Dr. Jan Rigaud, rewardingly completed its initial month at Massy, France. Eighteen students, including the not-so-senior citizens Max and Juliet Levins, took part in the August adventure centered in the small town of Massy about eight miles south of Paris.

Villanova students enjoying the sights of Paris.

At the international student dorm (A.F.I.) in Massy, Villanovans socialized with students and scholars of many countries, mostly from the French-speaking African countries, and some from as far as China. Parties enabled group members to practice their new language.

Exploring Paris was also a tremendous experience; the fabulous French cuisine, the efficient and clean subways, rock bands at the Chatelet and discos on the Champs-Elysee were all enjoyed, but most importantly they were submerged in an environment that was so beneficial in studying the French language. Such a beautiful country and history created an enthusiasm of and a response from the participants so positive that, it is hoped, plans for next summer's stay at Massy are already in the works.

Comm. Arts Society Seeks A New Image

By CHARLENE PARDOE

The Communication Arts Society is undergoing several changes this year in order to increase an awareness of career opportunities in the field of communications.

New changes in the Communication Arts Society include bi-monthly meetings which will convene at 7 p.m. on the second and fourth Monday of each month in the Bryn Mawr room of the Connelly Center.

Mary Grace Gordon, president of the society, believes it is one of the major improvements. "I think a lot of the reason it wasn't that strong last year was because they did not have a room or set meetings. Because of this, we couldn't hold the members together and get much accomplished."

Also, at their first meeting held in September, there was a significant increase in the amount of interest shown, than in the past.

The society is also going to form smaller groups this year so more members will have a say in its function.

The groups' membership eligibility is changing this year too. An active members list will be made and attendance will be taken at each meeting. "For those that do not have enough attendance, they won't be able to put it on their resume," Gordon explained.

At the meeting on Oct. 10, two students with internships at WCAU-TV will speak. New members are welcome.

Other events planned for this year are a speech by WCAU-AM General Manager Vince Benedict and participation in the communication arts convocation in St. Mary's auditorium on Oct. 20, 4:30 p.m. After the convocation, there will be a social with communication arts society members, faculty and other students.

Changing Attitudes Towards Our Parents

Remember the first time Mom caught us red-handed? We thought it was so clever how the spaghetti sauce made all sorts of interesting patterns when we poured it over our little brother's head. Of course, Mom just didn't understand. In fact, all she could do was grow red in the face and yell words like "Not funny" and "What a waste!" Obviously Mom could not see eye to eye with us. The only thing we wanted her to do was relax and enjoy how the sauce dripped off our brother's nose. Mom's unreasonableness, however, prevented us from expressing this and all we could muster was an apologetic, "Yes, Mom."

Or, recall a few years later when we brought home an anniversary card for our parents. We were very careful in making it, putting lots of trees and flowers on the cover. And, to top things off, inside read the perfect message: "Dear Mom and Dad, Happy Anniversary. I love you." And remember how we really did love them? We knew they loved us (they always told us), and we were sure we needed them. Right? Without them we would have been starving and naked in a forest somewhere. Therefore, we loved them.

And remember those days when it was so easy to tell them that, even if we weren't quite sure what it meant.

Or, how about the night six years later when we phoned them at 2:15 a.m. and said, "Oh, by the way, Dad, I'm going to be a little late tonight." Wasn't it annoying how he demanded that we get home "Now!" rather than appreciate the fact that we were considerate enough to call? Then, when we did arrive home, we always heard: "Do you think we were born yesterday?!!" And we had to bite our tongues to keep from saying, "To tell you the truth, Dad, I think you must have been, since neither of you has a clue as to what life is all about." But all we did say was "No, Dad."

Or, remember the first time we found our folks laughing, crying, arguing, or kissing and, to our surprise, discovered they they might be more human than we had given them credit for?

And then there was the time, a few months or years ago, when we were leaving for Villanova for the first time — Mom's eyes filled with tears and Dad said how proud they both were. Remember the surprise we felt, how badly we knew we would miss them?

Or, how about our first phone call home, when we heard how the dinner table just wasn't the same with our seat empty? "Yes, classes are fine and I've met some great people, but . . . I wish I were home doing the dishes." And when we hung up, remember how we realized that Mom and Dad weren't so bad after all? In fact, thinking about them hard enough could have brought tears to our eyes if we let it. We longed to be home because we saw them in a different way. We were growing up and we wanted them to know.

And, remember how all this growing up caused us to change our way of thinking? "Maybe our parents aren't the strangers that we might have thought. Maybe they weren't born yesterday or last week, but, instead, do have some useful insight to offer us. Maybe it is possible for us to disagree with them, yet respect them as persons who happen to have a different opinion. Perhaps we ought to admit that it was we who had to do the growing up. It's true, we don't send them home-made greeting cards anymore; but maybe we love them all the more since living away from home. And maybe we don't let them know often enough.

Well, our parents are coming this weekend. And if they're not, they're but a phone call away. Won't it be nice when we remember to say, "Hey, Mom and Dad, I love you." Especially now that we have a better idea of what it means.

Skunks Anticipating MTV

By CATHERINE GROODY

Skunk Power! Skunkmania! The Albino Skunks?!?! Who are they? What are they? They are the energetic, fun-loving band born on the second floor of Sullivan Hall who commit themselves to radiating a delightful and most entertaining musical experience. With the rhythmic moves of Chubby Checker and a harmony reminiscent of Sha-Na-Na, this particular Villanova band permeates their enthusiasm to all who have seen them.

"We're all friends," said drummer, Clint Piatelli "and we have a good time doing it."

The Albino Skunks consist of junior twin brothers Mike Piatelli, guitarist and lead singer and Clint Piatelli, drummer and senior Renni Storm who plays the keyboard. The band's added effects are three quite talented prima ballerinas who are juniors Mike Cooney, Tim Curran and Harry Axe. On stage, they are joined by four over-sized black and white bulldozers which they call the Skunk Securities. These bullies who roam incognito around campus are the bands added protection against dedicated fans like the Skunketts who are the front row members of their screaming fan club.

Last spring, the Albino Skunks, whose name was formulated over a tantilizing meal at the Pit, got together to perform at Villanova's annual Big Event. They succeeded in winning and continued their music career at Spring Fever Week. In the Skunks latest performance last Friday at L & M Caterers, they confirmed their successful appeal.

When asked about the future of the Albino Skunks, one member simply said, "I don't know. We'll see how it goes. Right now, we're just waiting for MTV to call."

Social Action's Bike-A-Thon

By CATHERINE GROODY

On Oct. 9, from 2-5 p.m., the Social Action Program will sponsor a bike-a-thon for St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital in Tennessee. The bike-a-thon will be a one to two mile course beginning in Villanova's main parking lot and continuing throughout the surrounding Villanova area. Each participant will ride the length of the course several times depending on the amount of sponsors he obtains. Each bike-a-thon rider enlists sponsors who donate a sum of money for each mile completed. Riders who raise $25 will receive a St. Jude's t-shirt and those raising $75 will receive a tote bag.

This year, cancer will strike 10,000 children in America alone. In lieu of this, research institutions like St. Jude's are dedicated to the research and care of children stricken with cancer and catastrophic diseases.

Founded in 1962, by entertainer Danny Thomas, St. Jude's commits themselves to discovering new bits of knowledge. Knowledge that must be carefully evaluated and quickly catalogued into growing libraries of information that will someday give them the power to control, cure and hopefully prevent these deadly cancers. St. Jude's receives 65 per cent of their operating budget from the efforts of volunteers like those participating in the bike-a-thon being held this Sunday.

This year's ride is being dedicated to Terry, a leukemia patient at St. Jude's. "By riding for Terry," says Sr. Theresa, this year's Bike-A-Thon chairman, "we'll really be helping all stricken children since research is the only way illnesses can be conquered. We hope that the citizens of the area will back the riders by pledging a contribution for each mile the riders go that day. The money our riders earn will help continue St. Jude's life-saving study of childhood cancer that has become so important to children all over the world."

All are encouraged to attend. Sponsor forms and more information can be obtained by calling the Social Action Office at Villanova.

Rude Awakening to Outside World

By JACQUI ROSEN

After being besieged with so many movies concerning the trials of the teenage years, it is an interesting change of pace to view a movie that asks the question, "What happens after college?" Lawrence Kasdan's "The Big Chill," focuses on the lives of eight former college friends about fifteen years after graduation.

The trials and tribulations of eight friends are documented in "The Big Chill."

Having been together in college in the 1960s, during the era of hippies, drugs and idealism, the group suddenly finds themselves together again after one of their old roommates commits suicide. However, this time, they are thrust into an entirely new world — of business deals and raising children — a world in which they are no longer the dominant force.

Kasdan skillfully uses his characters to represent nearly all facets of life. Their careers range from a movie star, a doctor, a lawyer, an unhappily married wife of a businessman; and a Vietnam veteran who has survived only to become a drifter. Although diverse, the group shares a common bond of loneliness, disillusionment, and the wish to return to the old days. As they reminisce about their lives in college, they find that they have lost their idealistic values. While they once dreamed of changing the world, they now realize that the world is a cold place, of which they have become a part. They begin to see that they have lost something along the way. As Harold (Kevin Kline) ironically remarks to Sam (Tom Berenger), "I can't believe how much money we've made," and then the rationalization, "At least it doesn't mean anything to us."

Although the film has its funny moments, the overall mood is quite serious. The transition from the protected collegiate life to the real world is shown to be a painful adjustment, but subtle humor is used to get across this point. The scene in which Karen (Jobeth Williams) plays an organ version of "You Can't Always Get What You Want" in memory of Alex, evokes laughter from the audience. However, the title of the song is a constant reminder. The group has only just begun to accept the fact that not all of their dreams will be fulfilled.

As the story unfolds, the group gradually accepts what they cannot change. This realization is effectively seen through the use of humor and sarcasm. When Michael (Jeff Goldblum) is accused of rationalizing, he replied lightly that rationalization is an important aspect of human life and is more important than sex: "Have you ever gone a week without a rationalization?"

"The Big Chill" is a realistic portrayal of the survivors of a confused generation. It contains the underlying truth that touches all who must face the reality of leaving a sheltered world to enter a sometimes cold and dangerous one. The movie is filmed mainly on a plantation in Beaufort, South Carolina, away from the bustling, outside world. Emphasis is placed on the fact that the plantation is a sort of protected utopia in itself, and the group is unwilling to leave it.

Lawrence Kasdan, who himself attended college in the 1960s, shows such insight that the transition cannot take place without a changing of values and also some pain. "The Big Chill" combines an all-star cast, a veteran director, and a good script to produce an entertaining and meaningful film.

"Country" Covers Ground

By FRANK DUNNE

It is no big secret that during the last few years, Americans have been bombarded with scores of English fashion bands. The latest of such bands to reach our shores is one of exceptional talent, known throughout the U.K. as Big Country. Although they are indeed a part of the trendy new music scene, their sound is fresh and provides some long-awaited relief from the synthetic pop that has polluted our airwaves of late.

Their first American release, "The Crossing" has drawn favorable reviews from even the most reputable of music critics in the business. Slashing guitar chords and riveting bass lines comprise an unbeatable formula comparable to that of Ireland's premier rock band, U-2.

But on a larger scale, their smash single "In A Big Country" has ripped through both British charts, and thanks to the efforts of Music Television (MTV), American charts as well. The single has peaked as high as number seven in the Billboard Top 100, and has even been included in WCAU's top-40 program (if that's any indication of the kind of success they will achieve).

Although just receiving recognition in this country, Big Country has established itself throughout the United Kingdom since their formation in 1981. It seems as though their reputation preceded their arrival in the U.S., for they sold out their only American appearance at New York's Ritz. Success has not always been sweet for Big Country. In fact, their early career suffered several setbacks, including a disastrous tour as Alice Cooper's support band in 1982. All that is behind them now, and it seems as if there will be clear sailing for the prominent foursome.

Big Country

Most of today's bands have succumbed to synthesizers with the belief that good sound is unattainable without their use. What separates Big Country from the rest of the pack is their boldness to abandon keyboards altogether. Stuart Adamson's guitar playing is magical in the sense that he can replicate almost any sound, including bagpipes.

There are even strands of Western music in some of their tracks. "The Choice" for instance, manages to incorporate a romantic love ballad with background music from a Western flick. It might even be a suitable soundtrack for a Cowboy Casanova. "Lost Patrol" is a clever track resembling bagpipes resounding through the distant hills of a rolling Scottish countryside. What is even more impressive is the fact that all this is accomplished by the hand of Stuart Adamson's guitar. The last song on the album is titled "Porrohman," a fascinating, upbeat tune that could only be described as a "hardcore lullaby."

The American music scene has long been in need of a band of such stature. As has often been the case, many bands have obtained their brief moments of success, and have rightfully earned the label of "flash in the pan." As long as Big Country continues to display their unique brand of music, characteristically all their own, they will achieve great heights of success.

Another Side of Mr. Bowie

By PATTI SKIBNIEWSKI

Most of us are familiar with the musical achievements of David Bowie. But of his acting, only true Bowie fans are aware that he has been in three previous films including "The Man Who Fell To Earth" and "The Hunger." He has also appeared on Broadway in "The Elephant Man." His latest work, "Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence" is a touching film about the friendships which develop between men in the most trying situation, that of war.

David Bowie is Jack Celliers in "Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence."

David Bowie portrays Jack Celliers, a soldier in the British Army, captured on Java during World War II by the Japanese. At the prisoner-of-war camp where he is taken, the British prisoners are tortured and executed because it was believed by the Japanese that punishment was necessary, not because it was just, but rather to keep order. Jack (Bowie) revolts against the establishment, yet he is introduced to bonds which seem impossible in war: those of love among men.

Another important aspect of this film is that we are able to distinguish Japanese customs and beliefs from those of the British. The British, as is seen later in the film, believe hari-kari to be a form of cowardice. Yet, the Japanese insist it is the noble way to die. It also becomes evident that the Japanese have stereotyped the British when a Japanese soldier asks Mr. Lawrence, "Is it true that all British men are homosexuals?" Although the director, Nagisa Oshima, does, in fact, supply a homosexual accent to this film, it is more important to see this movie as a reflection of traits applicable to man: the ability to develop friendships between captor and prisoner.

Tom Conti who is superb as the fellow British prisoner, Mr. Lawrence, is involved in several heartbreaking scenes with Sgt. O'Hara (Takeshi) who plays an often humane sergeant. In the final scene, Sgt. O'Hara is visited by Mr. Lawrence before he is about to be executed. This scene is not only touching, but leaves us with an encouraging belief that we often remain human, even during war.

This movie is not only worthwhile to David Bowie fans but for those concerned with the attitudes and emotions of man. "Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence" is a film that fulfills Bowie's lifelong ambition of working with director Oshima. It's a match that will hopefully team up again in the future.

Nobel Prize for Noble Work

In 1973, Australian writer Patrick White, 71, won the Nobel Prize for literature. The Solid Mandala is not his latest novel, however, it is in its fourth reprinting this year. It is a novel that clearly represents White's clever use of epigrams to tell a story about human relationships. Themes reveal the sharp contrasts of character in isolation versus communication, truth versus fakery, and idealism versus reality. The Solid Mandala is set in Australia. White uses the flashback technique to effectively reveal how the past is assimilated into one's present state of being. Through the blending of events and White's use of rich imagery, (almost) whole characters emerge, though flawed or disturbed as individuals they may be.

The protagonists of this novel are twins, Waldo and Arthur Brown. Neither one is a hero, and each is the antithesis of the other. Waldo is the indifferent intellect who isolates himself (mentally) from the world. Arthur is mentally retarded, loving, and not ignorant of the truths of life. Arthur calls his four marbles his "solid mandalas" because they are concrete symbols of strength, knowledge and security. Sympathy is felt for Arthur and disgust towards the self-centered Waldo. The twins represent the double nature of one's self: Good (simplicity) versus evil (complexity).

Each twin fails to communicate his feelings to the other; Arthur's attempts are vain because Waldo shuts him out or puts him down. Waldo is disgusted by Arthur because Arthur is such a "dill" and a "brother of whom nothing is expected." Waldo plans for the day when he is free of his parents and Arthur. Ironically, Arthur, in his naivete, is the free twin — free from suffering and discontent.

PATRICK WHITE THE SOLID MANDALA

Totality is the most prominent theme in The Solid Mandala. Neither of the twin's lives is whole. Arthur holds onto his marbles for security and Waldo has nothing but himself. However, they do have each other and they do live and depend on each other, no matter what Waldo says. The twins are elderly men in the 1960s who (in separate chapters) reflect upon their past childhood. Waldo's chapter is sardonic to the point of cruelty. But he is humanistic, and hateful because he was never understood nor favored by his parents.

Arthur's chapter is everything Waldo's wasn't. There is a vibrant atmosphere as Arthur dances the "mandala" for a neighbor, signifying his expression of the solidity of life. Arthur understands because he really looks at people and talks to them (going so far as to check out their cupboards). Arthur simultaneously reads The Brothers Karamazov (representing Waldo) and Alice in Wonderland (representing himself). Perhaps he doesn't understand it all, but Arthur certainly gets the gist of certain truths from these novels — they reflect the secrets and ambiguities of his own life.

The Solid Mandala is about the difficulties and the impossibility for most people to communicate with each other. Instead, it is easiest to repress one's involutions and shut up. Arthur keeps quiet only around his non-understanding family. Waldo is consistently indifferent to everyone he knows. For him, ephemeral relationships are not worth the trouble, and all relationships are ephemeral. Arthur's belief, and both twins are agnostic, is in the real truths that can be found through understanding.

The Solid Mandala is well worth reading; it is a combination of pleasure with fatality. White creatively displays the ideals, confusions and disdain directly from the minds of his characters.

Dining Out: Friday's is the Place to Eat Anyday of the Week

By MARY KIRLIN

If you like Houlihans, you will love T.G.I. Friday's. This popular art deco style is characteristic in many restaurants today other than Fridays, such as Houlihans and Winstons. The style is reminiscent of the early turn-of-the-century saloons, complete with stuffed mooseheads and goats mounted on the wall, and colorful tiffany lamps hung over red and white striped tables. The walls are decorated with ornate old-fashioned pictures of solemn-faced men and various other souvenirs line the walls. The decor is so real that you almost expect to see a singing barbershop quartet step out of the corner at any given moment.

The menu for both the beverages and the entrees is very large and divided into different sections, such as Mexican food, seafood, steak and sandwiches.

For a cocktail, I ordered a Brandy Alexander prepared with fresh vanilla ice cream and sprinkled with nutmeg. It was quite good. My companion chose a strawberry pina colada, which was made with fresh strawberries; however, the strawberries did overpower the taste of the coconut and pineapple.

For an appetizer, I chose the fried mozzarella. It is cut into strips, breaded and deep-fried. Served with Italian meat sauce and parmesan cheese, it reminded me of veal parmesan, without the veal.

The entrees were varied and there was something there for everyone. I finally settled on a Mexican dish of nacholupos, which is like a taco dish. It had all the taco ingredients, but was also served with refried beans, guacomole and hot peppers. It was spicy so it might be a good idea to have a glass of water nearby. My companion chose the chicken parmesan potato skin dinner and found it very good. The chicken was tender and the potato skins were crunchy. Friday's specializes in potato skins and has several different ways of preparing them, such as with chicken or shrimp. The entrees ranged from ($5.50 to $12). In all, I found it to be quite reasonable.

The one complaint that I would voice is that the drinks are expensive; the prices were not listed on the beverage menu.

I found Friday's to be a very cozy and interesting place to eat. The decor was very attractive and the food was well-prepared. Overall, it is not too expensive for a college student's budget and the nightlife is said to be an attractive meeting place for young people.

Friday's is located at 4000 City Line Avenue, across from the Marriott Hotel. There is ample parking available, and it is easily accessible from the Schuylkill Expressway or Lancaster and Haverford Avenues. Friday's does not accept reservations. It has a first-come, first-serve basis.

Wood's Last Film is a Disaster

By GARY R. DYER

When Natalie Wood died while filming "Brainstorm," the sci-fi thriller had to be completed by producer/director Douglas Trumbull with some changes because of the loss of the film's star. Now that "Brainstorm" is in the theaters, it's impossible not to speculate on how the movie was planned to be, because in its present form it is incomprehensible.

Christopher Walken and Natalie Wood star in the disappointing "Brainstorm."

The movie shows us an industrial research company where Dr. Lillian Reynolds (played by Louise Fletcher) and Dr. Michael Brace (Christopher Walken) invent a method of recording and transferring the total sensory experience of any event. Someone only needs to put on a little helmet and switch on a tape of, say, a roller-coaster ride, and he is as good as there. All the researchers find fun uses for this device, of course. The military also has hopes for it, and for a while we watch as Dr. Reynolds battles to avoid cooperating with them.

Next the film digresses to show Dr. Brace and his estranged wife, played by Natalie Wood, sharing memories by means of the helmet. But then the trouble begins. A fellow named Hal (after the computer in "2001?") plays the sex tape too much, and he has to go on leave. Dr. Reynolds dies of undramatically natural causes, making a tape of what dying is like. Michael Brace puts on a helmet, plays the tape, and begins to experience death. When a little of this fun puts Brace in the hospital, his frustrated boss puts the tape in a classified part of the lab and tells Brace to take a vacation. Brace had also discovered that his employers, as part of a project called "Brainstorm," is keeping tapes of psychotic episodes for undoubtedly nasty purposes. "Brainstorm" clearly (but not clearly) has the support of the generals who see much potential here. So, Brace and his wife try to sabotage the dangerous research and give Brace access to the remainder of the death-tape.

If one is not sure as to what the plot is, not to worry. The story zips back and forth until at film's conclusion one wonders if the end applies to something in a reel the projectionist skipped.

Natalie Wood's character is on the periphery of the story; Brace's desire to play Reynold's death-tape is not portrayed believably; and the death hallucinations which take Brace (and us) to the Andromeda galaxy look like effects dropped from "2001: A Space Odyssey" for which Trumbull supervised the special effects.

While nothing in "Brainstorm" is laughable, and many elements are at least well-crafted, the film falls apart in the dramatic basics, until the climax degenerates into a mixture of slapstick and gee-whiz effects. The premise of this film has the promise of suspense, but the story-line never fulfills this promise. The characters are not worth caring about.

It would be cruel to go on, as the death of Wood forced Trumbull to finish the movie in merely the best way possible, using this feeble plotting. Probably the only interest of "Brainstorm" lies in speculating on how the story was supposed to be (I can't figure it out). A forgettable film, "Brainstorm" will only be remembered for being Natalie Wood's last movie.

"The Miracle Worker" will run Oct. 12 through 15 and Wednesday, Oct. 19 and 22. All performances begin at 8 p.m. in the Vasey Theatre on the Villanova campus. Tickets are $5 on Wednesdays and Thursdays and $6 on Fridays and Saturdays, with student and senior citizen discounts available. Free parking is located directly across from the theatre on Lancaster Avenue. For tickets and information, call the box office at 645-7474 or the theatre office at 645-4760.

"Speaking in Tongues" Not a Foreign Language

By T.C. BIGGINS

Although the Talking Heads' latest release, "Speaking in Tongues," was released this summer, it will be influencing the direction of pop music for a long time to come and should be reviewed, talked about, and listened to as much as possible. Breaking down the barriers and fence-straddling white and black music, the Heads have produced a curious mix of contemporary black dance music (currently called Hi-Hop), white pop, reggae, elements of African Call and Response, and their own brand of new wave dance that for all it's quickness, molds the other styles they employ into distinct and well-crafted songs.

The Heads, this time out, are extolling the virtues of modern American pop with the great American melting-pot tradition strongly to the fore. Indeed, the most interesting aspect of "Speaking in Tongues" is that it is truly American record. Impervious to British fads and fashions (which are currently dominating the pop charts) and re-structuring new wave's tatic of stripped-down instrumentation, the Heads strike a balance in music that is both groove-fluid and a touch eccentric, without sacrificing any of their pop sensibilities. To these ears, the Heads (along with the Police's minimalist tour-de-force" Syncronicity) have not only expounded on their previous efforts, but digestd new influences to the point that each album they make is a compelling new experience for both the band and the listener.

The album's strong suits lie in the economical production and the group compositions which help to create the band's most lighthearted and radiant dance music to date. And dancing is the name of the game here. Unlike most dance music around today, with its present rhythms, endless synthesizer riffing, and self-indulgent attitudes, this dance music is also very listenable for the non-dancer. Mainly due to the subtle interplay between guitar and synth, the listener who is not jumping up and down and getting all sweaty, never gets bored.

Most of the songs are between four and five minutes long and, like the Rick James-type vamp of "Making Flippy Floppy," have excellent instrumental breaks. In fact, two of the album's highlights are L. Shankar's violin work on "Making Flippy Floppy" and Bernie Worrell's incredible synth lines on "Girlfriend is Better." "I Get Wild" is probably the best blend of reggae and new wave ever to be cut on vinyl. And both "Pull up the Roots" and "Moon Rocks" are sure to be hits on the dance floor. Knee-deep in funk, the band gets exactly what they're after with those two. The line is not so finely drawn when it comes to the lyrics, though. Running the gambit from spiritual to total nonsense, one cannot be sure of any exact meaning at all. Along with the hit single, "Burning Down the House," about seven of these nine songs should definitely be on the radio. Unfortunately, outside of a handful of college and black radio stations, they won't.

So "Speaking in Tongues" is very much a group project (all songs haveing been written by the entire group), and they come across as a very human band who continue to redefine both their music and themselves as a unit. If you can't get behind "Speaking in Tongues," it might just be about time to re-examine your musical values if you want to survive the rest of the '80s.

Eastern Becomes Booters First Victim

Soccer Slump Over; Cats Win 1-0

By JOHN WIBBELSMAN

Last Friday night, the men's soccer team played host to about ten spectators in light, misty rain at Villanova Stadium. The Cats fell victim to a powerful Spring Garden team, losing 6-0. Goalies Paul Neugebauer and Brendan Quinn combined for a total of six saves and six goals against, while Villanova's record dropped to 1-6.

Soccer coach Howard Graff said, "The team had over 25 shots on goal and scored none, while Spring Garden took five shots and netted five goals. The problem has and still is, that there is not enough punch up front. Also, it takes time to develop as we are still suffering from the loss of seven starters from last year's team."

In earlier action last week, the booters chalked up their first victory, defeating Eastern College one to nil. Sophomore Steve Maillard provided the single, necessary goal as Wildcats' goalie John Grendi played an outstanding game, recording 18 saves and his first shutout of the season.

Sophomore Mike McCormick said of the game, "What we lack most is the ability to play together as a team. We have the talent — the problem has been putting the talent together on the field."

Coach Graff said, "I look back positively at the Eastern game because it was our first win."

The Wildcats hope to place another mark in the win column because by the time this issue is hot off the press, the squad will have played Philadelphia Soccer Seven opponent Temple University on Wednesday, Oct. 5. Early this week, Coach Graff mentioned that, "Temple is highly rated and undefeated at this point. I think it will be a good game — a close game."

Tomorrow, during Parents' Weekend, the team plays Rutgers-Camden at 1 p.m. Coach Graff remarked, "Quite a few changes have taken place in the line-up, hopefully to strengthen the team in its weaker areas. We hope to add some punch up front by scoring more goals thus eliminating a lot of pressure put on the defense. The spirit is there for us to win. The players have been working hard all week and we hope to start a winning streak."

Nova is almost halfway through the season with ten regular season games to go. Midway through November the team will play in the Big East Tourney.

Brennan's Seven Goals Propel Women Twice

Wildcat Annie Kempf displays the kind of footwork which has kept the Villanova women on the winning track.

By SUZANNE ONNEMBO

The Villanova women's soccer team continued its winning streak, defeating the University of Pennsylvania on Thursday, 9-1, and Manhattanville College on Sunday by a 3-0 score.

The Quakers were never in the game as the Cats dominated all over the field. Annie Kemp, with four assists, and Lisa Morgan with one, showed their superior skills at midfield by feeding Villanova's powerful forward line.

The Cats' scoring machines, Ann Brennan, Cathy Ford and Kathy Kolon, proved that the Quakers' defense was no match for them. Freshman superstar Brennan scored five goals to set a new school record. Brennan's scoring counterparts, Ford and Kolon, each contributed two goals for the Cats. Senior captain Denise Finn was also credited with an assist.

The net was shared by Sue Onnembo and Kathy Kane. The opponents only goal came in the first period on a penalty kick. Kane was sharp in goal, shutting out the Quakers in the second half. Defensive sweeper Paula Skinkis worked well with Kane and contributed to the defensive stronghold.

Coach Lee Stevens was pleased with the performance of the team. He knew however, that the squad would be put to the test against an always tough Manhattanville College.

Villanova dominated and came away with a 3-0 victory. Onnembo was impressive in goal, making nine saves and picking up the tenth shutout of her Villanova career. She received strong support from defensive backs Katie Graney, Patty Woods and Mary Schanne.

The Villanova offensive attack was strong but was unable to score in the first half. Nova came back in the second half, completely outplaying the opponent. The eventual score on a rebound from a penalty kick by Ford came as no surprise. Brennan showed that her previous performance was no fluke as she put in two goals.

Coach Stevens is feeling optimistic about the rest of the season. The women booters have outscored their opponents, 22 to 2 in the past three games.

Intramural Football Round-Up

By JOE BAGLEY

The Intramural Football League has swung into action and already two teams are beginning to stand out. The Moon Unit, the reigning champion, defeated the Psycho Squad, 16-0 and The Football Team, 14-6. The Moon Unit has a +24 point differential against its opponents. With each squad playing only eight games, the point differential will prove to be a very prominent figure when the playoffs begin. The Wallbangers possess the best differential at plus 72. Pi Kappa Phi leads the fraternity league with a 2-0 record, besting its opponents by a comfortable 26 points.

In the women's league, the Mighty Mates are current leaders with a 3-0 record over the 2-0 Beavers and the 2-0 TKD squad.

Intramural football action got into full swing all over campus last week.

Ann Brennan

When someone breaks a school record, that person is special. If that person is also a freshman and breaks a record, she is rare. Ann Brennan is that rare person.

A highly touted athlete from St. Hubert's High School in Philadelphia, Brennan broke Villanova's single-game scoring record in soccer with an amazing five-goal performance against the University of Pennsylvania. The five goals led the Cats to a 9-1 blowout of the Quakers. Brennan leads the team in scoring with eight goals, scoring one against Swarthmore (10-1 Wildcat victory) and two at Manhattanville (3-0 Villanova win). The women's soccer team is now 3-4 and every game in which Brennan has scored, Villanova has won.

Ann was a four-year starter and a four-year captain at St. Hubert's, for which she was honored by having her soccer jersey retired. Ann has played in all seven games so far this season and she seems destined to be a four-year starter here at Villanova, too.

Alumni Voices Speak on Football

(Advertisement)

"As immediate past President, and in ongoing contacts with New York-Connecticut alumni and friends of Villanova, there is no question that a very strong feeling exists for restoring football at, may I add, the IAA level."

Immediate Past President, General Alumni Association: Ed Riley, '43

"The Delaware County Club wholeheartedly supports the restoration of football at the 1AA level."

Delaware County Club President: John Yannacone, '58

"Two-hundred members emphatically want 1AA, and nothing else is acceptable. Neither Mrs. Heffernan nor I are going to Parents' Weekend."

Lehigh Valley Club President: James H. Heffernan, '56

"Football is the very strong issue at every club meeting. There is no disagreement among the membership. Restore football, or Villanova will continue a lost reputation and credibility in the midwest."

Detroit Club President: Daniel Ramsey, '59

"The overwhelming majority of the Chicago alumni certainly want the sport back."

Chicago Club President: Edward T. Doyle, '66

"There is very strong feeling among the South Jersey alumni in favor of restoring football at an appropriate level. We would like to see the sport returned because of its great rallying effect among students and alumni."

South Jersey Club President: Vince Bresan, '57

On behalf of the Board of Governors of the Varsity Club and the 1200 active members, please accept this as a continued endorsement for the return of 1-AA football at Villanova. Villanova is more than a game and is more than a balance sheet. The Varsity Club endorses the new attitude, new program, and new finances as outlined by Father McCarthy's Board of Trustees committee. Let's not have any more empty feelings on those beautiful fall Saturdays.

Charles Johnson '63
President of the
Villanova Varsity Club

Enough! Enough! Restore 1-AA football and make our Villanova family one again. It is without reason that we are not associated with Harvard, Army, Princeton, Lafayette, etc. The Villanova Financial Club pledges its financial and physical support to I-AA football.

George Piper '67
President of the
Villanova Financial Club

"The Board was quick to cancel football. When one considers the ensuing massive support of the students and alumni for its return, and the intrinsic value of national media exposure by way of having the game, the University seems to be dragging its feet in doing what it ought to do."

Rochester, New York Club President: William Norton, '72

"Obviously, it (football) has to come back; there's so much feeling in the alumni and the administration, but, philosophically, the alumni cannot be ignored."

Bucks County President Priscilla C. ("Pat") Swartz:

The Western Pennsylvania Alumni Club fully appreciates the tangible and intangible value of a 1-AA football program at an institution of Villanova's caliber. We, as an alumni club, sincerely hope that the Board of Trustees will recognize the concept of a complete Villanova.

John Elash, Esq. '72
President of the Western Pennsylvania Club

I am encouraged by the Board of Trustees' openmindedness during the past twelve months while defining a viable football program for Villanova University. Looking forward to continuing the 88th football season.

James W. Eastwood '68
Second Vice President of the Villanova General Alumni Association

Whatever the reason for the original decision, there is simply no valid basis upon which to oppose the Trustees Committee's decision in implementing 1-AA football. Let's get our family back together and concentrate our energies upon other mutually enriching programs.

Francis Dunne, Esq. '64
President Elect of the Executive Committee of the General
Alumni Association

Football was a fine tradition for alumni to gather and greet not only their friends but undergraduates as well. Over the past 29 months, I have witnessed a decline in our active alumni members. Football is an excellent rallying point for all involved. Our fraternity supports the return of the 1-AA football to Villanova.

Gary Olson '74
President of
Zeta Rho Fraternity

Obviously, there is something absent in North Carolina; that is, the ability to follow Villanova football in the fall. Our members always looked forward to returning for Homecoming and now there is no centerpiece to come back to. We have not had a trip to the University since football was dropped.

Gerald Billings '59
President of the
Villanova Club
of North Carolina

"The Houston grads all want football back at no lower than level 1-AA."

Houston, Texas Club President Don Caivano '64:

I am very excited about the new conference's academics. It is right and proper that we are associated with William and Mary and schools of similar priorities. The Atlanta Club enthusiastically pledges its support for the restoration of 1-AA football.

Thomas Shugrue '69
President of the
Villanova Club of Atlanta

California alumni were very disappointed when football was dropped. The last homecoming tailgate reception (Boston College) was attended by 75 alumni for a radio hook-up. The sunny state of California supports the return of I-AA football.

Michael Connolly '74
President of the Southern California Club

The club feels that 1-AA is the lowest level at which a game should be restored.

Lou DePaul '75
President of the Philadelphia Alumni Club

Anyone who knows that football was dropped for no good reason is in full support of the 1-AA proposal. Let's restore football to 1-AA and put an end to the nonsense and diverseness, and thus enable us to have our first homecoming since 1980.

Eugene Karwoski '72
the Stanford Club

Business has led to extensive travel these past few years enabling me to frequent the east and west coasts. As a result, I have had the extreme pleasure of meeting many Villanova alumni. And as I am sure you can imagine, the first question brought to my attention concerns the restoration of football to Villanova. Although my responses have been nothing less than positive, I feel its time that the Villanova family receives an honest answer to this lingering question. The San Francisco Club, for our part, supports the return of football as a beginning of improved University/Alumni relations.

Robert Keenan '69
President of the San Francisco
Alumni Club

I think it's time for Father Driscoll and the trustees to put football in place at the 1-AA level.

Henry Berling '65
President of the
Richmond Alumni Club

What in the world are they waiting for? The kids want it, the alumni want it. Both have put their money where their mouths are. The new (Colonial) league awaits our return to football; and, as a member-to-be in that league, TV money and bowl money await as additional potential income. Restoration is a great opportunity for Villanova University.

Ed Lynam
President of the Maryland Alumni Club

Everyone up here is really, really strong on getting 1-AA football for Villanova. Some of our people have said that they wouldn't encourage their kids to attend Villanova. Sooner or later, this is going to catch up with the administration, Believe it. Villanova is no longer the place it was — and that's bad news for Villanova University.

John Egan '68
President of the Northeastern Pennsylvania
Alumni Club

I was born and raised on the Main Line, and I was too young to remember when my dad took me to my first Villanova football game. From that time until the end of the '80 season, I never missed a home game. How does dropping football make me feel? How about like the loss of a dear friend! But there's hope for football — a resurrection through restoration!

Jeff Heilmann '82
President of the
Main Line Alumni Club

This has been a divisive issue too long. The special committee appointed by the University's trustees represented all the major constituents of the University and acted in good faith to develop a proposal which met all of the criteria set forth by the board in its charge to the committee to define an intercollegiate football program at Villanova University. I am confident that if the Board of Trustees reviews the proposal submitted by its own special committee in light of those criteria, they will act positively to restore Villanova football at the 1-AA level.

Don Creamer '70
2nd Vice President
Villanova General
Alumni Association

The San Diego alumni follow with profound interest the developments of the philosophical question regarding varsity football. We support the Alumni Association in its desire to have Division 1-AA football restored on campus. Looking forward to homecoming '84 and a reason to come back.

Ron Cosgrove '64
President
San Diego Club

Holy Cross, Colgate . . . they are who we should have been playing and who we want to play next year. Give the Albany alumni a chance to get back out and share one another's experiences with the undergraduates.

Spike Dinneen '59
President
Capital District (Albany)

Sentiment among club members is that Villanova football is really missed. Coverage that Boston College and Holy Cross have received this year is a strong and unfortunate reminder of what VILLANOVA is missing. Because Boston College and Holy Cross are so visible and prominent, there has been a real empty feeling this year. Time between decision to drop football and now has served as a constant reminder of the terrible mistake or judgment error that was made by the University. The Boston Club supports the restoration of a sadly missed VILLANOVA tradition.

Thad Behm '76 — President,
Boston Alumni Club

The North Jersey Club, representing some 3,500 proud alumni, supports and favors the restoration of Villanova football. Gains which the University has made (improved/enlarged intramural facilities, etc.) as a result of the discontinuation of football have come at a cost far too great. These gains could have been achieved even with the continuation of football. North Jersey alumni very much miss the thrill of homecoming and Villanova's annual encounter with Rutgers. The return of football cannot occur too rapidly.

Robert Byrnes '76 — President,
North Jersey Alumni Club

Great universities are usually great because they are able to provide for all segments of their families. Great universities, like great people, have capacities to carry them beyond the normal sequence of abilities. Villanova University, in order to maintain and develop its own special greatness, should be receptive to thoughts and concepts presented by its students and its graduates. Restoration of a great tradition will ensure Villanova's continued covenant with its family.

Frank B. Rodgers '36 — President, General Alumni Association

The camaraderie experienced before, during and after the games made football a unique experience not rivalled by any other event on campus. Joing the new (Colonial) League with Colgate, Holy Cross, Lehigh, William and Mary, Bucknell and Lafayette will create fan interest, and associating with these fine schools will enhance our academic image.

Louis Kahl '55, Kevin Reilly '73 — Co-Presidents, Diamond State Alumni Club (Delaware)

The feedback I get here is that since football was dropped, a big gap in interest has occurred throughout our area. I will withhold contributions. An alumnus in this club area who previously gave $10,000 says he hasn't the heart to give money to such a bad scene. Our club has voted to send a bus-load of season ticket holders when restoration comes. And we would support 1-AA, but no lower level.

John E. Whalen '64 — President, Lancaster-York Alumni Club

"By all means, do it; it's taken away homecoming."

Middle Hudson Valley (N.Y.) President Robert Palmer:

"The overwhelming majority of the Villanova Club of West Chester supports the restoration of football at the 1-AA level."

West Chester County (N.Y.) President Ed Riley, Jr. '80:

"Villanovans here are disappointed that an integral part of college life has been discontinued. Our interest has waned as a result. Restoration will help that."

Ohio Club President Pat Murphy Esq. '71:

"The rank and file of the St. Louis Club, comprising a cross section of men and women of all age groups is unanimously in favor of restoring football at the 1-AA level."

St. Louis, Missouri Club President Bill Banmiller '64

"Let me say that the first thing I will do after football is restored at 1-AA is to double my annual contribution."

New Mexico Club President Harry Ware '51:

"The majority of Dallas club members support the reinstatement of football at an NCAA level."

Dallas, Texas Club President Robert Moss, Ph.D. '62:

"The officers of the Villanova Club of Washington, D.C. support the establishment of a viable football program at our University."

Washington, D.C. Club President Zachary J. Pappadeas, Esq. '75:

"I have met with Tidewater area Villanovans in the past week, and they are unanimous that football, misisng from the Villanova campus, is needed badly to renew the spirit of "family" that once existed."

Tidewater, Virginia Club President Kevin Shea, Esq. '64:

"Good fellowship was always the word of the day at Villanova football games. Now that certain weaknesses in the program have been identified by the administration and the alumni, restoration at the 1-AA level with solid business backing will assure football's success in every aspect."

Top Cat President Jim Bannon '27

"I believe there is a grassroots movement to restore football. Even at this distance from the campus, we miss the sport, if only to read about Villanova in the Sunday sports page . . . There are new circumstances i.e. students and alumni pledging to financially support the team directly. Therefore, the situation before the sport was dropped is replaced with the sound logic of today's fact which is "restore." The Board's credibility would be seriously impaired if a decision is not made based on this sound logical reasoning."

Tennis Takes Off, Now 7-1

By JUDY ROWELS

The progress of the Villanova women's tennis team started this season with has not flagged at all, which can be seen from its current record of seven wins and only one loss.

In an interview earlier this week, Coach Robert Langran commented that "The team did well, considering that we played our last three matches without our number one player, Luba Matkiwsky, and our last match without our number three player, Trish Stairiker."

On Sept. 26, Villanova fell to Lehigh 5-4, for its only defeat this season. The two teams split the singles matches, each winning three. Zenia Matkiwsky, Stairiker and Abigail Burke won for Nova at first, second and fourth respectively. The team was only able to take one doubles with the team of Cynthia and Abigail Burke winning at second. "The match was decided when Lehigh won the number 1 doubles, 6-4, in the third," Coach Langran said.

The Cats made an easy sweep over Rider on Sept. 27 by a score of 9-0. Coach Langran said he could sympathize with Rider because they are a newly-formed team.

The team won a very exciting match against Swarthmore at home on Sept. 29 by 5-4. The Cats won only two of the six singles matches, and they were captured by Zenia and Abigail. In order to win the match, the Cats had to sweep all three doubles, which they succeeded in doing. Zenia and Cynthia won at first, Abigail Burke and Tracy Brewer won at second, and two freshmen, Julie Spinnler and Sharon Kelly, won at third.

"It was the first time I know of the women's or men's team coming from behind to sweep the doubles. It was very exciting," commented Coach Langran.

When asked to comment on the team as a whole, Coach Langran replied, "We are blessed with some very good players. Not only are they talented, but it's a veteran team; four of the six starters are seniors, and their experience is helpful. Next year is going to be a rebuilding year for us."

Coach Langran said the team's aspirations for this season are "to come up with the best win/loss record they can and to do well in the Big East Tournament on Oct. 21-23."

Lacrosse Wins Crown

By BILL BUTTLING

The men's lacrosse team, led by the play of goalie Drew Cunningham, shocked perennial power Penn State and walked away champions of the Penn State Fall Lacrosse Tournament last Sunday. Cunningham received the game ball for his performance in the final against Penn State.

Coach Randy Marks cited the outstanding defensive trio of senior Larry DelGatto and freshmen Mike Corrado and Dave Villano, along with the hustle of middies Jody DeChirico, Paul Campanelli and Rip Ruopoli. Despite playing short three starters, the Cats took home a 5-4 victory, their first ever against the Nittany Lions.

The Cats' next opponent is the Eagle's Eye Lacrosse Club on Oct. 9 at the Stadium. Game time is 1:30 p.m.

OCT. 5! The birthday of Craig Miller, a Villanovan staffer and part-time SID. Born in Michigan, Miller's lifelong dream was to move to the East and invent the "shots altered" category in basketball statistics but he was beaten to the punch by his Georgetown rival. He's currently working on a new stat, "shooting percentage as affected by a player's zodiac sign."

Volleyball in Big East

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

This past weekend the Villanova women's volleyball team traveled to Seton Hall to compete in the Southern Division of The Big East Volleyball Tournament. The Cats completed the weekend with one win and two losses.

In its first match against Pittsburgh, Villanova lost the three games by scores of 12-15, 6-15 and 3-15. Their second match was against Georgetown and this match, too, ended in a loss. The Hoyas defeated the Cats by scores of 4-15, 4-15 and 6-15.

However, the Cats were not discouraged. In their third and final match against Seton Hall they came on strong to win the first game by a score of 15-6, but the Pirates came right back with a hard-fought 17-15 victory. However, Villanova rallied to pull in a 15-12 win, thus making the Cats showing for the series one win and two losses. Nova's overall record is now 5-6.

Women's Cross Country Grabs 2nd at Rutgers

By JANE ASHTON

Strong performances continue to pour in, or across the finish line, for the Villanova women harriers. This weekend at the highly competitive Rutgers-Adidas Invitational in Piscataway, N.J., the team took second place overall, paced by junior Mary Ellen McGowan's second-place finish.

Running on a 5000-meter course, Villanova had eight finishers under the 19-minute mark, a feat that only two Wildcat women (including McGowan) had accomplished in previous years. Rutgers' Desiree Scott, the eventual winner, and McGowan ran together for most of the race, with Scott pulling away to a 17:35 victory only at the end. McGowan ran 17:41, junior Jane Ashton took 12th with 18:09, and the "fleet freshmen" pack of Melissa Grubb (18:11), Colleen Gallagher (18:16) and Lauren Searby (18:17) finished 13th, 17th and 18th to round out Nova's team score at 62 points. In the final tally, they trailed the Penn State Lions by a scant six points. Boston University was a distant third with 105 points.

Also under 19-minutes were senior Patty Bradley (18:38), sophomore Vickie Brown (18:58) and freshman Katy Redden (18:42) who had recorded her time in the earlier 'B' division race where she finished second.

Said Coach Bob Shoudt of the team's performance, "As a team, our improvement continues, as is evidenced by the fact that two years ago we finished seventh at Rutgers, last year we were sixth, and this year we finished second."

He also remarked on the improvement shown by individuals this year: "The individual gains made have been obvious, but everything we've been doing has been hard and very intense. We're doing pretty much the same workouts as before, but now we're doing them with a whole group of people who can stick together. No one's hanging back in the workouts, and we're working as a unit."

Next week the Wildcats will join the men's team at Lehigh University for the Paul Short Memorial Invitational. The 5000-meter course will also be the site of both the NCAA Regional Qualifying Meet on Nov. 12 and the NCAA National Championships on Nov. 21.

Long Live The Czar

By LARRY GOANOS

Do you know what the problem with the world of sports is today? There's no central authority figure to rule over all sports and correct the injustices which run rampant. Oh sure, each of the professional leagues has its own commissioner with his limited scope of power, but that's not what I mean. I'm talking about one guy whose jurisdiction transcends league boundaries. I'm talking about one man who could rule all sports, both professional and amateur, on an international level. I'm talking about the Undisputed Czar of Sports.

Realizing that at present nobody holds this weighty title, I'm making public my bid for the position. Of course I don't expect to be elected to this office without revealing my platform, so I've prepared a brief list of some of my intended actions once I come to power:

When I become the Undisputed Czar of Sports I'm going to drastically reduce the playoff structure of the N.B.A. and the N.H.L. so that they'll no longer have more berths than the Queen Mary.

Editor's Angle

When I become the Undisputed Czar of Sports I'm going to make Moses Malone a separate entry in the N.B.A.

When I become the Undisputed Czar of Sports I'm going to kick Seton Hall (and its one conference victory in the last two years) so far out of the Big East that footage of their home games will be sent back to Earth by Voyager II.

When I become the Undisputed Czar of Sports I'm going to make Nebraska's football team win a game by less than 60 points just to teach them some humility. And I'm going to force them to recruit at least one lineman who has a neck that doesn't look like it should be supporting long distance telephone lines.

When I become the Undisputed Czar of Sports I'm going to give the Australians one week to return our Cup to us, no questions asked.

When I become the Undisputed Czar of Sports I'm going to administer a polygraph test to every living pro wrestler and make them each swear they've never lost a Texas Death Match. Those who have will be branded as phonies and subjected to five excruciating Atomic Elbow Smashes. I have no tolerance for cheaters in pro wrestling.

When I become the Undisputed Czar of Sports I'm going to disband the WBA and the WBC and form one recognized organization to run the sport. This will eliminate the multitude of divisions (light featherweight, heavy light heavyweight etc.) which now makes it possible for one boxer to simultaneously hold more titles than the New York Public Library.

Well I guess you get the picture by now. If my platform seems a bit harsh it's only because I feel that we need an iron-handed ruler in these turbulent times. So remember, on Election Day '83 vote column one for the Czar who cares.

Field Hockey Falls Short

By BOB HELLER

Villanova's field hockey team turned in a fine performance against the Lady Rams of Textile on Monday, but were unable to produce a victory as they succumbed to the Rams by the score of 1-0. The loss was the Wildcats fifth of the year against only one win.

Villanova controlled the ball for most of the first five minutes of play and then went back on defense as Textile gained possession. Neither team had many offensive threats during the entire first half. Statistically, Nova was outshot 7-5 but their excellent defense kept Textile from scoring.

Neither team produced a goal in the second half as Nova outshot the Lady Rams 4-1 and the game went into overtime.

The first overtime produced only three shots on goal, two by the Wildcats, but none went into the net. During the second overtime, Textile put a shot past the Nova goalie at 4:20 to make the score 1-0. Nova was unable to rally to tie and the game went into the record books as a 1-0 loss.

Two days earlier the Wildcats traveled to Lafayette to take on the Leopards of Lafayette College. A defensive lapse by the Wildcats ten minutes into the first period produced the only goal of the game as Lafayette won 1-0.

In earlier hockey action, the Wildcats took on fourth-ranked Bloomsburg on the astro-turf at Villanova. The Wildcats played an excellent game during the first half as Nova goalie Sue Ruff stopped five Bloomsburg shots, keeping the score knotted at 0-0.

The second half saw more of the same style of play. Nova's defense was playing superbly as Bloomsburg was unable to put the ball in the net. However, Bloomsburg's defense was just as good, holding the Cats to just one shot and the game went into overtime.

In field hockey two overtimes are played. If one team is tied at the end of both overtimes the game remains as a tie. Two overtimes were necessary against Bloomsburg. Both overtime periods were played in midfield as neither team threatened to score. The game remained tied at 0-0. Nova's record was then 1-3-2.

Villanova's field hockey team will play their next two games at home next week. They take on Rosatra on Wednesday and fifth ranked C.W. Post on Friday.

Villanova's Danine DiBernardi shows the defense which has kept Nova competitive all season.

Field Hockey: The Building of a Program

...the past two years, the pro...n has gone through a rebirth ...orts; once stuck in the depths ...Division II, it is now surfacing ...he top of the competition there ...is preparing to burst onto the ...ision I scene in 1985-86.

...Why the sudden turnabout for a ...n that went 3-9-3 in 1981 and ...t is now keeping pace with ...k Havens, Kutztowns and ...omsburgs of the Division II ...k?

...or one thing, you have to look ...he attention that women's at...ics in general has been receiv...in recent years at this school. ...ording to a report published in ...week's Villanovan, "the total amount of money spent in 1974-75 on women's sports was $41,743. For 1981-82 that figure was $447,008."

Field hockey, indeed, has benefitted from the increased funding in this area. "In the past five years, the financial considerations, specifically in field hockey, have ...[illegible]...ly," says Mary Anne Steenrod, the coordinator for women's athletics at Villanova. "That is a reflection certainly of the Athletic Department but mainly of Villanova University and the support of women's athletics in general."

Without revealing an exact figure, Steenrod also noted that "there has been a large increase in the number of scholarships available in women's field hockey."

But finances were not alone in shaping the course of field hockey at Villanova. Until the summer of 1982, field hockey and all other women's sports teams here had competed under the auspices of the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW). On June 30 of that year, the AIAW ceased operations. Villanova had to make a change.

In making the ensuing switch to the NCAA, Villanova was forced to move all of its teams to Division I. (Unlike the AIAW, the NCAA requires selection of division by program, not sport). But, according to the rules, one team could remain at a lower division, and field hockey was Steenrod's choice.

"The reason I kept field hockey Division II was that it had just started to grow. They had been one of the teams that wasn't going as quickly as the others. The money was there, but there was also a lack of recruiting skills going back nearly five years that slowed the development. To have put field hockey into Division I at the time would have killed the kids and the program."

Shortly thereafter, Diane Moyer took over the coaching reins. And it has been Moyer, according to Steenrod, who has made possible the resurgence of field hockey at Villanova.

Back in 1982, Moyer actually had to choose between coaching positions here and at La Salle, her alma mater. She says she chose this University because "I knew Villanova had a really good program and had the potential to have an excellent program."

"They were always consistent each year, never getting any better," she recalls. "The athletes were fine and they were going to get by on the schedule they had.

"But Villanova seems to have a lot more class and ability to do better, to bring in the top recruits in high school and start making it one of the best Division II schools in the country."

Diane Moyer Dave Coskey Photo

"One of the most important ingredients in this growth is Diane Moyer. She's certainly one of the most knowledgeable coaches on the East Coast."
— Mary Anne Steenrod

The top recruits? Moyer got them.

"She had one of the most successful recruiting years of any of the coaches on campus," Steenrod remarks. "I am quite sure that when Diane Moyer goes out to recruit a high school senior and that senior is talking to the 1984 Olympic goalie, the kid is going to listen.

"But unless you can back that up with personality, it's not going to work. And she certainly has that on her side."

Moyer's top recruit was Sue Ruff, a goalie from Bellmawr, N.J. "I probably got the best goalie in the country (in Ruff)," Moyer relates. "She was being recruited by the top Division I national champion teams."

"But, just because you get the athletes in doesn't mean we're going to be great. It takes some time for them to get used to how I coach, to learn to play with each other and to become intense."

If one thing is already intense, it is the team's schedule. Within the last two weeks the Wildcats played Lock Haven (3-1 loss), Bloomsburg (0-0) and Kutztown (3-1 loss).

"It's probably the strongest schedule Villanova field hockey has ever seen," Moyer says. "It's going to make us a better team because we're going to see them again. We need to play like them, with their amount of intensity and their strength, to know what we have to do.

"I would not have made the schedule the way it is if I knew the team could not keep up with it."

To get the Lock Havens on the schedule in the first place, Moyer must go through the athletic department. "If I say I want to play somebody, Mary Anne Steenrod backs me 100 percent.

"When you come down to it," Moyer says, "that's really why I came to Villanova. They (the Athletic Department) had a lot of the same philosophies that I did. They wanted the program to go someplace. They wanted somebody with the enthusiasm and the attitude to help the girls to become the best they could be. And that is just what I want to do."

Cats Take Another Fourth Period Thriller

By PETER J. RYAN

The Wildcat football team clinched their third win of the season on a last second field goal over the University of Richmond. The final score was 17-14. The Cats have recovered well after their 31-0 disaster at the hands of the Clemson Tigers.

There is a difference, however, as Coach Bedesem points out; "Clemson and Richmond are two different teams — Clemson has an excellent program and some of the best athletes in the south. They play national contenders (as do Richmond) and their coaching staff is excellent. Put that all together with their attendance records (over 45,000 against Villanova) and you have a winning organization."

Richmond Spiders came to Villanova with a record of 1-4 riding on the heels of a 51-28 rout over the University of Cincinnati. Offensively the Spiders boasted a solid running attack which featured tailback Jesse Williams and on defense the free safety Jeff Nixon.

Williams took the opening kickoff and ran the length of the field for the score, zig-zagging his way through a stunned Wildcat defensive team. Steve Adams made it 7-0 with the conversion fifteen seconds into the game.

The Cats came right back as cornerback Dave Martin blocked a Richmond punt that teammate Joe Pusch scooped up at the 14 yard line and ran in for the score. A Chuck Bushbeck conversion knotted the score at seven to end the quarter.

Richmond took the lead at halftime as Greg Gregory hit flanker Ken Twoody on a 36 yard pass play with :40 remaining to lead 14-7. That play and the preceding 45 yard gain by Williams on a reverse trap were the only lapses by the Wildcat defense during the entire game.

The score remained the same until Villanova defensive end Don Brooks picked off a pass and give the Cats the ball on the Spider 25 yard line. Hard running by senior fullback Vince Thompson (90 yards in 21 carries) and quarterback Pat O'Brien set up a Shawn Pasaman touchdown from two yards out. Another boot from freshmen Bushbeck deadlocked the teams.

The Cat's iced it with a heart-stopping 33 yard field goal by Bushbeck with one second remaining after O'Brien directed the offense from midfield with 2:43 remaining. Receptions by Greg Bedesem and Thompson accounted for this successful drive.

The real stories for the Wildcats were their exceptional defense, allowing 66 yards rushing and 7 yards passing in the second half and Vince Thompson's invaluable performance in the backfield rushing receiving and clearing the way for other runners. Said Coach Bedesem; "Vince is an integral part of our offense . . . he bailed us out by breaking tackles."

All of these talents will be needed when the Cats take on Colgate in the two teams first series meeting tomorrow in the annual Villanova "Homecoming Game." The Red Raiders are a deceptive 0-4 thus far after posting a 10-1 mark last season. They also hold the distinction of being the nation's number one offensive team. Fullback Angelo Colosimo and halfback Jim Comforti provide most of the ground attack while junior John Marzo calls the signals in their Wing-T offense that has scored big points.

On defense the Red Raiders will counter the Cat Wishbone with an intricate 4-4, Multiple alignment. Warns Coach Bedesem, "This is the type of offense that can explode on you . . . we will try to continue with the momentum from the Richmond game and work with the offense."

Notes: Coach Bedesem on the Richmond game: "I don't remember a game where I've had to make more crucial calls."

Attendance was the poorest of the year as the gates accounted for only 5,800 people as opposed to 9,000 for the William and Mary game.

Sophomore nose guard Howie Long echoed Bedesem's feelings on the defensive effort by stating: "The defense played together for the first time and we hit people."

"Villanova Day" at Temple Game

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

A "Villanova Day" at Franklin Field has been planned in conjunction with tomorrow night's Temple-East Carolina football game.

"We're planning a free tailgate party before the game at 34th and Chestnut Streets," explained Dominic Toscani, a partner in the Paris Business Forms, Inc. and sponsor of "Villanova Day."

Toscani purchased and distributed over 3,000 tickets to interested people. A financial supporter of Villanova in the past and an avid football fan, Toscani hopes to prove there is interest in Villanova football.

"We intend to get at least 3,000 people at the game to show that the cry for the return of football at Villanova has not died," Toscani said.

The original idea for the day came from Temple University president Peter J. Liacouras. Liacouras approached Toscani, a fellow classmate at University of Pennsylvania Law School, with the idea. "Peter's idea was to create interest in Temple football," Toscani claimed. "We are taking it further."

The game has been moved to Penn's Franklin Field from Philadelphia Veteran's Stadium, in order to accommodate the Philadelphia Phillies-Baltimore Orioles World Series baseball game. The football game time was also moved to 7:30 p.m.

"Temple is not really publicizing this," Toscani noted, "but there is a lot of enthusiasm. Our original goal was to get 1,000 people there. We gave out over 3,000 tickets, and expect at least 2,000 to show up, including anywhere from 500 to 1,000 students."

The Temple-East Carolina game was selected because of the presence of former Wildcat quarterback Kevin Ingram, who currently starts for East Carolina. Several other Villanova football players transferred to that school.

"I'm still getting phone calls from interested people," stated Toscani. "We expect at least 50 former Villanova players to attend."

Toscani's interest in Villanova, and football, dates back to the 1937 football season. "It was one of their two best seasons," Toscani remembered. "They were ranked in the top ten then. My brother was enrolled in the seminary, and I used to go to the games."

Villanova vs. William and Mary in a previous football game.

A former third string quarterback and a math major at Maine's Bowdoin College, as well as a Penn Law School graduate, Toscani has been a Villanova football fan "since day one. I was hooked and I can't fight it.

"Although I'm not a Villanova alumnus, and I don't know the inner workings of the school," explained Toscani, "I am an interested fan, with a fan's opinions about the football situation."

Toscani has set 5:30 p.m. as the starting time for his tailgate party, with a post-game party planned as well. "We'll have the whole lot on the northeast corner for the party," Toscani added.

Despite various reports on the football situation at Villanova, Toscani remains optimistic. "If we get all the people out who said they would come, it could be a big help," Toscani said.

"All we want is for President Driscoll to know we care," concluded Toscani.

Former U.S. President Plans Visit

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

Former United States President Gerald R. Ford will visit Villanova University Nov. 15 and 16, according to an announcement made this week by the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president.

The former chief executive will be coming to Villanova as a distinguished lecturer under the sponsorship of the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research, a non-partisan research and educational organization.

Ford will arrive for his two-day visit late Tuesday and immediately attend a dinner honoring "The Trustee Associates," a group of major contributors to the university and invited guests.

Tuesday night's affair will be held at the Union League, located at Broad and Sansom Streets in Philadelphia.

"The Union League is a very exclusive club, dating back in use only for special events in Philadelphia," commented Eugene Ruane, director of public relations at Villanova. "Invitations will be sent to the governor and various other prominent figures," added Ruane.

The former president is arriving from Palm Springs, California, and will go directly to the Union League.

Ford will be escorted from his stop over in Chicago to Philadelphia by Villanova alumnus and Chicago resident James Connelly.

"Connelly is hoping to meet Ford upon his arrival from Palm Springs," said Ruane, "but was advised to meet up with Ford on the plane to Philadelphia to greet Ford on behalf of Villanova there, due to the three secret service men, who will be with Ford the entire time and may, in the shuffle, unintentionally keep Connelly away from Ford."

Accommodations have been made for Ford to stay at St. David's Inn Tuesday night. "We thought of having Ford stay at the Union League, but it will be nicer having him closer to campus," said Ruane.

On Wednesday, Ford, the nation's 38th president, will come to Villanova's campus for a series of day long activities.

Present arrangements call for Ford to participate in classroom sessions on U.S. foreign relations and the economy during the morning, followed by a luncheon to be attended by faculty representatives and student body leaders.

A press conference and an open informal address to members of the campus community are tentatively planned for mid-afternoon in the Connelly Center.

The former president is expected to leave campus for Washington, D.C., in the late afternoon.

To plan Ford's visit, a committee representing the campus community has been appointed.

Members include Joseph Chase, of the Philadelphia city representatives's office (Villanova Alumni Association representative); Charles Cherry, assistant to the faculty council; Patrick Leahy, president of Villanova student government; Eugene J. Ruane, director of public relations; and Eleanor Strack, chairperson for Villanova Senate.

The group is currently working on a detailed itinerary for the former president.

This will be Ford's second visit to Villanova. His first was in 1976, when he gave a major address in the Field House during the closing days of his election campaign.

The former chief executive received a warm welcome during his 1976 visit which came as a result of an invitation from Driscoll to both major candidates for president and both major candidates for vice president.

Area Residents Eligible For On-Campus Housing

By PAULA SOLLAMI

Villanova University will be eliminating completely the previous twenty-five mile radius that students once needed to live from the Villanova campus in order to reside on-campus, according to the Rev. Harry Erdlen, O.S.A., dean of admissions.

This new policy will go into effect for the 1984 freshmen class. Erdlen stated, "I suggested this new policy because many qualified area students decide against Villanova because they wish to reside on-campus at their prospective colleges. We lose many potential students to other schools because of this."

Whether this policy will decrease the chances for upperclassmen to live on-campus is questionable, according to Erdlen. "I doubt if more than twenty-five or so commuters, out of roughly 360 commuters, will want to take advantage of this change, so it really shouldn't produce a drastic effect for those upperclassmen wishing to remain on-campus."

Estimates show that with the new dormitories being built on Villanova's South Campus, expected to be finished in September of 1984, chances will, in fact, increase for upperclassmen to remain on-campus.

Villanova does not take quotas of students from each state, as do many other colleges in the U.S. and therefore, an area student will not take the place of an out-of-state student unless he is more qualified to do so. According to Erdlen, "Villanova bases its acceptances on a student's academic excellence. If a local student applies for residency and is granted this residency, he deserves it."

Rev. Harry Erdlen, dean of admissions.

Bike-A-Thon

On Sunday, Oct. 9, Villanova students and some members of the local community and O'Hara High School took part in our BIKE-A-THON to raise money for St. Jude's Cancer Research Hospital for Children in Memphis, TE. Although the number of riders was a bit disappointing, those who did ride certainly outdid themselves in enthusiasm and involvement! The weather contributed to the overall good feeling and the riders enjoyed participating and seeing to it that a good amount of money would go to the kids at St. Jude's. With only about 20 riders actively taking part they managed to raise over $900 to be sent to St. Jude's Hospital. We began promptly at 2:00 and concluded the ride at 5:00 and all felt they had really spent a most productive and rewarding afternoon.

The Social Action volunteer staff was on hand to welcome riders and inform them of the route, help other PROJECT SUNSHINE volunteers to stamp the miles covered, and see to it that any riders who were ready could enjoy the generous donation from Pizza Hut of Bryn Mawr: good cold Pepsi and plenty of potatoe chips.

This charming and insightful film will be shown Sunday at 3:30 and 7 p.m. and Monday at 7 p.m. in the Connely Center Cinema. Admission for the film is $1.50 for students and senior citizens and $3. for the general public.

Set in 1959, Diner takes an affectionate look at the late night bull sessions of five young men in their favorite local diner. The film has been noted for its honest portrayal of relationships between the sexes before the sexual revolution. Newsweek's David Ansen writes that Diner "has the aura of a lovingly recollected autobiography," while Time's Richard Corliss calls the film "wonderfully cast and played."

On Oct. 19, the Villanova Cultural Film Series will present Leo McCarey's Once Upon a Honeymoon. This landmark comedy will be shown Wednesday at 7 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema. Admission is $1.50 for students and senior citizens and $3. for the general public.

Made in 1942, this entertaining film takes a light-hearted look at political and social mores during the war-torn 1940's. Cary Grant and Ginger Rogers star as lovers who are caught in the political confusion of Hitler-ruled Europe.

Lovers Adore Covered Wagon

By AMELIA McGOVERN

The Olde Covered Wagon Inn, a noted place for Villanova University fraternity, sorority, and "Days" parties, changed ownership officially on Sept. 21 "after months of negotiations," according to Roger Bonner, the executive chef under the new owners.

The Covered Wagon under new ownership is expected to have its grand re-opening on Nov. 1. The name is the same and the menu will basically be the same, noted Bonner.

The new owners, who also own the Mile Post Inn, located across the street from the Covered Wagon, are currently renovating the building. The original building is over 100 years old and there was an addition made to the building in 1960. The main bar, located in the original building, called the Pub Room, is being refinished. It has a "distinguished charm which other places will spend a million dollars to achieve," Bonner commented.

The formal dining room is also being refinished. There will be a capacity of 50 people in this section of the inn. Another room, with a limit of 150 people is available for parties and other functions. The banquet hall has a 600-800 person capacity. There is a stage on which the Covered Wagon plans to offer live entertainment, mostly for a middle-aged crowd. Within a year, they plan to offer a la carte service in the banquet room.

Other renovations include a new coat room, new kitchen equipment and a new roof. The parking lot is also being improved. The front of the building will be restored to its original stone surface. Paint which was used to cover the stone years ago is being removed by sand blasting.

The point of the renovations is to restore the inn to its original state. Bonner commented that

The Olde Covered Wagon Inn.

John Gonzales, the father of one of the current owners, "has a personal interest in the place. He was a waiter here in 1938. There is a definite link between the Covered Wagon of the past and the upcoming Covered Wagon, something which has been missing for years."

Bonner mentioned that the Covered Wagon "has been inactive for about five years. The place has been closed for about a year, though bookings made in the past had to be fulfilled."

Bonner said that the new owners will be just as receptive to bookings by Villanova University organizations as were the previous owners, the Canada's of Strafford. At this time, the new owners are not taking bookings because they are still obligated to do parties booked by the previous owners. After Nov. 1, however, new bookings will be taken.

The management will have to observe the 21-year drinking limit at Villanova University functions. "It's a touchy situation," said Bonner, "We'll have to observe the law, but we'll discuss it when the time comes."

Adult Services Improved in University College

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

To act as a liason for adult and senior citizen students at Villanova, the University College has opened a new position, Director of Adult Service and appointed Patricia L. Wiedinmyer to assume the position.

Wiedinmyer previously worked at Chestnut Hill College in a similar role using her B.A. in marketing and master's degree from Villanova, in counseling.

"To further facilitate education for adults and help them adjust to the academic atmosphere, is Wiedinmyer's primary concern.

Combining marketing skills into programs with counseling knowledge, Wiedinmyer is instituting various workshops and programs to recruit adults in the community, to help adults to get over the fear of returning to school and to help them determine the direction they want to take with success.

"I try to assure adults that the 'traditional student' is no longer between 18 and 24 years of age and, in helping them develop their self confidence, I can channel them into graduate school, credit or non-credit courses, day or night school, the nursing major or where ever," said Wiedinmyer.

"Adults do learn differently," recognized Wiedinmyer, "because of their past experiences. They cope with job and family obligations in a different perspective than a younger student does.

"Yet, at the same time, they (the adults) share concerns with younger students, like test anxiety," said Wiedinmyer.

Although it is harder for adult students to get back into a study habit, the challenge to get used to going back to school can be facilitated if, as Wiedinmyer recommends, adults begin with one course which interests them and one in which they are "fairly sure of success. This way, one can select how much work and time is involved and how it fits into their particular schedule, while, at the same time during this adjustment, not get discouraged or lose self confidence in their ability to succeed."

A national average concludes that adults at the age of 45 learn nearly the same rate as students of 25, with an additional emphasis on accuracy.

Failure to complete or be unsuccessful in education in the past does not reflect the potential an adult has, in any way. As Wiedinmyer explains, "The potential for success increases with age since personal goals and job related goals are developed and defined with age."

There is an increase in the University College, with enrollment figures reaching up to 2,276.

According to Wiedinmyer, adult students return "on account of some transition in their life in which education can help them encounter the change successfully, whether it be a change in a job position or marital status.

"Personal enrichment also can induce an adult to return to school. They find education an intellectual challenge," said Wiedinmyer. "Also, there are those who just love to go to school and with more leisure time for most people these days, you find these people using that time taking classes."

Women now out number men in adult college enrollment, especially students over 35, according to national averages, and Wiedinmyer has found at Villanova likewise, the demographic group of women is more predominant."

"Consequently, more programs are being developed for women, but this is not to preclude men in any way," emphasized Wiedinmyer.

While tuition is less for night school than day school, for adults 65 and over, tuition is free.

Connelly Survey

By DAWN R. OLIVER

To expand those services provided by the Connelly Center for students, a survey, directed by Peg Mason, scheduling and planning coordinator for the Connelly Center, is being distributed at the Connelly Center information desk for students to complete.

The survey began Oct. 3, and in a few weeks, when the results of the survey are tabulated, Mason hopes to discover the estimated percentage of students who use the information desk and what the Connelly Center can do to make the information desk more helpful to them.

"I am interested in finding out for what other reasons, besides buying candy and magazines, the information desk is being used," commented Mason.

The information desk's primary purpose is helping students in any possible way and Mason wants to know if this service is being fulfilled.

The questionnaire consists of six questions, five of which require only a 'yes' or 'no' answer, while the sixth requires an essay form answer.

Question number six on the survey provides the student with ample amount of space for comments concerning what the student feels is a service, other than what is already provided at the information desk, that would be of help to the students.

This question is of primary importance to Mason and the purpose of the questionnaire. "This question should be answered as honestly as possible," said Mason. On the contrary to Mason's request, however, several of the surveys handed back have contained comments which are "distressing" and proved that not all students took the question seriously.

The questionnaire will be available at the Connelly Center information desk and Mason hopes that the students take advantage of this opportunity to voice their opinions on what can service them better.

"When an employee is hired," said Mason, "they are told never to let a customer walk away without answering their questions. Any question the customer may have is to be answered as correctly as possible."

Football Not on Trustees Agenda

The Board of Trustees met Oct. 11 and reportedly did not discuss the subject of restoration of football at Villanova.

According to Dr. Charles Cherry, assistant vice president for academic affairs and a leading proponent against intercollegiate football at Villanova, it was his understanding from the Rev. Larry Gallen, O.S.A. vice president for academic affairs, that the agenda for the meeting consisted of "regular business such as the bond issue," but nothing concerning the volatile football restoration issue.

Cherry, along with Gallen, coauthored a rebuttal report to a proposal submitted to the Trustees from a special committee. Entitled "The Administration's Response to I-AA Football," the report detailed the administration's negative response to restoration.

University President Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A., would not comment on Tuesday's Trustee meeting, declining to return any calls from the Villanovan.

Last December, the Trustees said that a final decision would be made at either of the regular meetings, on Oct. 11 and Dec. 13. The December meeting is the final deadline.

Opposition Leader Speaks at V.U.

By DIANA K. SUGG

Alberto Arene, one of the leading spokesmen for the opposition to the government of El Salvador, addressed many of the controversial issues concerning the current state of affairs in El Salvador. The Progressive Student Coalition organized Arene's visit to Villanova last Tuesday, which included a talk with a small group of students studying Central America, a formal reception in the Connelly Center and a public presentation in the evening.

A member of the El Salvadoran government from October 1979 to March 1980, Arene resigned and joined the opposition when it became clear that the reforms he felt the country needed were not going to take place.

Forced to leave his country or live with the threat of death because of his opposition to those in power, Arene became one of the two official representatives in the United States for the Political-Diplomatic Commission of the FMLN-FDR. (Farabundo Marti Front for National Liberation-Democratic Revolutionary Front). The FMLN-FDR represents the unified opposition to the government, with the FMLN being the military faction and the FDR the political faction.

Arene estimates that 60 to 70 percent of the people of El Salvador are opposed to the current government, which is the world's oldest dictatorship. In the past three years, 40,000 people have been killed at the hands of this government. The industrial production is down 35 percent and unemployment now stands at 45 percent. Arene characterizes it as a "murderer's regime," which since 1931 has known none of the freedoms of a democratic society. Arene stated that "the people have made every peaceful effort to change this, with their last possible chance being the government created in October of 1979. When this failed, they resorted to force, the result being a battle between those in power and those who want to change the system."

Denying claims that those in opposition are all communists supported by the Soviet Union and Cuba, Arene cites that they have two goals. "First, they want to establish a broad-based provisional government which could lead the country to free, democratic elections. Secondly, they would use the elections to determine the type of government the people want. Reconstruction needs consensus," Arene commented.

The opposition wants to involve as many people as possible in the decision-making process, thereby achieving internal stability. The kind of government which the FDR favors would be a "socialist democratic society," non-aligned to any super-power, with an economy that has a private sector, as well as state ownership and cooperatives.

Until the opposition gains the power to do this, however, they must continue fighting. Currently, the opposition holds 20 percent of the country's territory and are advancing. Although many charge that Moscow is supplying the rebels with arms, Arene maintains that it is impossible to bring arms into the country. "Not only does the U.S. have detection systems in the area, but the bordering countries of Honduras and Guatemala are friendly with the government side of the conflict and will not allow arms through to El Salvador."

Because of these factors, the rebels now rely on capturing the weapons of their enemy as their primary source of arms. The United States is supplying the "enemy" - the government; hence it is," Arene stated, "the U.S. government, through the armed forces of El Salvador, that give us the arms." According to Arene, it is the people of El Salvador, as well as international organizations and wealthy individuals, who support the group financially.

Why No Decision?

The University's Board of Trustees met Tuesday at a regularly scheduled meeting. According to various sources, topics discussed included the bond issue, as well as regular business matters. But football was not on the agenda, and so, presumably, it was not discussed.

Why not?

Reiterating one of last week's editorials, there is no sound reason based on all material and evidence already accrued, that a decision either for or against restoration cannot be made immediately. However, the opponents of football and the anti-football faction of the Trustees are pleased with each delay on the topic. They correctly figure that each day a final decision is not rendered, a small victory is won. They are riding out the tide of enthusiasm, waiting until December to make a decision, knowing full well that any momentum toward restoration will be reduced.

The word handed down at the meeting scheduled for Dec. 13, the final deadline set by the Trustees, will not create the same impact as a decision rendered now would. In December, one's thoughts change to the season at hand. Students worry about final exams and getting home for the holidays. They take the attitude of "let's get the hell out of Dodge and we'll deal with it when we get back."

We also hear the alumni rumblings: threats that may come to fruition if the Trustees vote no on restoration. It's a cat and mouse game that will most likely continue for two more months.

No More Comedian

It came as no surprise when Interior Secretary James Watt announced his resignation early this week. Numerous times, there were cries for him to resign following a controversial comment or remark. Time and time again, he inserted foot in mouth, only to be defended by the administration and receiving votes of confidence. Finally, with a three-week-old quote still plaguing him, Watt correctly determined that he had expended his "usefulness" and resigned.

Watt's position entailed the overseeing of 300 million acres of public land and one billion acres of off shore territory. In his shaky tenure, Watt initiated the most intense drive to convert federal lands to commercial use in history. Watt pursued "privatization" policies that offended many groups including environmentalists. But Watt was simply following the narrow-minded, catering-to-big-business practice that characterizes the Reagan administration. According to the White House, there will be no change in the administration's basic environmental policies but Watt's successor will be "less confrontational and more tactful."

Watt simply lost his job by being blunt-spoken again and again. He insulted every major group that Reagan and the Republican politicians tried to cultivate and woo. The administration will continue to praise Watt's efforts publicly but are delighted that the chance of any more embarrassing statements from Watt has been eliminated. The raping of America's resources will probably continue under Watt's successor but in a manner gauged as less politically damaging.

Phillies Phever

It's World Series time again and for the second time in four seasons, the Philadelphia Phillies are the National League representatives in the fall classic. For those area residents who have followed the club for any length of time, this is a noteworthy achievement in light of Phillies seasons past. It's fitting that the team overcame early season difficulties to rise to the top of their league in the team's 100th anniversary.

In the past eight seasons, the Phillies have won five divisional titles, two pennants, one World series and are challenging to add yet another World Series title to the collection. This is a far cry from the teams of the late 60s and early 70s who lost almost twice as many games as they won and were the laughing stock of the National League.

Coupled with the recent successes of other area professional teams, Philadelphia has become a city proud of its teams. Win or lose, it's a good time to be a Phillies fan.

Letters to the Editor

No Enjoyment for Anyone at Villanova

To the Editor:

October is supposed to be a month of excitement at college. Fall is coming in full bloom, change is in the air and excitement abounds — except at Villanova. No football, no parties, no activities equals no fun.

As a freshman, I then eagerly awaited what would happen in my senior year: I pictured myself beginning my last year at Villanova with a tremendous satisfaction as everything finally fell into place and I could enjoy my life. But it hasn't happened.

Last weekend was Parent's Weekend but I didn't bother to ask my parents to come. What could I offer them here? Sure, they enjoy seeing their child at the home away from home but that's it. Drinking and dancing (?) with Fr. Driscoll is not all that exciting. So I went home instead.

Now, Homecoming Weekend is a week away and my parents want to know if they should attend. I don't know what to tell them. There simply isn't anything to do here that could warrant their attendance. The administration has made sure that all activities are geared the "right way," — theirs. I sent home a schedule of events; sure, my mother likes to read but she wasn't all that interested in the library hours. It's not her idea of weekend fun.

Why does Villanova refuse to appeal to the outside world anymore? I have two brothers who will be college age in two years. Initially, they wanted to come here but after seeing my latest reactions, they're not so sure. As much as the University hates to admit it, there is a need for a social life here. I will never say I regret making the decision to come to Villanova but I can ask — where has all the fun gone? It has disappeared from Villanova.

Care for the Needy

To the Editor:

Thousands of local people — from newborn infants to the elderly — are facing a serious crisis. Unless concerned citizens help their less fortunate neighbors, 50,000 households may lose gas, electric and/or water service.

To aid those in the community who have been particularly ravaged by catastrophic economic conditions, an independent, non-profit agency — the Utility Emergency Services Fund — was recently established by the various utility companies, Philadelphia City Council and business/neighborhood/labor/religious groups. The Fund, which has already received financial support from both private and public sources (PGW employees alone have contributed more than $19,000 during the past three months), helps low-income residents with a one-time grant of up to $500 on fuel bills.

Make your readers aware of the growing crisis — and how public-spirited individuals and businesses can come to the aid of neighbors in need. Second, focus upon UESF — and the crisis out of which it has been formed.

On behalf of thousands of less fortunate men, women and children in our community, I wish to express heart-felt appreciation for your newspaper's generous support and cooperation.

An Exhilaration of the Mind and Body

He was traveling down the bike path in his wheelchair at breakneck speed. His long, muscular arms pumped furiously at the flashing steel rims with a pounding rhythm. Fifteen or so yards behind him, a muscular young man in jogging shorts was straining to catch the speeding wheelchairman. I had a front row seat for the contest, parked in my car on the cobblestone pad surrounding the Arch of Freedom at Valley Forge National Park.

At the bottom of the hill, the runner made a last surge at the speeding chair, but he was unable to catch it. Breathing heavily, he turned off the path. The man and his machine had won.

The spokes of the wheelchair fractured the mid-afternoon sunlight as the piston-like arms of the wheelchairman pumped himself up the incline, first both hands together, then alternating in a kind of jogging two-step. I was moved, fascinated. The night before I had watched Jon Voight depict a veteran back from Vietnam and confined to a wheelchair in "Coming Home," as he proceeded to seduce Jane Fonda. Not bad work for a guy whose legs had been blown to smithereens.

I started the car. Someone should congratulate him, I thought. Somebody ought to say that they saw it and that it was great! I put the car in gear.

The bike path follows the road up the incline and then makes a ninety degree right turn toward the picnic area, following the road until that point. I passed the wheelchairman in this stretch. Sweat was gleaming on his red, freckled face. He had long hair the color of straw, like Voight's, and a full beard to match. He had broad shoulders and a powerful chest. But his arms were extraordinary. They were massive, sinewy appendages, the kind of arms that once rowed across oceans; arms attached to an athletic eight-footer. They pumped with grace, and knowledge and power. A smile came to my face and I passed him. For just a brief moment our eyes met. He also was smiling.

I parked my car in the picnic area lot. The wheelchairman was within twenty yards of a right-turn/left-turn combination which took the path away from the road, when I stepped onto the narrow macadam strip, crossed it and started jogging on a diagonal through the picnic tables, knowing that his need to keep to the pathway would force him to hug the perimeter. I ran easily, lightly. I was wearing my "Pumping Iron" T-shirt from Harry's Gym, with the torn hem of one of the narrow sleeves flapping out wildly; sneakers without socks, jeans. I felt a little crazy, lightheaded.

I got to the bend where the path turned away from the picnic area ten yards ahead of him. I could hear him coming but I consciously refrained from turning my head to look. I crossed the track a little ahead of the left-hand turn, crossed it again and headed out into a great, rising field of Indian Grass and wildflowers — Buttercups, Daisies, Wild Iris, Bachelor Buttons — and continued a diagonal direction across the field toward that point where we would meet — me through the Indian Grass and wildflowers, him keeping to the path.

I felt exhilarated. I was experiencing an intense and passionate sense of camaraderie with this stranger in the wheelchair, caught up in a kind of dance which I somehow knew definitely surprised and pleased us both. It was unexpected, spontaneous, carefree. "It" carried us along. We were racing, no doubt about that. But it was a race motivated by the play of mutual respect rather than by a compulsive need to determine a winner and a loser. We are all winners, all losers. Nevertheless, I wondered if I would have the wind to get up the long hill before him.

I did, thinking that the strong should not limp before the lame. I was hanging on a sign which directed you to follow a certain route to General somebody or other's encampment, breathing hard, cursing myself for every cigarette I ever smoked and would smoke, when he came over the crest of the hill not twenty yards away, pumping that machine of his for all it was worth. From a head-on perspective, lumbering up the hill as he was, man and machine seemed to merge into a single entity — the wheelchairman. He might have been some antedeluvian creature passing in and out of the dappled shadows cast by the ripe, July trees. A contemporary reminder of our ancient, mysterious, indomitable capacity for adaptation. I may be getting here second, he seemed to be saying, but I'm getting here! And he was. In leaps and bounds, neck muscles gripped and swelling, until finally he whizzed by me and turned a few circles in the gravel. Never stopping.

"You look real good on that thing," I said. He smiled. "Man, you really know how to make it go." He laughed then, and spun back on two wheels. Hi-ho-Silver! I said, "I saw you beat that guy down there. It was great."

He gave me his half-laugh again and said, "I got one more lap to go before I get out of here." We stayed there a moment, panting and grinning.

At the entrance to the woods, as I was departing along my walking path, I turned around. He had started pumping away up the hill. "See ya!" I called.

He spun the chair around without interrupting his pace or losing a beat and said, "Sometimes I even like to go up backwards." Which he had proceeded to do. He was wearing a white T-shirt with two words emblazoned on it in large, red letters: MEAN MACHINE. The wheelchairman. He moved in his own solar system, I thought, recalling Nietzsche's analysis of Heraclitus. He makes me want to find the limit of my own good arms, my own good legs, my own good heart.

On Campus

By LAUREN ROACHE and PETE DiPASCA

'This week the Villanovan asked students and security guards: "What do you feel is Villanova's biggest security problem? What do you think should be done about it?"

"Parking both on and off campus and the enforcement of it. More lots should be provided and better patrolled so that students feel that their $35 was well spent."

Kevin T. Smith
Senior, Accounting

"Students walking alone at night and not being able to park on campus. Campus should be better lit and security guards should patrol more often on foot."

Brenda Walker
Senior,
Political Science

"I don't feel Villanova has a major security problem with the exception of a few obscure incidences. But then I've lived off campus for four years and I really wouldn't know anyway."

John Gigliotti
Senior,
Operations Management

"The security here is totally incompetent, ineffective, and inefficient. As a commuter, I feel the parking lots should be equipped with more lights and security should patrol the lots at night."

Carolyn DiGiovanni
Senior, English

"Not being able to stop parents from tailgating or giving their kids booze. Nothing."

Shian Westlove
Security Guard

"I think the biggest problem is walking alone at night on campus. It's difficult to patrol the campus from gatehouse glass booths. Villanova needs more patrolling on foot by the security guards."

Mary Beth Bogan
Senior,
Political Science

"I feel that the major problem is the lack of communication between Security and other departments in the University. Better Security involvement with University departments."

Andrew J. O'Brien
Senior, Accounting

"Their age. Hire younger security guards."

Janet Jones
Senior, Accounting

"I feel that the security on campus is well run, yet I think that we could have a younger squad on the job to handle certain situations."

V.U. Student in Auto Collision

By TIM HANLON

A motorcycle-car accident occurred last Thursday at 10 a.m. on Lancaster Avenue across from Galberry Hall and Barley Cone Lane. Neither of the people involved were seriously injured and damage was light to both vehicles.

According to a Radnor Township Police report, the accident was allegedly caused by a Chevy Citation that was traveling east on Lancaster Avenue, and turning left directly in front of a westbound motorcycle. The motorcycle had the right of way.

The automobile was operated by Villanova student Cathy Wilson, according to a witness to the scene. "The automobile was turning into Galberry/Stadium parking lot when an oncoming motorcycle skidded and hit the rear end of the Chevette, sending the motorcycle and rider across Lancaster Avenue," the witness said. "The motorcyclist was able to walk away from the accident."

The accident happened in the daylight with no adverse conditions. The estimated traveling speed of the motorcycle was 35 mph when it hit the turning automobile.

Galberry Hall, scene of the accident.

Investigating officer, R. J. Dorkoski, reported that the car was registered to Albert S. Paul of Brookhaven, Pa. and the operator of the motorcycle was Edward S. Jaworowski of Bryn Mawr.

This is the second accident on Lancaster Avenue in front of Galberry Hall. Last year at this time a pedestrian was struck as he crossed Lancaster by a passing car. Serious injuries resulted from that accident to the pedestrian as well as severe damage to the car.

Permit Approved

By TIM HANLON

The Radnor Township Board of Commissioners approved construction plans for the new field house on Ithan Avenue. The decision was made after a meeting with the commissioners Sept. 26.

Safety improvements have been completed in conjunction with the new field house such as sidewalks near Bartley Hall, proper fencing around the parking lots and storm drainage under the Ithan bridge.

The relocation of a sewer system was already in progress before township approval. The field house is planned to be double the size of the present field house, constructed in 1932, and will have new facilities including a swimming pool, raquetball and squash courts, an indoor track and four multi-purpose courts for volleyball, basketball and tennis.

Parking facilities will be expanded around the fieldhouse.

All that is required is a foundation permit to begin construction. The permit should be issued within the next 10 days. Construction will then continue throughout the next 14 to 15 months and occupancy should be ready by spring 1985.

After obtaining the foundation permit, which only allows footings to be built, the Building Officials and Code Administration must approve the drawings. The State Department of Labor and Safety has to see that health, safety and welfare requirements are met.

The Board of Trustees will go over final estimates for construction with the construction manager to make sure costs will be in line with the estimated budget of $9 million dollars. Bids should be in by November or December.

The Rev. George Burnell, assistant to the President emphasized, "In any project you deal with you make preliminary estimates and only when the final bid is in can you come within your budget or come up with a discrepancy that allows you either to modify your plans either adding or subtracting from them."

The new field house plan allows the possibility for future additions to seat more people or add to the existing facilities. However, Burnell said, "If there is future expansion it will be necessary to go back to Radnor Township Commission for further approval." Besides going through the entire process again, more parking and air ventilation facilities would have to be established.

Adult Services Improved

many senior citizen students attend Villanova.

A senior citizens organization, ENCORE, is currently on campus and "although I am not officially associated with the group," said Wiedinmyer, "I am interested in starting to work to get to know this group to help bring them close together.

"I have ideas that I think adult students need, but they have their own ideas, many similar, but some different," commented Wiedinmyer.

Through upcoming adult student programs, such as study skills and goal orientated workshops and coffee and donut meetings, Wiedinmyer is hoping to meet the people "to find out what I can do for them. As the University College increases enrollment, I am interested in every possible way to extend any effort to accommodate the students."

Night classes have been offered at Villanova for approximately 50 years, while University College began in 1980. "The University College is attune to part-time and night school students' value and their special needs," commented Wiedinmyer.

"Dr. Armenti has marketed to adult students and done an outstanding job professionally," said Wiedinmyer.

Wiedinmyer commented that her acceptance on the Villanova Staff is pleasing since the knowledge insight she has of the campus from studying here, "should help me be aware of what is available on campus already and see more clearly what needs to be done."

Philly Phanatic Entertains Crowd

By CHARLENE PARDOE

The Phillie Phanatic will be at the World Series tonight, just as he is at all Phillies home games during the season. Over the past five years, the lovable character has become as much a part of the game as the Phillies themselves. The two behind the Phanatic travel around incognito, not being recognized out of costume. But one of them is Villanova's Brian Sullivan, a junior marketing major.

Since he first began in 1978, Sullivan says he has loved his job. "Right now, it couldn't have worked out better. I have a good portion of say of when I work and when I don't," he noted.

Sullivan does not usually appear in games, however. Dave Raymond does. Sullivan's main responsibilities involve personal appearances, of which he does 150 to 200 a year. He is there on special occasions such as new store openings, fashion shows and the Thanksgiving Day parade down Broad Street. This Saturday, he will appear at the Special Olympics on campus.

"You can't predict what's going to happen at an appearance," he says. "It depends on the crowd. Different types of appearances dictate what you do. You have to be able to react to whatever the mood is," he added.

Appearances in uniform usually last 20 minutes, but sometimes with large crowds they last longer. "I used to get headaches from staying in the costume too long," Sullivan noted. "Air doesn't move inside it. When there is a large crowd, you can't get enough air."

The most surprising reaction he ever received came when he showed up at a 76ers'-Celtics game last year. "The people went crazy — they loved it. Wherever the phanatic goes people usually react well," he said.

The phanatic's green, furry costume was designed and made by Harrison and Erickson, a New York firm experienced in such work. Bonnie Erickson used to work with Jim Henson and is the master mind behind Miss Piggy. Together, they are credited with creating such designs as the tastebuds of the Budweiser commercial, the 76ers' mascot and various other professional team mascots.

Brian Sullivan.

The phanatic was designed from a cheerleading theme. His nose came about from a cheerleading funnel.

On his birthday last year, Harrison and Erickson introduced for the first time the phanatic's mother, Phoebe. Phoebe looks similar to the phanatic but dresses differently.

Dressing up as Phoebe and the phanatic has had it's good side, though. Through it, he has met all of the news and sportscasters in Philadelphia. "They come to a lot of games," Sullivan said.

Howard Eskin, sportscaster for channel 3, introduced Phoebe this year. "Dressing as Phoebe and the Phanatic are kind of a strange way to make a living," Sullivan noted, "but it can be fun. Besides, I'm probably the first date Howard Eskin's had in ten years."

When doing summer games, he loses from seven to ten pounds a game. "Down on the field, the temperature in the costumes reaches 120 degrees," Sullivan said. "We used to take salt tablets, but the team doctor won't give them to us anymore. So we drink a lot of water. It's not bad, though, because you're never in it for that long."

Exploring America By Bike

By CATHERINE GROODY

Everyone in life has a goal. Whether it be the achievement of a good cum or the landing of a lucrative job, each one of us has in mind specific goals we hope to accomplish. Sometimes these goals are small, like attending every class on a given day or as large as losing 100 pounds in a matter of one week. Whatever the objective or the motivating factor it takes to achieve our goals, unfortunately, some seem to get lost in the process and they never get accomplished.

Senior Ken Bernosky is one person who four years ago set a goal: to ride 3,600 miles cross country.

On August 2 of this year, Bernosky set out with two other men in San Francisco, California. Four days after the journey began, Bernosky's other riders ended their trip. He proceeded alone through Wyoming, Nebraska, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Pennsylvania and all the way to New Jersey.

"It was a dream I've always wanted to fulfill," said Bernosky. On September 2, exactly one month after he started, Bernosky accomplished his goal.

Four years ago, Bernosky began seriously training for this ride. He jogged thirteen miles everyday and took other trips like the one in August of 1981 where he rode 700 miles to North Carolina in seven days. In finishing this expedition, Bernosky was able to donate $1500 to the American Cancer Society from sponsors. In the summer of 1982, Bernosky also took another trip to Quebec.

All of this was leading up to his final goal; a cross country ride through the United States. Bernosky did not receive prizes or money for this trip. Instead, he worked as a cameraman at WOR-TV, in New Jersey to pay for it. Here, he was able to save enough money to make the journey.

Ken Bernosky.

Bernosky averaged 100 miles a day. On good days, he was able to go as far as 140 miles. His first five days were nothing but barren deserts all the way.

"Every 100 miles or so there was a village," he said. The desert was extremely hot. During the day," he continued, "the desert got as hot as 120 degrees. In the evenings, it would lower to as much as 75 degrees." In the desert, Bernosky also faced severe thunder storms and wild animals.

"I never realized how many wild animals there were in the desert," he said. Day and night, he was exposed to snakes, coyotes, jackrabbits and other animals.

On the trip, Bernosky, along with his 18-speed bike, brought with him 45 pounds of basic necessities. At night he camped out by roadside, except for a few times when he stayed in hotels. All in all, Bernosky managed to spend a mere $300 including the ten dollars he spent on hotels.

The most difficult part of the trip occurred during the second day while traveling through the Sierra Mountains. Here, Bernosky had to travel 60 miles uphill from 17 feet to 9,000 feet above sea level.

Thirty-two days after he began the expedition, Bernosky (20 pounds lighter) was warmly welcomed by his friends and family in his hometown of Flemington, New Jersey.

Bernosky saw his trip as being a personal challenge as well as an educational experience.

"Most of the people were so nice all along the way," he said, "if I had the chance I'd do it again."

Adjusting to The Stress of V.U.

By ROBIN LUCARINI

As the first month of the new school year ends, and the warmth of sunlit days on the beach become more of a memory than a reality, the pressures of academic life begin. The first few "coasting" weeks are now over, leaving deadlines, assignments, and for many, mounting tension. It is essential to know how to handle these stressful situations in order to lead healthy and productive lives.

Hans Seyle, a prominent psychiatrist, regarded by many as the "father" of modern stress theory, defines stress as "the nonspecific response of the body to any demand made upon it." The entire body attempts to adjust to these demands, which are known today as stressors. Seyle's theory also suggests that stress may be either harmful or beneficial depending on the individual and the intensity of the stressor, while continuous exposure to many stressors produces the signs of aging. When we analyze the many stressful situations students must face, we can see why this theory is widely accepted.

As students, we confront a never-ending amount of stressors every single day of our lives. As an example, consider the first month back to college.

The mere adjustment of starting school again after a long summer can be a source of stress. Mentally, it is a form of a "culture shock" — leaving the familiar home and becoming reacquainted with a new set of faces and surroundings. Physically, it is exhausting — packing unpacking box after after box, straightening and organizing rooms.

When that's all done, it's a mad rush for the bookstore (lines, lines and more lines!) and the inevitable emptied pockets after ward. This leaves another worry — finding a part-time job for the semester. But students are sidetracked by changing a class and getting the appropriate signatures.

While scurrying around campus doing that, the signs for clubs and organizations, are clearly visible. The times and dates of the first meetings are assiduously noted. Meanwhile, homework is piling up, two books aren't in, and paying for them is still a problem.

It seems that the day is never long enough, with so much to do and not enough time to do it in. But each day will always be 24 hours long — it is how we manage those 24 hours that determines our mental, as well as our physical well-being.

George Gauvry, head Orthodist at Waulson Community Hospital in Burlington County, New Jersey, and a private Hypnotherapist and Reflexologist suggests a variety of ways to handle stress. "Since stress usually results from a combination of factors," he notes, "you must pinpoint and identify those factors as the first step in stress relief. If you feel irritable, disorganized, frustrated, or unusually tired, you're probably doing too much at one time." He recommends analyzing a typical week in your life and deciding which situations create your greatest pressures. If at all possible, eliminate or lessen these activities or relationships. This might be the time to give up a club, or refuse those extra hours at work when the boss asks. Some activities may not be directly related to stress, but by doing them you create future stress, such as watching television when you have a paper to type, or going out late when you hav to be up early for work the next day.

Gauvry suggests managing your time efficiently to get as much done as possible, without over-extending yourself. "The key is knowing your priorities. Be aware of the goals you are trying to achieve and let everything you do work towards those goals. Keep an accurate schedule book, and make a list every single night of what you have to do the next day, so you know your time is allotted appropriately."

"One of the best relievers of stress is exercise," says Gauvry. Not only is it preventative by helping circulation and muscle tone, but it is also a tremendous outlet for relieving existing stress." Jogging, tennis, swimming, and even walking are excellent and healthy ways to divert your attention from stressful situations.

Gauvry also believes that no matter how busy you are, you should always take time to relax and reorganize your thoughts. "Give yourself at least a half an hour every day to lay back and close your eyes in a peaceful and quiet surrounding. It is so important for the rejuvenation of the body and mind. Always give yourself this time — you're worth it. Gauvry uses hypnotic suggestion to induce relaxation and work out stressful problems with his clients.

Of all methods of handling stress, Gauvry firmly believes there is a base on which they all founded — positive self-concept. "If you feel good about yourself, and comfortable about the person you are, you'll deal with things in an open-minded and rational way. People and little things won't bother you as much and you'll be more aware and in touch with your own and others feelings.

Gauvry offers one final word of advice. "You only get one of you, and you've got to make yourself the most important person in the world. Love yourself and everyone else will, too."

Why No Decision?

The University's Board of Trustees met Tuesday at a regularly scheduled meeting. According to various sources, topics discussed included the bond issue, as well as regular business matters. But football was not on the agenda, and so, presumably, it was not discussed.

Why not?

Reiterating one of last week's editorials, there is no sound reason based on all material and evidence already accrued, that a decision either for or against restoration cannot be made immediately. However, the opponents of football and the anti-football faction of the Trustees are pleased with each delay on the topic. They correctly figure that each day a final decision is not rendered, a small victory is won. They are riding out the tide of enthusiasm, waiting until December to make a decision, knowing full well that any momentum toward restoration will be reduced.

The word handed down at the meeting scheduled for Dec. 13, the final deadline set by the Trustees, will not create the same impact as a decision rendered now would. In December, one's thoughts change to the season at hand. Students worry about final exams and getting home for the holidays. They take the attitude of "let's get the hell out of Dodge and we'll deal with it when we get back."

We also hear the alumni rumblings: threats that may come to fruition if the Trustees vote no on restoration. It's a cat and mouse game that will most likely continue for two more months.

No More Comedian

It came as no surprise when Interior Secretary James Watt announced his resignation early this week. Numerous times, there were cries for him to resign following a controversial comment or remark. Time and time again, he inserted foot in mouth, only to be defended by the administration and receiving votes of confidence. Finally, with a three-week-old quote still plaguing him, Watt correctly determined that he had expended his "usefulness" and resigned.

Watt's position entailed the overseeing of 300 million acres of public land and one billion acres of off shore territory. In his shaky tenure, Watt initiated the most intense drive to convert federal lands to commercial use in history. Watt pursued "privatization" policies that offended many groups including environmentalists. But Watt was simply following the narrow-minded, catering-to-big-business practice that characterizes the Reagan administration. According to the White House, there will be no change in the administration's basic environmental policies but Watt's successor will be "less confrontational and more tactful."

Watt simply lost his job by being blunt-spoken again and again. He insulted every major group that Reagan and the Republican politicians tried to cultivate and woo. The administration will continue to praise Watt's efforts publicly but are delighted that the chance of any more embarrassing statements from Watt has been eliminated. The raping of America's resources will probably continue under Watt's successor but in a manner gauged as less politically damaging.

Phillies Phever

It's World Series time again and for the second time in four seasons, the Philadelphia Phillies are the National League representatives in the fall classic. For those area residents who have followed the club for any length of time, this is a noteworthy achievement in light of Phillies seasons past. It's fitting that the team overcame early season difficulties to rise to the top of their league in the team's 100th anniversary.

In the past eight seasons, the Phillies have won five divisional titles, two pennants, one World series and are challenging to add yet another World Series title to the collection. This is a far cry from the teams of the late '60s and early '70s who lost almost twice as many games as they won and were the laughing stock of the National League.

Coupled with the recent successes of other area professional teams, Philadelphia has become a city proud of its teams. Win or lose, it's a good time to be a Phillies fan.

Letters to the Editor

No Enjoyment for Anyone at Villanova

To the Editor:

October is supposed to be a month of excitement at college. Fall is coming in full bloom, change is in the air and excitement abounds — except at Villanova. No football, no parties, no activities equals no fun.

As a freshman, I then eagerly awaited what would happen in my senior year: I pictured myself beginning my last year at Villanova with a tremendous satisfaction as everything finally fell into place and I could enjoy my life. But it hasn't happened.

Last weekend was Parent's Weekend but I didn't bother to ask my parents to come. What could I offer them here? Sure, they enjoy seeing their child at the home away from home but that's it. Drinking and dancing (?) with Fr. Driscoll is not all that exciting. So I went home instead.

Now, Homecoming Weekend is a week away and my parents want to know if they should attend. I don't know what to tell them. There simply isn't anything to do here that could warrant their attendance. The administration has made sure that all activities are geared the "right way," — theirs. I sent home a schedule of events; sure, my mother likes to read but she wasn't all that interested in the library hours. It's not her idea of weekend fun.

Why does Villanova refuse to appeal to the outside world anymore? I have two brothers who will be college age in two years. Initially, they wanted to come here but after seeing my latest reactions, they're not so sure. As much as the University hates to admit it, there is a need for a social life here. I will never say I regret making the decision to come to Villanova but I can ask — where has all the fun gone? It has disappeared from Villanova.

Care for the Needy

To the Editor:

Thousands of local people — from newborn infants to the elderly — are facing a serious crisis. Unless concerned citizens help their less fortunate neighbors, 50,000 households may lose gas, electric and/or water service.

To aid those in the community who have been particularly ravaged by catastrophic economic conditions, an independent, non-profit agency — the Utility Emergency Services Fund — was recently established by the various utility companies, Philadelphia City Council and business/neighborhood/labor/religious groups. The Fund, which has already received financial support from both private and public sources (PGW employees alone have contributed more than $19,000 during the past three months), helps low-income residents with a one-time grant of up to $500 on fuel bills.

Make your readers aware of the growing crisis — and how public-spirited individuals and businesses can come to the aid of neighbors in need. Second, focus upon UESF — and the crisis out of which it has been formed.

On behalf of thousands of less fortunate men, women and children in our community, I wish to express heart-felt appreciation for your newspaper's generous support and cooperation.

An Exhilaration of the Mind and Body

He was traveling down the bike path in his wheelchair at breakneck speed. His long, muscular arms pumped furiously at the flashing steel rims with a pounding rhythm. Fifteen or so yards behind him, a muscular young man in jogging shorts was straining to catch the speeding wheelchairman. I had a front row seat for the contest, parked in my car on the cobblestone pad surrounding the Arch of Freedom at Valley Forge National Park.

At the bottom of the hill, the runner made a last surge at the speeding chair, but he was unable to catch it. Breathing heavily, he turned off the path. The man and his machine had won.

The spokes of the wheelchair fractured the mid-afternoon sunlight as the piston-like arms of the wheelchairman pumped himself up the incline, first both hands together, then alternating in a kind of jogging two-step. I was moved, fascinated. The night before I had watched Jon Voight depict a veteran back from Vietnam and confined to a wheelchair in "Coming Home," as he proceeded to seduce Jane Fonda. Not bad work for a guy whose legs had been blown to smithereens.

I started the car. Someone should congratulate him, I thought. Somebody ought to say that they saw it and that it was great! I put the car in gear.

The bike path follows the road up the incline and then makes a ninety degree right turn toward the picnic area, following the road until that point. I passed the wheelchairman in this stretch. Sweat was gleaming on his red, freckled face. He had long hair the color of straw, like Voight's, and a full beard to match. He had broad shoulders and a powerful chest. But his arms were extraordinary. They were massive, sinewy appendages, the kind of arms that once rowed across oceans; arms attached to an athletic eight-footer. They pumped with grace, and knowledge and power. A smile came to my face and I passed him. For just a brief moment our eyes met. He also was smiling.

I parked my car in the picnic area lot. The wheelchairman was within twenty yards of a right-turn/left-turn combination which took the path away from the road, when I stepped onto the narrow macadam strip, crossed it and started jogging on a diagonal through the picnic tables, knowing that his need to keep to the pathway would force him to hug the perimeter. I ran easily, lightly. I was wearing my "Pumping Iron" T-shirt from Harry's Gym, with the torn hem of one of the narrow sleeves flapping out wildly; sneakers without socks, jeans. I felt a little crazy, lightheaded.

I got to the bend where the path turned away from the picnic area ten yards ahead of him. I could hear him coming but I consciously refrained from turning my head to look. I crossed the track a little ahead of the left-hand turn, crossed it again and headed out into a great, rising field of Indian Grass and wildflowers — Buttercups, Daisies, Wild Iris, Bachelor Buttons — and continued a diagonal direction across the field toward that point where we would meet — me through the Indian Grass and wildflowers, him keeping to the path.

I felt exhilarated. I was experiencing an intense and passionate sense of camaraderie with this stranger in the wheelchair, caught up in a kind of dance which I somehow knew definitely surprised and pleased us both. It was unexpected, spontaneous, carefree. "It" carried us along. We were racing, no doubt about that. But it was a race motivated by the play of mutual respect rather than by a compulsive need to determine a winner and a loser. We are all winners, all losers. Nevertheless, I wondered if I would have the wind to get up the long hill before him.

I did, thinking that the strong should not limp before the lame. I was hanging on a sign which directed you to follow a certain route to General somebody or other's encampment, breathing hard, cursing myself for every cigarette I ever smoked and would smoke, when he came over the crest of the hill not twenty yards away, pumping that machine of his for all it was worth. From a head-on perspective, lumbering up the hill as he was, man and machine seemed to merge into a single entity — the wheelchairman. He might have been some antediluvian creature passing in and out of the dappled shadows cast by the ripe, July trees. A contemporary reminder of our ancient, mysterious, indomitable capacity for adaptation. I may be getting here second, he seemed to be saying, but I'm getting here! And he was. In leaps and bounds, neck muscles gripped and swelling, until finally he whizzed by me and turned a few circles in the gravel. Never stopping.

"You look real good on that thing," I said. He smiled. "Man, you really know how to make it go." He laughed then, and spun back on two wheels. Hi-ho-Silver! I said, "I saw you beat that guy down there. It was great."

He gave me his half-laugh again and said, "I got one more lap to go before I get out of here." We stayed there a moment, panting and grinning.

At the entrance to the woods, as I was departing along my walking path, I turned around. He had started pumping away up the hill. "See ya!" I called.

He spun the chair around without interrupting his pace or losing a beat and said, "Sometimes I even like to go up backwards." Which he had proceeded to do. He was wearing a white T-shirt with two words emblazoned on it in large, red letters: MEAN MACHINE. The wheelchairman. He moved in his own solar system, I thought, recalling Nietzsche's analysis of Heraclitus. He makes me want to find the limit of my own good arms, my own good legs, my own good heart.

On Campus

By LAUREN ROACHE and PETE DiPASCA

This week the Villanovan asked students and security guards: "What do you feel is Villanova's biggest security problem? What do you think should be done about it?"

"Parking both on and off campus and the enforcement of it. More lots should be provided and better patrolled so that students feel that their $35 was well spent."

Kevin T. Smith
Senior, Accounting

"Students walking alone at night and not being able to park on campus. Campus should be better lit and security guards should patrol more often on foot."

Brenda Walker
Senior,
Political Science

"I don't feel Villanova has a major security problem with the exception of a few obscure incidences. But then I've lived off campus for four years and I really wouldn't know anyway."

John Gigliotti
Senior,
Operations Management

"The security here is totally incompetent, ineffective, and inefficient. As a commuter, I feel the parking lots should be equipped with more lights and security should patrol the lots at night."

Carolyn DiGiovanni
Senior, English

"Not being able to stop parents from tailgating or giving their kids booze. Nothing."

Shian Westlove
Security Guard

"I think the biggest problem is walking alone at night on campus. It's difficult to patrol the campus from gatehouse glass booths. Villanova needs more patrolling on foot by the security guards."

Mary Beth Bogan
Senior,
Political Science

"I feel that the major problem is the lack of communication between Security and other departments in the University. Better Security involvement with University departments."

Andrew J. O'Brien
Senior, Accounting

"Their age. Hire younger security guards."

Janet Jones
Senior, Accounting

"I feel that the security on campus is well run, yet I think that we could have a younger squad on the job to handle certain situations."

V.U. Student in Auto Collision

By TIM HANLON

A motorcycle-car accident occurred last Thursday at 10 a.m. on Lancaster Avenue across from Galberry Hall and Barley Cone Lane. Neither of the people involved were seriously injured and damage was light to both vehicles.

According to a Radnor Township Police report, the accident was allegedly caused by a Chevy Citation that was traveling east on Lancaster Avenue, and turning left directly in front of a westbound motorcycle. The motorcycle had the right of way.

The automobile was operated by Villanova student Cathy Wilson, according to a witness to the scene. "The automobile was turning into Galberry/Stadium parking lot when an oncoming motorcycle skidded and hit the rear end of the Chevette, sending the motorcycle and rider across Lancaster Avenue," the witness said. "The motorcyclist was able to walk away from the accident."

The accident happened in the daylight with no adverse conditions. The estimated traveling speed of the motorcycle was 35 mph when it hit the turning automobile.

Galberry Hall, scene of the accident.

Investigating officer, R. J. Dorkoski, reported that the car was registered to Albert S. Paul of Brookhaven, Pa. and the operator of the motorcycle was Edward S. Jaworowski of Bryn Mawr.

This is the second accident on Lancaster Avenue in front of Galberry Hall. Last year at this time a pedestrian was struck as he crossed Lancaster by a passing car. Serious injuries resulted from that accident to the pedestrian as well as severe damage to the car.

Permit Approved

By TIM HANLON

The Radnor Township Board of Commissioners approved construction plans for the new field house on Ithan Avenue. The decision was made after a meeting with the commissioners Sept. 26.

Safety improvements have been completed in conjunction with the new field house such as sidewalks near Bartley Hall, proper fencing around the parking lots and storm drainage under the Ithan bridge.

The relocation of a sewer system was already in progress before township approval. The field house is planned to be double the size of the present field house, constructed in 1932, and will have new facilities including a swimming pool, raquetball and squash courts, an indoor track and four multi-purpose courts for volleyball, basketball and tennis.

Parking facilities will be expanded around the fieldhouse.

All that is required is a foundation permit to begin construction. The permit should be issued within the next 10 days. Construction will then continue throughout the next 14 to 15 months and occupancy should be ready by spring 1985.

After obtaining the foundation permit, which only allows footings to be built, the Building Officials and Code Administration must approve the drawings. The State Department of Labor and Safety has to see that health, safety and welfare requirements are met.

The Board of Trustees will go over final estimates for construction with the construction manager to make sure costs will be in line with the estimated budget of $9 million dollars. Bids should be in by November or December.

The Rev. George Burnell, assistant to the President emphasized, "In any project you deal with you make preliminary estimates and only when the final bid is in can you come within your budget or come up with a discrepancy that allows you either to modify your plans either adding or subtracting from them."

The new field house plan allows the possibility for future additions to seat more people or add to the existing facilities. However, Burnell said, "If there is future expansion it will be necessary to go back to Radnor Township Commission for further approval." Besides going through the entire process again, more parking and air ventilation facilities would have to be established.

of 138 people on the official "death list" published in the newspapers of El Salvador. Arene's entire family has had to relocate in Nicaragua. The present government makes no distinctions between Alberto and his family. Although Arene said it was "not easy," on his family, he "considers his family to be not only his parents, but also the people of El Salvador."

While in this area, Arene will also speak at the University of Pennsylvania, Haverford, Swarthmore and Princeton.

The groups at Villanova sponsoring this event were the Progressive Student Coalition, the Honors Program, the Peace and Justice Program, the history department, the philosophy department and the Common Heritage Institute.

many senior citizen students attend Villanova.

A senior citizens organization, ENCORE, is currently on campus and "although I am not officially associated with the group," said Wiedinmyer, "I am interested in starting to work to get to know this group to help bring them close together.

"I have ideas that I think adult students need, but they have their own ideas, many similar, but some different," commented Wiedinmyer.

Through upcoming adult student programs, such as study skills and goal orientated workshops and coffee and donut meetings, Wiedinmyer is hoping to meet the people "to find out what I can do for them. As the University College increases enrollment, I am interested in every possible way to extend any effort to accommodate the students."

Night classes have been offered at Villanova for approximately 50 years, while University College began in 1980. "The University College is attune to part-time and night school students' value and their special needs," commented Wiedinmyer.

"Dr. Armenti has marketed to adult students and done an outstanding job professionally," said Wiedinmyer.

Wiedinmyer commented that her acceptance on the Villanova Staff is pleasing since the knowledge insight she has of the campus from studying here, "should help me be aware of what is available on campus already and see more clearly what needs to be done."

Philly Phanatic Entertains Crowd

By CHARLENE PARDOE

The Phillie Phanatic will be at the World Series tonight, just as he is at all Phillies home games during the season. Over the past five years, the lovable character has become as much a part of the game as the Phillies themselves. The two behind the Phanatic travel around incognito, not being recognized out of costume. But one of them is Villanova's Brian Sullivan, a junior marketing major.

Since he first began in 1978, Sullivan says he has loved his job. "Right now, it couldn't have worked out better. I have a good portion of say of when I work and when I don't," he noted.

Sullivan does not usually appear in games, however. Dave Raymond does. Sullivan's main responsibilities involve personal appearances, of which he does 150 to 200 a year. He is there on special occasions such as new store openings, fashion shows and the Thanksgiving Day parade down Broad Street. This Saturday, he will appear at the Special Olympics on campus.

"You can't predict what's going to happen at an appearance," he says. "It depends on the crowd. Different types of appearances dictate what you do. You have to be able to react to whatever the mood is," he added.

Appearances in uniform usually last 20 minutes, but sometimes with large crowds they last longer. "I used to get headaches from staying in the costume too long," Sullivan noted. "Air doesn't move inside it. When there is a large crowd, you can't get enough air."

The most surprising reaction he ever received came when he showed up at a 76ers-Celtics game last year. "The people went crazy — they loved it. Wherever the phanatic goes people usually react well," he said.

The phanatic's green, furry costume was designed and made by Harrison and Erickson, a New York firm experienced in such work. Bonnie Erickson used to work with Jim Henson and is the master mind behind Miss Piggy. Together, they are credited with creating such designs as the tastebuds of the Budweiser commercial, the 76ers' mascot and various other professional team mascots.

Brian Sullivan.

The phanatic was designed from a cheerleading theme. His nose came about from a cheerleading funnel.

On his birthday last year, Harrison and Erickson introduced for the first time the phanatic's mother, Phoebe. Phoebe looks similar to the phanatic but dresses differently.

Dressing up as Phoebe and the phanatic has had it's good side, though. Through it, he has met all of the news and sportscasters in Philadelphia. "They come to a lot of games," Sullivan said.

Howard Eskin, sportscaster for channel 3, introduced Phoebe this year. "Dressing as Phoebe and the Phanatic are kind of a strange way to make a living," Sullivan noted, "but it can be fun. Besides, I'm probably the first date Howard Eskin's had in ten years."

When doing summer games, he loses from seven to ten pounds a game. "Down on the field, the temperature in the costumes reaches 120 degrees," Sullivan said. "We used to take salt tablets, but the team doctor won't give them to us anymore. So we drink a lot of water. It's not bad, though, because you're never in it for that long."

Exploring America By Bike

By CATHERINE GROODY

Everyone in life has a goal. Whether it be the achievement of a good cum or the landing of a lucrative job, each one of us has in mind specific goals we hope to accomplish. Sometimes these goals are small, like attending every class on a given day or as large as losing 100 pounds in a matter of one week. Whatever the objective or the motivating factor it takes to achieve our goals, unfortunately, some seem to get lost in the process and they never get accomplished.

Senior Ken Bernosky is one person who four years ago set a goal: to ride 3,600 miles cross country.

On August 2 of this year, Bernosky set out with two other men in San Francisco, California. Four days after the journey began, Bernosky's other riders ended their trip. He proceeded alone through Wyoming, Nebraska, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Pennsylvania and all the way to New Jersey.

"It was a dream I've always wanted to fulfill," said Bernosky. On September 2, exactly one month after he started, Bernosky accomplished his goal.

Four years ago, Bernosky began seriously training for this ride. He jogged thirteen miles everyday and took other trips like the one in August of 1981 where he rode 700 miles to North Carolina in seven days. In finishing this expedition, Bernosky was able to donate $1500 to the American Cancer Society from sponsors. In the summer of 1982, Bernosky also took another trip to Quebec.

All of this was leading up to his final goal; a cross country ride through the United States. Bernosky did not receive prizes or money for this trip. Instead, he worked as a cameraman at WOR-TV, in New Jersey to pay for it. Here, he was able to save enough money to make the journey.

Ken Bernosky.

Bernosky averaged 100 miles a day. On good days, he was able to go as far as 140 miles. His first five days were nothing but barren deserts all the way.

"Every 100 miles or so there was a village," he said. The desert was extremely hot. During the day," he continued, "the desert got as hot as 120 degrees. In the evenings, it would lower to as much as 75 degrees." In the desert, Bernosky also faced severe thunder storms and wild animals.

"I never realized how many wild animals there were in the desert," he said. Day and night, he was exposed to snakes, coyotes, jackrabbits and other animals.

On the trip, Bernosky, along with his 18-speed bike, brought with him 45 pounds of basic necessities. At night he camped out by roadside, except for a few times when he stayed in hotels. All in all, Bernosky managed to spend a mere $300 including the ten dollars he spent on hotels.

The most difficult part of the trip occurred during the second day while traveling through the Sierra Mountains. Here, Bernosky had to travel 60 miles uphill from 17 feet to 9,000 feet above sea level.

Thirty-two days after he began the expedition, Bernosky (20 pounds lighter) was warmly welcomed by his friends and family in his hometown of Flemington, New Jersey.

Bernosky saw his trip as being a personal challenge as well as an educational experience.

"Most of the people were so nice all along the way," he said, "if I had the chance I'd do it again."

Adjusting to The Stress of V.U.

By ROBIN LUCARINI

As the first month of the new school year ends, and the warmth of sunlit days on the beach become more of a memory than a reality, the pressures of academic life begin. The first few "coasting" weeks are now over, leaving deadlines, assignments, and for many, mounting tension. It is essential to know how to handle these stressful situations in order to lead healthy and productive lives.

Hans Seyle, a prominent psychiatrist, regarded by many as the "father" of modern stress theory, defines stress as "the nonspecific response of the body to any demand made upon it." The entire body attempts to adjust to these demands, which are known today as stressors. Seyle's theory also suggests that stress may be either harmful or beneficial depending on the individual and the intensity of the stressor, while continuous exposure to many stressors produces the signs of aging. When we analyze the many stressful situations students must face, we can see why this theory is widely accepted.

As students, we confront a never-ending amount of stressors every single day of our lives. As an example, consider the first month back to college.

The mere adjustment of starting school again after a long summer can be a source of stress. Mentally, it is a form of a "culture shock" — leaving the familiar home and becoming reacquainted with a new set of faces and surroundings. Physically, it is exhausting — packing unpacking box after after box, straightening and organizing rooms.

When that's all done, it's a mad rush for the bookstore (lines, lines and more lines!) and the inevitable emptied pockets after ward. This leaves another worry — finding a part-time job for the semester. But students are sidetracked by changing a class and getting the appropriate signatures.

While scurrying around campus doing that, the signs for clubs and organizations, are clearly visible. The times and dates of the first meetings are assiduously noted. Meanwhile, homework is piling up, two books aren't in, and paying for them is still a problem.

It seems that the day is never long enough, with so much to do and not enough time to do it in. But each day will always be 24 hours long — it is how we manage those 24 hours that determines our mental, as well as our physical well-being.

George Gauvry, head Orthodist at Waulson Community Hospital in Burlington County, New Jersey, and a private Hypnotherapist and Reflexologist suggests a variety of ways to handle stress. "Since stress usually results from a combination of factors," he notes, "you must pinpoint and identify those factors as the first step in stress relief. If you feel irritable, disorganized, frustrated, or unusually tired, you're probably doing too much at one time." He recommends analyzing a typical week in your life and deciding which situations create your greatest pressures. If at all possible, eliminate or lessen these activities or relationships. This might be the time to give up a club, or refuse those extra hours at work when the boss asks. Some activities may not be directly related to stress, but by doing them you create future stress, such as watching television when you have a paper to type, or going out late when you hav to be up early for work the next day.

Gauvry suggests managing your time efficiently to get as much done as possible, without over-extending yourself, "The key is knowing your priorities. Be aware of the goals you are trying to achieve and let everything you do work towards those goals. Keep an accurate schedule book, and make a list every single night of what you have to do the next day, so you know your time is allotted appropriately."

"One of the best relievers of stress is exercise," says Gauvry. Not only is it preventative by helping circulation and muscle tone, but it is also a tremendous outlet for relieving existing stress." Jogging, tennis, swimming, and even walking are excellent and healthy ways to divert your attention from stressful situations.

Gauvry also believes that no matter how busy you are, you should always take time to relax and reorganize your thoughts. "Give yourself at least a half an hour every day to lay back and close your eyes in a peaceful and quiet surrounding. It is so important for the rejuvenation of the body and mind. Always give yourself this time — you're worth it. Gauvry uses hypnotic suggestion to induce relaxation and work out stressful problems with his clients.

Of all methods of handling stress, Gauvry firmly believes there is a base on which they all founded — positive self-concept. "If you feel good about yourself, and comfortable about the person you are, you'll deal with things in an open-minded and rational way. People and little things won't bother you as much and you'll be more aware and in touch with your own and others feelings.

Gauvry offers one final word of advice, "You only get one of you, and you've got to make yourself the most important person in the world. Love yourself and everyone else will, too."

How would Christ have treated an alcoholic? Most certainly as a person suffering from a horrible disease.

The creation of a climate in which the problem of alcoholism and other addictions can be solved is a responsibility in which all of us here at Villanova must assume a leading role. Knowledge of the true nature of addiction is of vital importance to educated men and women.

What better vehicle than education to change the infinite variety of unchrijstian attitudes which exist toward the use of alcohol and other drugs as they relate to the addicted. The goal of our future articles will be to dispel the myths which affect negative attitudes toward ten million suffering alcoholics and millions of other addicted persons in the United States.

Christian ethics dictate that we must love and help our brother. Understanding the rationale for our alcoholic brother's deviant behavior is a first step toward becoming a loving, helping person and an enlightened Christian.

The true and practical definition of an alcoholic is, "One whose drinking causes problems in any important area of his or her life." The significant areas of one's life depends upon one's situation and responsibilities. Areas of importance in one's life differ as do people from each other. For example, let us look at a single Villanova student, son or daughter of parents who are helping to support the student emotionally and financially. The significant areas of responsibility in that student's life would be family, school, friends and society as a whole, including the law. If on a rather continuous basis, this student's drinking adversely impacted on even one of these areas, the student would be diagnosed as an alcoholic.

Is the above statement too simplistic? No, it is not. Consider the disease of alcoholism and then think about how you have in the past come to the conclusion that someone has a drinking problem. You will agree that your conclusion was based on the drinking behavior of the person over a continuous period. Unless you have a medical background, it is difficult to see what alcohol has done or is doing to a liver, heart, muscle or brain. We can only depend for diagnosis on behavior most of which is deviant.

Consider the student who continuously cuts classes when hung over, who becomes violent with friends when drinking, who turns in late "D" average assignments when capable of prompt "B" assignments, who consistently upsets parents because of underage drinking and disorderly arrests or driving under the influence charges or who argues with family rules. This student is a problem drinker or an alcoholic. There is no difference. He may lie regarding late assignments but he is not a liar — he is an alcoholic. He may be physically abusive but he is not a mean person — he is an alcoholic. He may break the law on a continuous basis but he is not an unlawful person — he is an alcoholic. He may act disrespectfully to his parents but he is not disrespectful. He is an alcoholic and needs our help.

(Berenice C. Mauch is executive director of Alcoholism and Addictions Council of Delaware County and instructs a Campus Ministry mini-course on alcoholism at Villanova.)

Prof. Receives NSF Grant

By SUE FRENCH

The cutting edge of nuclear theory has carved a place for itself at Villanova in the research of Dr. James McNeil, assistant professor of physics. A recent recipient of a

Dr. James McNeil.

$31,000 National Science Foundation (NSF) grant, McNeil specializes in the study of atomic nuclei.

McNeil's NSF grant is attributable to a breakthrough achieved with collaborators at the University of Maryland and University of Colorado approximately a year ago. "Before, nuclei were characterized as what was thought to be a bag of particles moving slowly. Essentially, what we discovered was that it (a nucleus) was a mass of actual physical material," said McNeil. A nucleus is the positively charged mass within an atom, composed of neutrons, protons and other atomic particles."

McNeil's research is purely theoretical. "I only get my fingernails dirty when I sharpen pencils," he quipped. The professor added that Villanova's VAX computer system was ideally suited for his purposes.

Specifically, McNeil says his grant "is to seek out what role relativity plays in the structure of nuclei." Central to the research is the relativistic Dirac equation. This equation, is a synthesis of Einstein's theory of relativity and quantum mechanics. The objective McNeil hopes to attain is a formulation of "a relativistic description of the nucleus." He explained that such a theory is necessitated by the conclusions of his earlier research.

Fall Phila. Museum Exhibit

The Philadelphia Art Museum has announced its schedule of exhibits for the remainder of the year.

Now showing is an exhibition of 160 photographs from the collection of Philadelphians Harvey S. Shipley Miller and J. Randall Plumer, organized by the International Museum of Photography at George Eastman House, Rochester, New York. Outstanding for its connoisseurship, this group of photographs, assembled over the past ten years, is one of the most distinguished among private collections of photography in the country. Michael Hoffman, advisor to the Alfred Stieglitz Center, and Martha Chahroudi, assistant curator of photographs, will coordinate this exhibition which will be on view through November 27, 1983.

The major fall exhibition at the Philadelphia Museum of Art will be Design Since 1945, the first comprehensive exhibition and publication in this country to survey American and international mass-produced decorative arts and designs since World War II. The end of the war saw the development of industrial design as a profession, and a new generation of designers who addressed themselves specifically to the problems of mass production.

Organized by Kathryn B. Hiesinger, curator of decorative arts after 1700, the exhibition will open on Oct. 16 and run through Jan. 8, 1984

Vasey Play is Uplifting Experience

By JOHN F. LYNCH

"The Miracle Worker," a play by William Gibson, premiered Wednesday evening at Villanova's Vasey Theatre. The play, which is being directed by James Milton, stars Alisa Schulman as Helen Keller, and Margo Jones as the persistent Annie Sullivan.

Winner of a Tony Award in 1960 for best play, "The Miracle Worker" centers around these two characters and how they grow to love and respect one another. Sullivan is the teacher, friend of Keller, who is deaf, dumb, and blind. Throughout the play, we see step by step how Sullivan wins the war against Keller's furious outbursts and emotional instability. What made the original play so powerful was its stars (Patty Duke as Keller and Anne Bancroft as Sullivan).

As in the original play, Milton's production is successful because of the fact that its two lead actresses command your attention from start to finish. Both actresses perform well separately, but there's a certain magic that occurs when the stage is left to them together. The other characters seem incidental as Keller and Sullivan formulate and build their relationship.

"The Miracle Worker" is a sound production which has few flaws of note, but the one that comes to mind is that director Milton, at times, manipulates the audience's emotions too much.

"The Miracle Worker" at Vasey.

There are moments in the play when you're laughing and feeling sorrow at the same time. This fact is obvious in the first act, while in the second act, the dialogue is anything by happy. The extremes of these two emotions (laughter and sorrow) are effective in small doses but at one point this writer wasn't sure of the real effect that the director was trying to achieve.

What makes "The Miracle Worker" such a fine play stems from its powerful conclusion. Again, the chemistry between Jones and Schulman is apparent. While the audience remained still, the two actresses communicated through their own language expressing the love and respect that is the basis for the whole play. It was quite emotional and very effective.

Being only a freshman at nearby Radnor High School, Schulman has had sufficient acting experience prior to this role. Among her credits include roles in the productions of "The Sound of Music," "Fiddler on the Roof," and the "King and I."

In preparation for her role as Helen Keller, Schulman visited the Overbrook School for the Blind where she gained first-hand knowledge of the manner in which blind people are taught to read, write, and go about every day activities.

It is apparent that this preparation was beneficial to Schulman, for her character was quite realistic. Her performance was so intense that one sometimes forgot that she really could see. Schulman revealed no emotion as her face remained expressionless. Even when she was not the center of attention on stage, she continued to gesture and carry on as if mute. As the focal point of the play, Schulman portrayed Keller quite admirably.

A graduate student who recently arrived in the United States from Ireland, Jones can feel assured that her acting abilities are also impressive. Her innocent face is convincing and at the same time captivating. Whatever she says, the audience can only believe as throughout the play our trust in her character increases, until she finally gets that which she has longed for; full control and discipline of her student.

Milton, who is a guest director for this production, has directed for the New York Shakespeare Theatre and Cincinnati Playhouse, to name a few. His techniques are seen through the actor's performance, precise and professional.

Symbolism is one of the techniques which Milton uses effectively. Throughout the play, Sullivan's younger brother (Jim Cristy) appears to her to ask her why she isn't with him. The only thing, though, is that her little brother Jimmie, died years ago. Sullivan becomes obsessed in comforting Keller in the way that she wishes she could her brother who has gone "far, far away." The torment that's within her builds until she can relieve it through Keller.

Also symbolic is the key to Keller's room, which she has hidden from her family and Sullivan. The key is hidden because she doesn't want to go back into the room where she has been living in silence for ten years. By locking the room, she is locking her anxieties and fears away. Sullivan is the only one who can make her unlock those fears and when that moment does arrive, it is quite poignant.

"The Miracle Worker" is the finest production this writer has witnessed at Vasey Theatre. The fact that the theatre is small and the audience is literally part of the set adds to the close relationship which occurs between those of us in our seats and those on the stage.

The set and lighting play a significant role in the overall experience of the play. Many of the props are identical to those used in the original play and film which was released in 1962.

The roles of Keller's parents are played by Rosemary Gaffney and John Wood. Both are adequate in their portrayal of a couple who feel spoiling their troubled daughter is the only way of dealing with her problem. Wood is the proud, stubborn father who finds only faults in the efforts being made by Sullivan. He, though, like the audience, comes to realize that everything that Sullivan says is logical and to argue with her only makes matters worse. Gaffney is superb in portraying the desperate mother who has come to the point where she can't cope with the problem that faces her.

"The Miracle Worker" is truly a worthwhile play and overall is a fine production. It will be performed on Oct. 14-15 and 19-22 at Vasey Theatre.

Hitchcock Film Re-Released

By GARY R. DYER

Alfred Hitchcock's death a few years ago drew attention to the absence of some of his best films from theaters and television for the last decade. Now Hitchcock's 1954 suspense classic "Rear Window" has been re-released, and four more of his films are scheduled to follow, including his harrowing "Vertigo."

Young film fans may have heard and read enough about "Rear Window" to imagine they have seen it, even if they haven't. In the movie, photographer L.B. Jeffries (James Stewart), confined to a wheelchair in his small apartment by a broken leg, spends each day and night by his window. He watches his neighbors, (whose apartments share with his an inner courtyard): the composer who struggles to make perfect one song, the woman who sets her table for an imaginary lover, and the newlyweds who disappear into their apartment their first day there and haven't been out since. The entire film takes place in Jeffries' apartment and what he can see from it. He is regularly visited by his nurse and by his socialite girlfriend Lisa Fremont, played by young Grace Kelly. Fremont wants to marry him, but Jeffries feels their worlds are too far apart.

But evil infiltrates the world upon which he eavesdrops. The bedridden woman in the apartment across the courtyard nags and torments her salesman husband, which gets a lot of head-shaking from Jeffries, who is trying to avoid marriage. Then, one rainy night, the wife is gone, and the husband goes outside with his sample case several times. The next day he is tying up a huge trunk in the bedroom and wrapping a knife and saw in some newspaper. Jeffries is suspicious, but his girlfriend and a police detective friend insist that the wife may have simply left for a vacation. Plenty of nailbiting ensues for the moviegoer, right up to the neatly-orchestrated climax.

Alfred Hitchcock's suspense thriller "Rear Window" has been re-released in area theaters.

As with Hitchcock's films in general, the camera is the narrator, giving selected clues to character, hinting at hidden crimes, giving us the limited viewpoint of a confined man. But to the filmgoer of 1983, the great pleasure of "Rear Window" lies in rarer virtues; the dry humor, the familiar Hitchcock archetypes of the unassuming hero and beautiful heroine, and particularly the slow, careful pace and relaxed, confident tone.

"Rear Window" comments on the "voyeurism cinema uses" are only minor aspects of its design. Of course, Hitchcock makes his mandatory screen appearance (hint: watch the shots of the composer's apartment).

The cinematic storytelling here is perfect: the whole story is fitted into three days, and even the brief scene in the restaurant across the street is seen as Jeffries views it with his bincoulars from his wheelchair. Artifice is the delight of this film; despite the careful mimesis of observed reality by simulating a man's viewpoint, the whole huge set looks almost cartoon-like with its bland, stylised lighting. But art is artifice, and here a skilled puppeteer is in charge — a towering, fascinating craftsman, Alfred Hitchcock.

Class Acts With Distinct Styles

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

Lionel Richie's Spectrum debut last Saturday proved that the Grammy Award winner has made the full transition to solo performer. Richie, who had a string of hits with the Commodores, stated that he wasn't quite comfortable on stage, but it certainly didn't show. The hour and one half performance saw Richie perform songs from both his solo efforts and from his days with the Commodores.

From the opening "Truly" to the encore "All Night Long," the crowd embraced each of Richie's songs warmly. The former Commodore graciously returned the compliment saying that "the greatest pleasure in the world was coming back to Philadelphia. I spent 15 beautiful years coming through this town."

Whether it was playing piano during "I'm Easy" or strutting along the stage during a send-up of "Billie Jean" (I hope that Michael Jackson isn't here), Richie was a master showman.

As a prelude to "Wandering Stranger" Richie reminisced of his growing up and the confusion that sometimes reigned. "The Vietnam War scared me. The more I tried to understand, the more I didn't understand," Richie reflected.

While at times melodramatic, the concert was never downbeat. Richie's band is quite talented and the absence of the Commodores never surfaced musically. It's very tough to pick out specific highpoints of a concert such as Richie's where each song performed has at one time or another been a hit. But one moment that sticks in the mind is "You Are." Live, the song is so much better, as Richie's vocals made one feel exhilarated. He later brought out The Pointer Sisters (who opened up for him) during "Three Times A Lady" and for a superb rendition of the Doobie Brothers' "Taking It To The Streets."

"Diner" is the next film to be presented as part of the Villanova Cultural Film Series. For more info. call 645-4763.

Middle Kingsley stated in an interview that his solo career gives him a chance to "drive his car faster than he thought it could go."

If his Spectrum performance is any indication, many people are looking to go along for the ride.

One of this year's better concerts went without much notice last Friday when jazz violinist Jean-Luc Ponty performed at the Tower Theatre. Ponty is a musical genius who besides playing violin, is a synthesizer and keyboard whiz.

Ponty gained some commercial attention from his collaboration with Frank Zappa, but has yet to gain the recognition he deserves. It's quite probable that he never will either. Ponty concerts are rarely attended by anyone else except for a circle of die-hard fans who come to marvel at his professionalism and razor-like precision. There is no stage-show and rarely does Ponty speak, no less sing, unless it is to announce the title of a piece.

Ponty opened up with "Mystical Adventures" from the 1982 album of the same name. The group also eased its way through such compositions as "Egocentric Molecules," "Final Truth — Parts I and II" and the beautiful "Spiritual Love." It is almost futile to give the titles of the pieces since even Ponty afficionados often recognize them only as they are being played.

During the performance, this reviewer found himself drifting away due to the perfection and tranquility of the music.

There is nothing else needed, as Ponty's charm and charisma is conveyed through his music. Bass player Byron Brown and drummer Rayford Griffin are truly outstanding musicians who each performed solos that literally brought the crowd to its feet.

After the final encore, Ponty graciously took a bow and thanked the crowd. It was a splendid evening of music performed in its purest form by a master. Bravo, Jean-Luc.

Stop, Look, Listen & Drop by Charley's Place

By BILL SANTOS

"In this Age of Neon and Plastic, there are still those who take in traditional values: Decency, Patriotism and USDA Prime Steak. While the Unenlightened waste their lives in frantic pursuit of Gusto, we Epicureans choose the best Life has to offer, and take the time to enjoy it to the fullest. It has been said that extremists in pursuit of excellence is not a fault, and intolerance of the slipshod, the second rate, and the lejune should be the solemn duty of the discriminating taste. Return to that Golden Age when cookery was a fine art and service a profession; when the science of dining was a lifelong study. Welcome to the school of Charley's Place. Your server will enroll you in your first course." This is the philosophy according to Charley's Place.

And what is Charley's Place? It's a restaurant, it's a saloon, it's an experience. The dining area, decorated in dark green and royal blue, along with the low lighting and soft music, makes for an intimate setting suitable for family dining or a quiet dinner for two. The red plaid curtain, the cups and saucers, and rug beater on the walls add to the ambiance of this dining area.

A limited menu adds to the quaintness of Charley's Place. Primarily a steak and seafood establishment, other entrees offered include Stir Fried Cashew Chicken, Linguini Neptune Marinara and Chicken Cordon Bleu. Baked Fresh Flounder stuffed with crabmeat and Scampi Casino highlighted the seafood menu while their USDA Prime Filet Mignon is succulent.

For an appetizer, I had the fresh fried potato skins topped with crumbled bacon and melted cheddar cheese with a sour cream concoction for dipping, while my companion had the fresh fried zucchini accompanied by a cheese sauce. Both were delectable, although the zucchini was slightly undercooked. My companion and I followed our lavishly appetizer with pasta. The French onion soup was perfect with just a touch of sherry, and split pea with real bacon were enjoyed by both.

Being adventurous, I decided to have the special: Fettuccine Neptune Verde. This is a combination of shrimp, scallops and crabmeat sauteed and blended with a rich sauce of cream and parmesan cheese, ladled over freshly cooked spinach pasta. This portion was somewhat small, but the richness compensated for this. This also enabled me to delve into those magnificent desserts.

A dessert tray filled with luscious treats such as fresh California strawberries, Kahluachocolate mousse parfait, Grand Marnier custard trifle, Frausen Gladje ice cream and for the sweet tooth, the specialty of the house, Chocolate Windmill Cake made with a light graham cracker crust with alternating layers of rich, bittersweet chocolate fudge and heavy whipped cream. It was expensive but worth it.

Charley's Place offers a wide selection of coffees including "Our Charley's Coffee," a coffee with dark Creme de Cocoa and Amaretto.

After dinner, one can retire to the saloon,a quiet gathering place where one can relax among friends on the soft couches. Digital stock market returns, semi-nude pictures, and mechanical hand fans on the bar, add a coziness to the "living room" atmosphere. For you rockers, a disc jockey is on hand on Sunday nights.

The Marriott owned Charley's Place, (affiliated with JT's Place) which has eight other locations in the Northeast ... is planning to extend to Florida and California.

Charley's Place is located on Route 363 and Goddard Blvd. near the King of Prussia Mall (exit 25 on the Schuylkill Expressway).

Charley's Place is open Mon.—Thurs., 11:30 to 10 p.m., Fri. 11:30 to 12 a.m., Sat., 5 to 12 a.m. and Sun, 4 to 9 p.m.

Bond is Better Than Ever

By VICARI DUNCAN

This past weekend marked the return of the swashbuckling James Bond in Warner Brothers "Never Say Never Again." Wait a minute! Didn't I just finish watching Roger Moore perform his Superman antics as 007 only a few months back? I most certainly did but the fact is, that the latest of Ian Fleming's continuous saga stars the comparably ageless, (except for the toupee), Sean Connery.

Connery, at age 53, manages to recreate the traditional Bond role with boundless energy and sophistication. The opening scene is more action packed than previous Bond film as Connery participates in a one man war game with the intensity of an Afghan rebel. He is to be commended for keeping so fit and trim for the past decade or so, but don't expect the long time sex symbol to do any shampoo commercials in the near future.

"Never Say Never Again" consists of the same winning formula that other Bond films have used, including some "gratuitous sex and violence" which is characteristic of the ways British agent.

Sean Connery is back as Secret Agent 007.

What Bond film would be complete without the infamous Bond women, which stars Nicaraguan born beauty Barbara Carrera and deliciously seductive Kim Basinger. What is extraordinarily surprising is the return of the dreaded arch-villain Ernst Blofeld (Max Von Sydow) and his sinister accomplice Largo. This chapter of the Bond tale involves SPECTRE (Special Executor for Counter-intelligence, Terrorism, Revenge and Extortion) holding the world ransom with a devastating act of nuclear terrorism. With the operation spearheaded by Largo (superbly portrayed by Austrian actor Klaus Maria Brandauer), SPECTRE forces manage to intercept two nuclear supplied cruise missiles. As usual, 007 responds to rescue the civilized world from the destructive forces of evil, for Queen and country of course.

His mission first brings him to the French Riviera (isn't life rough?), where one of the most exciting chase scenes put on film takes place. After the evil Fatima Blush (Barbara Carrera) nearly disposes of our resident hero, Bond pursues her on a custom, turbo motorcycle. Skidding under trucks, flying up stairwells and jumping off ramps, Bond is led to a gang of SPECTRE agents. Needless to say, Bond gets away unscathed as usual. The scenery is breathtaking as the film was shot on location, in Nice, France. The gambling casinos, complete with a video game arcade palace, are entirely authentic.

The lecherous Largo in the meanwhile is undertaking measures to relocate the nuclear-armed cruise missiles. Resembling that of a Greek goddess, Largo's girlfriend Domino (Kim Basinger) attracts Bond like a magnet. Bond soon discovers the location of the missiles; an ancient underwater cavern called "The Tears of Allah." The pursuit leads them to the shark-infested waters of the Bahama Islands where Bond furiously fights off a number of the man-eating beasts. Needless to say, the nuclear devices are deactivated and the world secured from the eminent threat of a nuclear explosion.

Connery's performance is a reputable one, but one can not avoid comparing his with that of Roger Moore's. As might often be mistaken, the two are not arch-rivals and in fact have benfriends for the past twenty years. In the last decade, Moore has added a more cynical approach to the role, undoubtedly effective. Connery on the other hand chose to play the role with a no-nonsense attitude, contributing humor only when necessary. Naturally each of us has his favorite but that is not to take way from either of the actors who are both charismatic and likable.

Connery first appeared on the silver screen in 1957 when he starred opposite Lana Turner in "Another Time, Another Place."

Despite a midriff around his wrist, Connery still moves with the grace and agility that Ian Fleming had meant for Bond to possess. His portrayal as Britain's top secret agent is certainly plausible, more so than the cynical Mr. Moore. There is only one drawback in the film — the absence of the Bond theme music. But that is so trivial that one barely ever notices it. "Never Say Never Again" is simply good, clean Bond fun. Even if it is the last opportunity to see Connery in his most famous role, it is a rewarding experience to see him at his best.

MAKE YOUR VOICE HEARD

To best serve the interests and needs of the Villanova Community, the 1983-84 Student Government is conducting a campus-wide survey to determine student interest in a fall break. On April 15, 1983, the University Senate proposed that a week long fall break be scheduled for initiation in October of the 1984-85 academic year. The rationale behind the fall break is two-fold: First, to allow for a more balanced academic calendar and second, to alleviate much of the tension that mounts in the "long haul" from September to Thanksgiving. This would, however, require classes beginning before Labor Day - a practice which has become commonplace in many major colleges and universities throughout the country, such as Notre Dame and Scranton.

We need your support. This is the opportunity for you to make your voice heard and play an important role in the formulation of University policy. Please vote on either Tuesday or Wednesday between the hours of 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. at any of the following locations: Connelly Center Main Lobby; Bartley Cafeteria; all Resident Hall Dining Areas.

Proposed Academic Calendar: 1984-85

Ray Vaughn Steps Out

By T.C. BIGGINS

There's a legend of sorts in the music world in which Robert Johnson (an immortal bluesman) travelled out to a lonely and dis-olate crossroad of two major high-ways, dropped down on his knees and offered up a prayer to the good Lord to make him a better guitar player. Out of this 1932 expe-rience came the blues classic "Crossroads," which had lain dor-mant and largely ignored until 1967 when Eric Clapton and Cream dusted it off, turned it into a hit, changed the face of blues rock forever, and successfully se-cured Clapton's place in the guitar players hall of fame.

Even such contemporary greats as Eddie Van Halen, who report-edly wore out several copies trying to cop every riff, believed it to be a masterpiece. The trouble is, eve-ryone has gone off in all kinds of different directions amid a flurry of fascination with other styles and the rapid assimilation of var-ious (especially ethnic) influences. There has been no logical progres-sion from Johnson, Howlin' Wolf, Lonnie Mack, etc., to modern, contemporary guitar playing until now.

Deep on the horizon, riding high with his blues slung low, playing from the hip with both barrels blasting comes Stevie Ray Vaughn.

In a world where Eddie Van Halen has become so specialized that he's basically just a hired gun now, (witness Michael Jackson's "Beat It") and Eric Clapton is only a reflection of the shadow of his former self, (to the point that he shows up at charity concerts only to be cut to shreds and humiliated by more vital guitarists every time he steps on a stage) it's a much-neded revitalization of the six-strings that Stevie Ray Vaughn puts forth on "Texas Flood."

Backed by master boogie-men Tommy Shannon and Chris Lay-ton, who form the core of Double Trouble, Stevie Ray has done no-thing less than turn a whole new (wave) generation into the blues. He whet our appetites with his tasteful fusion of urban funk and honky tonk blues on David Bo-wie's "Let's Dance" LP and was on the receiving end of a private party staged by the Rolling Stones at Danceteria earlier this year.

Side one opens up with "Loves-truck Baby" and "Pride and Joy" which are both receiving exten-sive airplay. "Texas Flood" fol-lows with a brilliant guitar-vocal dual that points up Stevie Ray's ability to distill a whole load of influences into a style that is dis-tinctly his own. The man can make a standard lick sound as if it was just invented. "Tell Me" ab-solutely swaggers and proves he can wrench more tones out of his '59 strat than Leo Fender ever dreamed of.

"Mary had a Little Lamb" is a clever rewrite of the Buddy Guy classic and during the icy "Dirty Pool" his guitar growls down lower than a snakes belly in a buggy rut. But it's the sweet whine of "Rude Mood" and "I'm Crying" where his guitar has more angles of attack than a Lone Star Twister. The highlight of the album, however, is the gentle "Lenny," with it's slippery bent chords and inversion some-rsaults; it sounds like Jimi Hen-drix when he had the right combination of drugs working.

Stevie Ray Vaughn is playing the blues like few others, focusing on his roots and sticking with tra-dition, he never felt the need to bow down to all those '60's blues rock gods. So when it's all said and done, when they dust off the man-tle whereCharlie Christian, Eric Clapton, Jimi Hendrix, and Eddie Van Halen sit, Stevie Ray Vaughn will be able to hang up his '59 strat. No questions asked.

Parker is Worthy of Tower Appreciation

By NICK ANASTASIO

On a night when the Phillies were defeating the Dodgers for the National League pennant, the Tower Theater in Upper Darby was filled to near-capacity for a rock concert. Who was the artist capable of drawing attention away from the Phillies? None other than Graham Parker, of all people.

Considering that until the day before the concert, Parker's latest album, "The Real Macaw," was getting very little airplay, and that "The Real Macaw" still had not made it into the Top 40, filling the Tower was not an easy feat. But Parker did just that, and put on such a good show that the crowd brought him back for two encores.

John Eddy and the Front Street Runners opened the show. The sound was too loud (especially the drums), but this did not detract from the music. Eddy's style is a cross between Bruce Springsteen, Southside Johnny, and Elvis Pres-ley. Try to imagine Springsteen impersonating Presley while being backed up by the Jukes, and you get an idea of what John Eddy and the Front Street Runners are like. Unoriginal as it may be, though, the music is quite good, and Eddy has the personality and humility one needs to be success-ful in the music business. He even acknowledged that he was ner-vous since he was playing the Tower for the first time. At the end of their set, the crowd gave the Runners such an ovation that the band even did an encore.

The reason why artists go on tour and play concerts is to pro-mote new albums. Parker proved this by performing nine of the eleven songs from "The Real Macaw," while such standards as "Mercury Poisoning," "Endless Night," "Hit the Spot," and "Discovering Japan" were omit-ted from the show. After opening with "Just Like a Man" (which also opens "The Real Macaw"), Parker did three older songs ("Thunder and Rain," "Fools' Gold," and "Fear Not") and then got down to heavy promoting: the next six songs were all from "Real Macaw." Parker closed out his set with six older songs, including the ballad "You Can't Be Too Strong," which is a scathing at-tack on abortion; "Local Girls," perhaps his best-known song; "Soul on Ice," an early Parker tune; and the Jackson Five's "I Want You Back," which closed the set. When Parker left the stage, he had performed sixteen songs, seven of which were from "Real Macaw."

As for Parker and his band, they gave a first-rate performance. The breaks were sharp, and lead guita-rist Brinsley Schwarz's solos were clean. Songs such as "Local Girls," "Protection," and "Satur-day Night is Dead" served as his showcase. Mel Collins added a new dimension with his saxo-phone, and the rhythm section of drummer Gilson Lavis, bassist Kevin Jenkins, and keyboardist George Small kept everything to-gether.

Women Booters Run Over Royals

By MICHELE NAPOLI

In front of a large parents' wee-kend crowd, the women's soccer team displayed its talents with a victory against Scranton, 4-0. This victory was their fifth in a row.

Nova started off slowly in the first half but still dominated Scranton's defense. With 4:20 left in the first half, freshman Kathy Kolon broke through the Scranton defense and booted one past the Royal's goalie from twenty yards out. This shot ignited the team as Scranton's goalie was bombed with shots left and right from the Nova offense for the rest of the half.

The team came out charged up in the second half and imme-diately sent shots at Scranton's goalie. Four minutes into the se-cond half, Wildcat Ann Brennan crossed the ball from the far right corner to center goal where Denise Finn booted it in,making the score 2-0. Later in the same half, the Wildcats were granted a penalty shot, which was made by Cathy Ford. This shot saw Ford break the all-time scoring record.

This third goal got the Wild-cats' adrenaline flowing. Midway through the second half, Brennan had a breakaway at centerfield and dribbled it down for another Nova goal. Also, with twenty se-conds left, Nova had another breakaway but this shot was in vain. The team passed very well throughout the whole game while keeping Scranton's goalie busy.

Last week the team also played West Chester where they tallied another victory and boosted their winning streak to five games. The score was 3-1 with Ford scoring two and Kolon contributing one.

Brennan leads the team with nine goals while Kolon follows with seven.

Their next home game will be against Lehigh on October 29.

Soccer Mark Plunges to 1-8

Falls to Temple, Rutgers-Camden

By ELIAS A. PAPSON

This season has been a very rough one for the Wildcat soccer team and this past week's action went further to prove just that. They entered the week with a 1-6 record and came up empty in both games they played.

On Wednesday they lost a 7-1 decision to Temple and on Satur-day they dropped a tough 2-1 bat-tle to Rutgers (Camden). With these two losses, the team has lost its last three games and has seen its record drop to a dismal 1-8.

Steve Maillard, who now has three goals this season and three of the four goals scored by the team this season, scored the lone goal unassisted in Nova's loss to Temple. John Valickus put up the only tally for the Wildcats in their game against Rutgers. He got an assist from John Oblaczynski.

In the game Wednesday, Tem-ple hammered 21 shots on goal against goalie Paul Neugebauer and was able to score on seven of them. Those seven goals lifted Neugebauer's goals against aver-age from 3.3 before last week's ac-tion to 4.25. To date, he has managed to save a total of 40 shots in the four games he has played goalie, compiling a 70.2 save ratio.

In Saturday's game, Rutgers got 16 shots on goal against goalie John Grendi. Only two of those got past him. Despite the loss, Grendi was able to lower his goals against average from 3.0 to 2.8. This year he has had a little more success in goal than Neugebauer, managing to save a total of 71 shots in the five games he has played goalie, accumulating an 83.5 save ratio.

The Wildcat's third goalie, freshman Brendan Quinn, did not play this week.

So far Grendi is the only goalie to register a win for the Wildcats, a 1-0 decision against Eastern on September 28. It was also their only shutout of the year.

Water Polo Takes 2 of 3

By COLLEEN LYNCH

Villanova's water polo team re-cently began its season and is 2-2 early in league competition. "My goal this year is to make the cham-pionships," said Coach Dan Sha-radin."We've never done it before and I really feel we could make the championships."

The Cats defeated the U.S. Mer-chant Marine by 16-5 and Millers-ville, 15-14, avenging an earlier loss this season. St. Francis, a team that defeated the Wildcats by ten goals last year and placed in the top three in the Eastern Cham-pionships, provided tough compe-tition. Nova led going into the last few minutes of the game before St. Francis tied it up and sent it into overtime. Again, the Wildcats held a one goal lead until St. Fran-cis came back, sending the game into sudden death and eventually winning 13-12.

"Everyone is doing a fantastic job — they're really playing well as a team," Sharadin stated. "We don't really have individual play-ers; everyone is playing well."

One of the players Coach Sha-radin felt deserved recognition is Bill Rowland, who in his first year at shallow end goalie has become "one of the best goalies in the league", displaying "real natural ability" at his position.

"I'm really psyched for this sea-son," Sharadin continued. "I really believe we're better than many of the other improving teams."

The Cats host Princeton Oct. 14 at 7 p.m., one of the few home meets of the season.

Sue Lora

Suzanne Lora, the field hockey team's junior for-ward, snatched up her second Athlete of the Week Award for scoring a hat trick in a win against Drexel. Lora also received the award last year for three goals scored against Hofstra.

"If I had to pick one player," said Coach Diane Moyer, "who has done the best so far this season, it would be Sue Lora. She was good last year, but this season she's outstanding."

Lora, who has scored in both Villanova wins and one tie so far this season, spent part of the summer at the Olympic Development Camp with roommate Amy Hutchison. She practiced in the "C" camp and quali-fied for the select "B" camp, one of two in the nation.

"I was in better shape coming into this season than last," stated the award winner. "I got off to a slow start but I'm starting to come around now. The camp helped improve some of my skills, like moving to the ball and cutting more. Some games I'm off and others I'm right on, like the Drexel game. It was our first game under the lights so I guess that had something to do with it. Actually, the entire team has improved a lot but it doesn't show as much as it might because we're playing Division I teams."

"She's just doing so much better this year," Coach Moyer reiterated. "She's coming out of her shell. She's putting the ball in the cage and creating attack situations for us."

With two Budweiser Awards under her belt, and five goals this season, the Dean's List player's next accomplishment could be a hat trick on Athlete of the Week Awards.

Women Runners Fifth

Villanova's women harriers found a tough field to contend with this past weekend at the Paul Short Memorial Invitational.

The 5000 meter course they ran on at the campus of Lehigh University in Bethlehem, Pa., is the site of this year's NCAA Region Two Meet as well as the NCAA National Championships. As a result, a few more teams were there to "sink" their feet into the course," among them being teams from Oregon, Virginia, Florida and Northwestern Universities, as well as a number of strong East Coast teams.

The women finished fifth in the team standings with 135 points, paced by junior Mary Ellen McGowan's 10th place finish in 17:34.6. She was followed by freshman Lauren Searby (21st place in 18:14), sophomore Nancy Fleming (29th in 18:27.1) and freshmen Melissa Grubb (30th in 18:27.7) and Colleen Gallagher (42nd with 18:48).

Oregon took the team title with 55 points, led by senior All-American Kathy Hayes' victory, her time of 16:41 was a course record.

Villanova's point total would have been lower, except that Nancy Fleming's 29th place finish could not count in the final tally. In entering more than seven competitors in the race, Coach Bob Shoudt had been able to designate only seven as scoring runners. Fleming had not been one of those with a scoring entry, but her performance, said Shoudt, "indicates the very competitive situation we have on the team this year. There's no way to predict what will happen from meet to meet."

Shoudt was also pleased with several of the team's top performances: "Both McGowan and Fleming equalled their best times on this course, which they had run in the middle of November last year. Also Lauren Searby set a new freshman class record."

The Cats were also pleased with their results. McGowan explained, "Most everyone had put in a very hard week of training, with lots of mileage. We pretty much trained through this meet," Gallagher added, "Even though we were kind of tired, meets like this one will make us mentally and physically tougher for meets that we will rest up for."

Tomorrow the team heads down to their home course on Philadelphia's Belmont Plateau to defend their Big Five Conference title. The hilly terrain of this course should prove challenging to the Wildcats, who swept the Big Five title last year.

Tennis Team Up for Big East Play

By N. JOHN CAVUTO

The Villanova women's tennis team continued its success as it took to the road and won two out of three matches in raising their record to 9-2. After sweeping St. John's, 9-0, and nipping Fordham by 3-2, they finally wore down and wound up on the short end of a 5-4 final against Seton Hall.

On Friday, the Wildcats thoroughly outplayed a usually tough St. John's team, sweeping both the singles and doubles matches. The next day Nova traveled to Fordham where they swept the singles matches en route to the 3-2 win. Luba and Zenia Matkiwsky, and Trish Stairiker, won the singles matches with Stairiker playing very well to win hers in the third set. Zenia Matkiwsky also played superb tennis in her match.

"This is an exciting victory because it is the first time in my four years here that we have beaten Fordham, and Zenia really pulled it out for us," said team member Cynthia Burke.

Unfortunately, the Wildcats' five match winning streak came to a halt on Sunday against a tough Seton Hall team. Luba Matkiwsky and Burke were the only singles winners. The teams of Luba and Zenia Matkiwsky, and Stairiker and Burke, were victorious in doubles in the 5-4 loss.

It was an off-day for Zenia and Stairiker in singles. But on the brighter side, Luba maintained her unbeaten streak, which has lasted all season.

With this mid-season road trip out of the way, the women are looking forward to some rest. "We've faced the toughest part of our schedule and now can look forward to some easier matches in preparation for the Big East Tournament on Oct. 21-23," Burke commented.

Wildcat Volleyball Splits Two

Pounds West Chester in Three Games

By LAUREN SEAVER

On Oct. 4 the Villanova women's volleyball team challenged West Chester State University and the University of Pennsylvania in a tri-match at West Chester.

While Villanova began the match by defeating Penn, 15-12, the Quakers retaliated by pouncing on the Wildcats in the next three games, each by 9-15.

Although Villanova lost that match, they trounced West Chester in the first three games of the match, 15-7, 15-8 and 15-9.

At the height of their season, the Wildcats hold a 6-7 record. With approximately 30 matches left until the close of the season, Coach Dennis McGuinness sees improvement in the team with each successive match. "The team has been improving every week," he commented. "We expect to be very competitive by the end of the season."

According to McGuinness, the team is currently ranked fourth in the Big East. "We've been beating the teams that we should," he said, "but not those that we need to beat."

In a twelve-team event, the women will travel to the University of Delaware this weekend to compete in a Division I tournament. With firm optimism, McGuinness said, "I expect to win it."

Yet, the biggest challenge for the Cats will be at the Big East Tournament Nov. 18-20. Held in Providence, R.I., the tourney will probably be led by Pittsburgh. While the Panthers are currently a highly-ranked team, McGuinness feels "it is a fairly realistic goal that we can give them a run for their money."

If victorious in that tournament, Villanova will receive an automatic bid to the NCAA playoffs.

Field Hockey Drops Drexel

By BOB HELLER

The Villanova field hockey team defeated Drexel last week by a score of 4-1. The win was the second for the Wildcats this year. Their record now stands at 2-5-2.

Nova opened the scoring early in the first half as Sue Lora put a shot past the Drexel goalie to make the score 1-0. About six minutes later Drexel evened the score at 1-1. Nova scored two more times before the half ended to take a 3-1 lead. Juniors Bonnie Bell and Lora were the Wildcat scorers.

Five minutes into the second half, Lora scored her third goal of the night giving the Wildcats a 4-1 lead. This score held up throughout the remainder of the second half and the Wildcats were victorious.

Nova's defense unit of backs Linda Norton, Sherry Boyle and Cheryl Snyder, sweeper, Susan Antoon, and goalies Sue Ruff and Lisa Buschmann played a fine game, holding Drexel's offense to four shots. The offensive unit of Lora, Bell, juniors Danine DiBernardi, Robin Garczyniski, Kelly Harabin and Amy Hutchison produced 15 shots and four goals as the Cats completely dominated the game. Substitutes coming off the bench also played a role in the victory.

"It was a total team effort, everybody played well and the entire squad contributed to the 4-1 victory," commented Nova coach Diane Moyer after the game.

Intramural Round-Up

By MICHAEL F. IRONS

The intramural football league is in full swing with five teams having 3-0 records. The Wallbangers, 3-0 with a 98 point differential against opponents, leads the second place Low Riders, 2-0-1 and a 40 point differential, in the American Conference East. In the Central Division, the 2-1 Black Sheep, with 52 points against opponents, are ahead of the 2-0 Trojans and Depressants, five and 13 points respectively. SMF (3-0, 34 points) leads the Sunoco Express (2-1, 10 points) in the West.

In the National Conference East, the defending champions Moon Unit (3-0, 44 points) leads The Wave (2-0, 42 points). The Ancient Ruin (3-0, 53 points) is on top of the Central Division just above the 2-1 Gladiators with 59 points. In the Western Division the Lucky Charms (2-0, 12 points) are just behind the Stallions at 3-0 and 21 points.

The Wallbangers beat a younger Edge team 26-0 at Austin on Wednesday. The Moon Unit had an easy time against the 69'ers 20-0, also Wednesday. In other key games, The Wave beat America's Cup 22-0 and SMF shut out the Sunoco Express 24-0.

X-Country Sparkles

By PAUL MACCHIA

Last Saturday the Villanova men's cross country team competed in the tenth annual Paul Short Memorial Championships that were held in the Saucon Valley Fields in Bethlehem, Pa.

The Wildcats finished fifth in the team standings with 198 points. Last year's NCAA team champion, Wisconsin, finished first with 24 points, followed by Michigan (98), Georgetown (122) and Navy (192).

Freshman Gerry O'Reilly led the Wildcats with his 13th-place finish on the 10,000-meter grass course. His time was 30:44.9. Following O'Reilly was Brian O'Keefe, who came in 17th in 30:55.4. Marcus O'Sullivan (27th — 31:13.0), Anthony O'Reilly (50th — 31:47.4) and freshman Sean O'Neil (91st — 32:40.0) were the scorers for Villanova. J.J. Clark (33:35) and Bill Rahn also contributed to the team effort.

Intramural Football: It's a Name Game

By LARRY GOANOS

I want all of you intramural football heads out there, and I know there are a lot of you, to dig out your 1983 schedule and take a look at some of the bizarre team names which grace its cover. It never ceases to amaze me how people dream up these wacky monikers.

As I look at the schedule sheet, the first name that jumps out and grabs me is "Orlando Woollige and Company." Now to me this sounds more like an accounting firm than an intramural football team. I guess that the captain figures that if they weren't good enough for one Big Eight they'd make it in the other.

Editor's Angle

Somebody else had the idea of naming his team "America's Cup." This guy was probably swept up in the excitement surrounding the yacht races. In light of recent events, I wonder if the Intramural Department will let these guys play Australian rules football.

An old movie inspired another team to name themselves "Killer Tomatoes." Do these guys think that maybe they're ripe for an upset? I hope it wasn't them in the Connelly Cinema last week practicing their "screen passes."

The longest name on the list belongs to the "Stanford One-Eyed Wonder Worms." Whew. By the time these guys get done telling the referees who they are they'll find themselves getting hit with a delay of game penalty. I doubt if their scoring drives are as long as their name.

How about the "Hedge Trimmers?" I suppose their running backs are a couple of guys named Black and Decker. A name like this implies that the team is bush league.

Some teams must've had their skill level and chances of making the playoffs in mind when they came up with their names. "Ancient Ruin" sounds like a bunch of guys who expect to crumble down the stretch. "Athlete's Foot" must feel that their team could run away with it all. The "Wild Banshees" must feel that they've got a reservation in the playoffs. The most optimistic squad could be "Lucky Charms." They feel as if they're certain to be in a bowl at season's end.

On the women's side of the slate are some equally unique names.

The "Undertakers" could bury some teams this season. Even if they don't beat the good teams they're sure to take care of the stiffs.

The "Ex-cons" look like a rough bunch. The only way to beat these women is to confine their backfield; it's the best in the league — bar none.

The league also has some very refined names like "Buffy's Brigade" and "GFE Snuggles." Are these girls playing football or organizing a tea and cookie social? Perhaps they should take a hint from some of their male counterparts. "Legion of Doom" and "The Clubbers" are two men's league names which could easily serve to identify a neighborhood youth gang. I'd rather play "Buffy's Brigade" than "The Clubbers" anytime.

Well that about does it for the intramural name game. I was going to go out on a limb with my playoff predictions but I'm afraid that the "Hedge Trimmers" might cut it out from under me.

Cats Clip Eagles' Wings

By BETH WHITE

The Wildcat offense rallied behind two different quarterbacks to upset Boston College 20-9 and crown their Homecoming festivities last Saturday.

Freshman quarterback Kevin Ingram, in the first start of his collegiate career, completed five of eight passes for 81 yards and rushed for 18 more before leaving the game with a bruised ankle late in the third quarter.

Ingram set up the first Villanova score with a series of handoffs and passes to senior runningbacks Bill Connors and Don Ziesel, with Ingram himself scrambling away from the pressure of the Boston College linemen several times to gain extra yardage. Ingram's passing arm accurately nailed Connors on the BC 19-yard line to set up Ziesel's ten-yard burst up the middle to a first-and-goal situation for the Cats. Senior halfback Shawn Pasaman slipped around the right end of the Eagle's defense for the first Villanova touchdown.

Placekicker Chuck Bushbeck tallied the extra points for both Wildcat touchdowns, as well as contributing two field goals from 21 and 40 yards out.

The final Villanova score came in the fourth quarter with three-year starting quarterback Pat O'Brien at the helm of the Wildcat offense. The Eagles were pressed deep into their own territory by a 40-yard punt by junior Joe Borasiewicz and were able to weed their way through the Villanova defense, which held the Eagles inside their own ten yard line. The Eagle punter, John Cooper, belted a 49-yard punt which rolled dead on the Nova 44. The Cats then took nine plays to travel the remaining 56 yards to the endzone.

The touchdown came from a predominantly ground attack by the Cats, most notably on runs of 12 and 13 yards by fullback Don Ziesel and a one-yard plunge onto paydirt, also by Ziesel. Ziesel was also the leading ground-gainer for the Cats with 70 yards total rushing for the day.

Boston College seemed unable to mount a substantial offensive attack and was held tightly in check by the Cat defense. Outstanding defensive players for the Wildcats included linebacker Anthony Griggs with ten tackles, defensive end Tom Jensen with eight tackles and one tipped pass, safety Chris Yurkow with an interception in the Eagle end zone and left tackle Howie Long with six tackles, a tipped pass, a quarterback sack and a fumble recovery. Long was also named to the ECAC Player of the week and is this week's Athlete of the Week.

All of the points for Boston College on the scoreboard came from the foot of placekicker John Cooper, who booted field goals of 29, 25 and 20 yards.

Saturday's victory over Boston College became the first in the win column for the Cats and held to the "home-team jinx" in the series. For the last six years, Saturday's game included, the home team has won. The victory now ranks the Wildcats at 1-3, and Boston College at 1-2.

Villanova has the week off before regrouping to meet Cincinnati at home on the Astroturf for Parents' Weekend.

Security "Doing its Job": Rice

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

"Villanova security is doing a relatively good job," stated the Rev. Patrick Rice, O.S.A., vice president for administration. "But that good job has been taken for granted.

"In the last ten years on this campus, with the large enrollment, there have been very few serious incidents," Rice observed. "Other places have murders and rapes in the dormitories."

Commenting on an assault on a Stanford Hall resident in September, Dean of Students the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A. said, "Security doesn't get involved in a lot of issues. It's the way things work around here."

"We are a wide open campus," noted Rice. "People can come in and walk through. If someone has been a problem before, we see to it that we keep them out."

A computer terminal with an attached monitor valued at $2,500 was stolen Oct. 6 from the basement computer room in Mendel Hall. Computer facility supervisors notified Villanova security Oct. 12.

"Security needs to be called in to be effective," Rice claimed. "Why didn't they call us? Why wait a week?"

"Security is not involved with the computer room," added Rice. "People are paid to watch round the clock. It's not our responsibility.

"But people will rip you off anywhere. People assume otherwise," Rice said, "because we're a Catholic university."

The computer theft was one of three on campus in the last two weeks. On 10, a canvas bag containing tools was reported stolen from the women's locker room in the field house.

On Oct. 11, thieves stole $180 from a locker at Dougherty Hall belonging to two commuter students.

According to Rice, "Our security relationship with Radnor Township Police is very good. I don't know what we'd do without them. They work very well with our people, and try to alert us to any possible dangers."

Villanova security's relationship with Pennsylvania's Liquor Control Board is "a different ball of wax. We don't have much contact with them," Rice explained. "If something is going on, they warn us. That's the extent of our rapport."

Security currently employs 53 people, some part-time," Rice said. "We are making a strong effort to get younger men trained on the job so that they'll be with us a long-time," explained Rice.

"Young men start working for us and leave within six months," Rice stated. "They are disappointed in this place. They take insults and obscenities from both students and faculty. It saddens me to see this.

"Someone in St. Mary's Hall is even shooting BB's at security men," Rice said. "They've actually hit these men.

"No security man is popular. People don't like to follow regulations," claimed Rice.

"One of the reasons we lose men is that they are always considered to be at fault. They are only trying to do their jobs," Rice continued.

"We don't use physical contact, either. None of our men carry weapons. If there's a plus there, it's that they know how to handle problem people.

"The older men know how to handle difficult situations. You can't afford to ignore that expertise," concluded Rice. "I hope students would recognize that it is preferable this way. I would prefer to see an increased participation of students in the security force. It's for their benefit as well as ours."

Philly Hosts Grad School Forum

By DIANA K. SUGG

Representatives from over 80 colleges and universities will gather at one of the first graduate education forums ever held in this country to help those considering graduate school gain important, firsthand information. This new service, the "Forum on Graduate Education," will be held at the Franklin Plaza Hotel, in Philadelphia, Oct. 28, from 11:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. The admission fee of $3 is payable at the door.

The forum will include workshops on admissions, costs, curricula and career opportunities, as well as on test preparation. In addition, prospective students will be able to meet and talk with admission officers, faculty members and deans from graduate schools all over the country.

Dean of Villanova's Graduate School, Dr. Bernard Downey, described the forum's main purpose as "to provide comprehensive knowledge" about graduate school to interested students. He stressed that its main advantage is the large number of schools that are attending, and encouraged Villanova's students to take advantage of it.

This new educational service is being offered for the first time this fall in Philadelphia and San Francisco. It is sponsored by the Graduate Record Examinations Board and the Council of Graduate Schools in the United States. If successful, the program will be expanded, most probably into the Midwest and South.

Downey commented that there was a "perceived need" for such a program, and both the Graduate Record Examinations Board and the Council of Graduate Schools in the United States have been discussing the problem for four or five years. "More and more jobs are dependent on a specific advanced eduction," commented Downey, "and up to this point, all that students could rely on for information were the various college guides." Many schools have hosted similar forums, but they have been on a much smaller level, with only 25 to 30 schools in attendance.

Three different workshops at the forum will offer a range of "how to" advice. One, scheduled to run from 12:30 to 2 p.m. and repeated at 4:30 to 6 p.m., will focus on the graduate admissions process and financial aid. Besides discussing the essential components of an effective letter of application, the representative will describe the qualities, both academic and personal, which they look for in a prospective student.

Another workshop, running concurrently, will deal with the areas of curricula, costs and career opportunities among the following four subject areas: biological sciences, humanities, social sciences and physical sciences. Participants in this workshop will learn what assistantships and fellowships are available and the kind of competition they will face in their field.

In addition to these is a test preparation workshop, set for 2:30 to 4 p.m. The effect of guessing and the amount of time spent per question, as well as test taking tips, will be discussed.

Participants in the forum will also be able to purchase new practice materials recently published by the Graduate Record Examinations Board. In addition to providing "beneficial" information, these materials will familiarize the student with the format and directions of the test.

Present at the forum will be representatives of well-known private schools such as Columbia University's Graduate School of Arts and Sciences, larger state-supported schools such as the University of Maryland, and religious affiliated schools such as Loyola University in Chicago. Local schools, including Villanova, as well as those as distant as the University of California, will also be in attendance.

Senate Convenes Today

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The University Senate will convene for its second 1983-84 Senate meeting today in the West Lounge at 4 p.m. On the agenda is the Academic Policy Committee report on the proposal "that the University institute a grading system which includes minuses."

The proposal was remanded to the Academic Policy Committee at the April 4, 1983 Senate meeting. Objection to the proposal stems from the students' perception that minuses lower the grade point averages, although it is stated that a 3.2 grade point average with minuses used in the grading system looks better to a prospective employer or Graduate School Dean than a 3.4 grade point average with only pluses incorporated in the grading system.

The numerical equivalency for a system incorporating pluses and minuses ranges as an "A" equals a 4.0, "A-" equals a 3.7, "B+" equals a 3.3 and a "B" equals a 3.0, and so on.

The Student Goverment will address the Senate at today's meeting concerning the Resolution US8238-7-1 "that the University institute a week-long fall break."

Ballots from the Student Government's campus-wide survey to determine students' views on the resolution will be tallied for the meeting. The survey will reveal the students interest in a fall break and response to starting school before Labor Day.

The rationale behind the resolution for the Fall Break advocates is to allow for a more balanced academic calendar and to alleviate much of the tension that mounts from September to Thanksgiving.

The Vice President of Academic Affairs, the Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., will give a clarification of the policy concerning the hours that Falvey Library will be open.

It was agreed upon by the Library Committee in October 1982, that the library should add four hours to its schedule Friday and Saturday nights, allowing the facility to remain open until 9 p.m. During midterms and finals, the Committee recommended that hours be extended until 1 a.m. Sunday through Thursday.

Other agenda items include a report from the Senate Budget Committee, to be given by Senator Alvin Clay and an announcement, stating the result of the recent faculty-wide election for the one-year term on the Senate Budget and Tenure Committee.

German Club

The German Club will have a meeting in the Haverford Room of the Connelly Center at 3:30 on Oct. 26. Plans for the Fall dinner and weekly German-speaking meetings are on the agenda. New members are welcome.

Special Olympics Has Compete at V.U.

By PAULA SULLAM

More than 250 handicapped children, who had qualified from all over Eastern Pennsylvania, competed in the Special Olympics Athletic Tournament at Villanova University last weekend.

The tournament, sponsored by Villanova University, the Sun Company, Bryn Mawr Trust Company, Coopers and Lybrand and the Main Line Chamber of Commerce, in conjunction with the Pennsylvania Special Olympics, also included skills and training sessions for the participants.

Student Chairperson of the 1983 Special Olympics, Maria Rullo, stated that "the whole weekend was a large success. This year brought out the most athletes and volunteers we have ever had at Villanova."

More than 250 athletes competed and approximately 400 Villanova students were involved in the weekend event. About 250 of these students were "huggers," each of whom devoted the day to working one-on-one with a particular child. Others worked in the area of organization and food service. Moreover, there was a great deal of cooperation among the fraternities and sororities of Villanova. These groups conducted clinics and games for the contenders.

The Special Olympic athletes competed in three events. There was a soccer skills competition and a frisbee competition, and in addition, for the first time this year, there was a one kilometer and a three kilometer run which were not competitive. Steve Gall, director of sports and training for the Pennsylvania Special Olympics, stated that Villanova was the first to ever include the run in the day's events. "It was a sort of trial for everyone involved," Gall added. Since there were three athletes in each heat, each of the athletes received a medal (gold, silver or bronze) for the events he participated in.

To add to the festive atmosphere, on Sunday the Philly Phanatic, the 76ers Big Shot, E.T., Smurf, Big Bird and the Villanova Wildcat were on hand to greeet and cheer on the athletes. Another celebrity, Howard Eskin, of KYW-TV Sports, served as the master of ceremonies for the Sunday events.

"The state of Pennsylvania has the largest Special Olympic athletic participation in the United States," according to Steve Gall. For this reason, the state of Pennsylvania has both an Eastern and Western Competition. The Western Competition will be held on the weekend of Oct. 22 and 23 at Slippery Rock University.

Alcohol Policy's Effect on Campus Activities

By BOB SMITH

"The new alcohol policy is a direct result of pressure put on the administration by the state Liquor Control Board," according to Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for Student Life. "The result is that no student organizations have been able to dispense alcohol at on-campus functions, nor any student allowed to 'bring their own'."

Exceptions to this policy have been made at 'T.G.'s' held in St. Rita's Hall and Austin Hall. Students who attended these parties were required to show identification, stating that they are 21 years of age, at the door.

A comparison of campus life last fall to that which exists under the current alcohol policy has been released.

Last fall, WKVU sponsored dances featuring a deejay in the lounges of the large residence halls, which reportedly drew a large attendance. Concerts held in the Dayhop were sold out days in advance and a Villanova Union sponsored dance held in the Villanova Room at the end of Orientation Week was attended by over 200 students. Although the student-sponsored events which suffered from poor attendance last fall were two Union-sponsored concerts held in the Field House, the blame for the poor attendance at these events has been placed on poor Field House accoustics.

The attendance at this year's on-campus events has been lower than that of last year. A deejay dance held in the Dayhop reportedly drew no more than a dozen students and another Dayhop dance featuring the music of Silencer, a popular Jersey shore club band, drew a similar crowd. Eighteen tickets were sold for a Mad Hatter dance that was held in the Villanova Room last Friday night.

Villanova Union President Tom Belmont is "disappointed but not surprised by the lack of student support." A poll held by the Union showed that students would rather go off-campus for their weekend entertainment rather than support "dry" events.

"I am not happy with the new policy, but there is nothing that can be done at the moment. The Union simply cannot go against administration policy," stated Belmont. "In the meantime, we are doing our best to provide students with decent on-campus weekend entertainment. Whether or not they support it is another matter."

Neville's response to the low attendance at on-campus events reflects "disappointment at the lack of student support at on-campus functions. It seems that the prevalent attitude among students is

Alumni To Be Honored at Medallion Dinner

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

Five Villanova graduates will be honored tomorrow night at the fourth annual College of Arts and Sciences Alumni Medallion dinner.

Those to be honored are: Theodore W. Macri, 1958; Robert J. Lombardo, 1963; Paul F. Fennelly, 1967; Rosa M. Gatti, 1972; and Leo J. Hickey, 1962.

Baccalaureate degrees are also to be conferred upon: James J. Biemer, M.D.; Pasquale C. Damico, D.D.S.; Thomas F. Flynn, M.D.; Murray H. Glickman, M.D. George M. Hamilton, D.D.S.; and Jeffrey I. Komins, M.D.

Macri graduated from Villanova with a B.A. in English. While a student, he served as business manager of both the Lynx and the Belle Air.

He is currently assistant to the president of the Doubleday Publishing Co., and has served as a director of the American Book Awards.

Lombardo, recipient of a bachelor's degree in social science, also graduated from the Seton Hall School of Law in 1966, and practiced law from 1967 to 1969. From 1969 to 1974 he was the general artistic administrator of the New Jersey State Opera.

From 1972 to 1978 Lombardo was the general artistic consultant of the Opera Orchestra of New York at Carnegie Hall, New York.

In 1970 he formed his own artists management firm, and acts as personal manager of more than 150 of the world's leading opera and concert performers.

Recipient of a bachelor of science degree in chemistry at Villanova, Fennelly received a Ph.D. in physical chemistry at Brandeis University in 1972.

Presently, Fennelly is a group scientist and manager at the Environmental Measurements Department of the GCA Corporation, Bedford, Ma.

Gatti received a bachelor of arts in modern languages. She became the first woman sports information director in the country in 1974 at Villanova. In 1977, Gatti moved to Brown University as S.I.D.

In 1980, Gatti was named public relations director of the Entertainment and Sports Programming Network (ESPN). In 1982, she was promoted to vice president of communications at ESPN.

Hickey is the director of the Peabody Museum of Natural History at Yale University. He received a bachelor of science degree in geology, as well as receiving a Ph.D. at Princeton University.

Beimer, who was a pre-med. major at Villanova, received his medical education at the Temple University School of Medicine, completing his studies in 1957. He is currently an associate pathologist at St. Joseph's Hospital in Tampa, FL.

A biology major at Villanova, Damico received his D.D.S. degree at the Temple University School of Dentistry in 1964. He is a partner in Damico and Associates, a family dentistry group.

Flynn was a pre-med major, and received his M.D. in 1948 at Hahnemann Medical College. He is currently affiliated with Underwood Memorial Hospital in Woodbury, NJ.

A graduate of Jefferson Medical College, Glickman was a resident at Jefferson Medical College Hospital in Philadelphia to 1956.

Hamilton is a 1936 graduate of the Georgetown Dental School.

A 1977 gradute of Hahnemann Medical College, Komins is a practicing obstetrician and gynecologist affiliated with St. Francis Hospital and Wilmington Medical Center in Wilmington, De. He is also currently an associate professor in the department of obstetrics and gynecology at Thomas Jefferson University.

Weekend Celebrations

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

Villanova Alumni will be returning to the campus today for the beginning of the 1983 Homecoming Weekend.

The activities began last night with the selection of the Homecoming Queen and continue tonight with an Alumni Cabaret at the Radnor Valley Country Club.

Sponsored by the Villanova Varsity Club, the Cabaret, scheduled to begin at 8 p.m., is open to all undergraduates aged 21 and over (because of LCB regulations), and will feature music by "Stoutheart."

Tomorrow's schedule includes scrimmages by both the men's and women's basketball teams in the field house at 9 a.m. and noon respectively.

A parade from Bartley Hall to Mendel Field with the Marching Band and Homecoming Queen and her court will precede the 1 p.m. crowning ceremony.

Following the ceremony, the Homecoming Irish Festival will begin, featuring Irish dancers and music. Villanova's band and singers will perform, along with the ROTC drill team. All students are encouraged to attend. Several student groups will be selling items at booths on Mendel Field.

The fourth annual College of Arts and Science Alumni Medallion Awards dinner and dance is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Saturday. Five outstanding graduates will be honored at the black tie affair to be held at the Eagle Lodge Convention Center.

Homecoming: The Last Chance?

A more appropriate title for this weekend might be Homegoing weekend.

If the comments we heard this week from a few students is truly indicative of the actual intent of the majority, it is going to be a Homecoming weekend virtually devoid of students. Many will take the opportunity to return home and study for next week's midterm examination crunch. Others will simply treat this weekend like any other at Villanova and go their own way with the usual crowd. But for those who choose to stay, please enjoy the events that the Alumni Office have nobly put together for everyone's pleasure.

We recognize that once again it is a Homecoming without football and that Homecoming weekend is tarnished because of that. But one should realize that football is not necessary to fulfill the event's purpose — the bringing together of alumni, students, faculty and administrators — well, perhaps three out of four. Don't expect to see your friendly administrators or Augustinians there. Several administrators have questioned the necessity of even having Homecoming and are actively seeking to eliminate it after this year. It figures.

So go see the different men's and women's sporting events. Attend what tailgates you think you can. Watch the crowning of the Homecoming queen and join in on the Irish Festival. Enjoy it now,it may be the last Homecoming weekend at Villanova.

A "Special" Day

Just when it seemed imminent that we'd all be mired into the myriad of problematic issues confronting the University (i.e. football, the alcohol policy, ad nauseam), along comes a breath of fresh air to temporarily relieve us of our worries and reaffirm our faith in humanity (or at least Villanova).

This breath of fresh air came in the form of the Eastern Pennsylvania Special Olympics Tournament, held at Villanova for the fourth consecutive year, and those 400 or so students who gave so unselfishly of their time to make the Tournament such a rousing success.

We at the Villanovan commend and applaud all those involved: committee members, huggers, food dispensers, and the fraternities and sororities and other groups who operated booths for these special athletes.

Perhaps it is only human nature to feel good about helping one less fortunate than oneself. We believe, however, that this is a classic illustration of those who were helpers actually receiving more than those who were helped.

Howard Cosell: TV Pollutant

Pollution, noxious fumes and toxic waste have been the targets of environmentalists for years. They want to clean our air and make America a better place to live and breathe in. We wish the environmentalists luck, because Americans will benefit from their work. But we believe there is another major pollutant that these environmentalists have overlooked — Howard Cosell.

This man saturates the air with non sequiters, his opinions (based on no knowledge), and sentences filled with multisyllabic words incorrectly used. Howard Cosell pollutes the air on television with heaps of verbal trash. Many American sports fans have been forced to turn off the sound on their TV sets in a desperate attempt to save their sanity. Cosell is driving Americans to violent acts. The viewer's mind has been turned from passivity to violence; some viewers have become physically ill. Others have moved to soccer and wrestling in an attempt to save their families and themselves. Cosell is the Love Canal of broadcasting.

Americans, environmentalists and TV viewers, save yourselves. Join the groundswell movement to fight pollution on TV sports broadcasting. Write the network! Call your local TV station! Write the advertisers! Do something to save America from Howard Cosell.

Letters to the Editor

Mature Social Policy Needed

To the Editor:

Recently, I had the opportunity of attending Parent's Weekend, and I must say I feel very privileged that my son, Louis Di Cerbo, is a freshman at Villanova. The best correlation I can give you is that the students and faculty of Villanova remind me of Disney World. The young men and women are clean cut, full of enthusiasm, and are living in college surroundings that are ideal. While attending Parents' Weekend, however, I couldn't help but observe the increasing concern, at almost "epidemic proportions," over the alcohol policy that has been adopted by the Office of Student Life: Alcohol: No Choice — "It's The Law."

From my perspective as a concerned parent, I would like to suggest that the Administration consider a more progressive policy than "Alcohol: No Choice." It is my opinion that if the young men and women of Villanova are asked to contribute to the development of a liveable policy that would allow them to openly enjoy beer and wine at social functions, they are able to assume the responsibility for their personal conduct in a fashion that would make us all very proud.

Currently, the present "no alcohol" policy on campus is causing students to leave Villanova for social functions. This subjects them to travel and in some cases freshmen and sophomores do not have cars. They have to find places off-campus, which are quite limited for young adults away from home and, failing that, are subject to the very strict law.

I have taken a survey of many parents in my community whose sons and daughters are attending various universities. I was shocked to find out that Villanova was the only school which had a "No Alcohol Law."

As a concerned parent, I would be most appreciative if the Villanovan would take the initiative by spearheading a series of discussions on how the students of Villanova can develop a social policy that will allow its students to enjoy having the opportunity to meet each other, socialize and enjoy college life with a mature social policy.

In sum, I trust the young men and women of Villanova to self-govern themselves while on campus in such a manner that the administration can be proud of its student body.

Louis P. Di Cerbo II

Villanova Day Huge Success

To the Editor:

The Villanova Day at the Temple-East Carolina game this past Saturday was a huge success. The large crowd of students, alumni, former football players, coaches and friends of Villanova football not only gave witness to the support and need for the return of football, but it did that in a warm, friendly and courteous manner.

Although there was plenty of beer both before and after the game, the students, in particular, were well behaved. The sincere thanks I received from hundreds of students made the entire event worthwhile for me, my partners, and my friends.

It is unfortunate that no one from the administration accepted my invitation to be present. It would have taught them a lesson — you can drink and love football and still be a responsible member of the human race. We had good, clean, wholesome fun and that is part of life and education.

I am happy to be a part of that wonderful group of students and alumni who know how to advance a serious cause with humor and that, too, is part of life and education.

PKA Apology

To the Editor:

The brothers of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity would like to apologize for any inconvenience at our gatherings last weekend. Due to circumstances that were both unforeseen and beyond our control, unpopular decisions had to be made. Be assured that this will not happen in the future. We would like to extend to the Villanova community a most gracious invitation to our upcoming activities.

Villanova Day at Villanova?

To the Editor:

This past Saturday afternoon, my friends and I decided to find a place to socialize.

We decided to go to "Villanova Day," which was located about 15 miles away from the Villanova campus.

Upon arriving, we could not believe our eyes: free football tickets, a flowing beer truck, and enthusiastic Villanova students. (I guess

Beware the "Free" Election

Last week's paper detailed recent events in El Salvador as seen by a prominent member of the guerrilla forces in that country. One of the most interesting points in the article by Diana K. Sugg was the statement made by the guerrilla leader that one of the guerrilla's first goals is "to establish a broad-based provisional government which could lead to the country to free, democratic elections."

Apply this reasoning to the United States and we get the following: the Republicans after losing to Carter in 1976 or the Democrats after losing to Reagan in 1980, instead of simply preparing for the next election, go underground, carry out guerrilla warfare and terrorist acts, and demand that a provisional government be formed before the next election is held. But the guerrilas in El Salvador say they are justified in their action because the incumbent government is not democratic, i.e. it does not hold free elections. "Free" is important here because many countries hold elections which are not "free." The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (U.S.S.R.) is a good example.

Apparently, though, the guerrilla leader failed to mention the election that was held in El Salvador in March 1982. That election was probably one of the most heavily monitored the world has ever seen in recent years.

Here, it appears, was the opportunity of a lifetime for the guerrillas (representing 60 to 70 percent of the people opposed to the government, according to the guerrilla leader in the Villanovan) to sweep into power by peaceful means. Instead, the guerrillas threatened to murder anyone who went to the polls that day. As we all know, the incumbent government won by a landslide.

The question then is why did the guerrillas with "60 to 70 percent" of the electorate refuse to vote in an election where votes were cast in private and the free world was monitoring the event in minute detail?

Either the guerrilla leader's opinion poll was incorrect, or he may have inadvertently given us the answer when he stated that he "considers his family to be not only his parents, but also the people of El Salvador."

Consider for a moment the implications of the statement, and apply it to your relationship with certain of your political leaders such as your mayor, representative, senator, or president of your choice. Does the average U.S. citizen wish to be a family member of his or her elected public official? It is rather doubtful for the reason that most U.S. citizens by tradition are highly suspicious of politicians, especially those who like to play God.

Hopefully, the visit of the El Salvadoran guerrilla leader proved to be a worthwhile educational experience for all those who took part. I am sure we all look forward to hearing more fr m the sponsoring organizations (the Progressive Students Coalition, Honors Program, Peace and Justice Program, history department, philosophy department, and Common Heritage Institute) about the vital importance of free, democratic elections in maintaining a free and vigorous society. The dictionaries used in many countries of the world today to define such concepts as freedom, democracy, and elections lack universal application. So, for reader or listener, caveat emptor; let us all beware.

Controversies

To the Editor:

As this year continues, we find ourselves in one of Villanova's most controversial years. What are these controversies? First, we have the football issue. So far we have heard views from the Board of Trustees, Alumni, and the Student Government yet there has been no decision. Let us see how long we can juggle this issue around! Villanova must realize that the students need some social life and there is no bigger social life in the fall than "Football Saturdays." Everyone who wants football back has put everything on the line for its restoration. Students have agreed to pay $35 each year for tickets and other funds. The alumni has done everything but sign their lives away: promising $100,000 a year in tickets, plus other donations. Even this past week they sponsored a "Villanova Day" at the Temple game. What more must we do?

Secondly, there is the new alcohol policy. No alcohol shall be on thy campus! As a student heavily involved in school organizations, I have heard all reasons for this new policy and I must honestly say that I can understand the University's stand but I don't believe that is the only problem. The problem is if the students can't drink on campus, what can they do on campus? Since the University doesn't sponsor any alcohol parties they must sponsor other parties - I am not saying "Day Hop" parties. I'm talking about concerts, big time dances, and other social gatherings which involve at least a thousand people and do not revolve around alcohol. I feel that this is very important because I find that student attitudes have been poor. Most students find it hard to believe that a college campus can be so dead. Freshmen are disappointed that college life isn't all they expected. All of these views have been expressed in editorial after editorial.

Another concern is the fact that the students have to travel such distances to have a good time - Philadelphia, Wayne, King of Prussia, Bryn Mawr . . . etc. Everytime they have to step off this campus one has to wonder if they are going to make it back. Yes, I know that a student is supposed to be responsible, but why doesn't the school make this responsibility a little easier.

What I find so hard to take is that being at a Catholic University where the famous line is "love thy neighbor as thyself", Villanova is so hypocritical. I find the Villanova Board of Trustees very selfish. Thinking that football can only "hurt" the University! No alcohol - it seems funny that Villanova is the only University with this strong stance. Let's face it, it is a part of life which everyone must experience. Maybe Villanova should forget about money, another evil, and its reputation "scholastically" and give a little.

For football is a great pastime and a social life is something that makes a person complete, because a person can't be all academic and spiritual. So as my finale — I love my school, but I would like to ask it to forget about itself and do a little for its people, its students for once. After all, one must remember a University is nothing without its students.

Villanova Day

the LCB wasn't invited). What more could you ask for: a great atmosphere with Temple cheerleaders cheering on a partisan Villanova crowd.

I guess the message I am trying to get across is, why can't we have a "Villanova Day" at Villanova?

The advantages are endless. This would provide a better social life for the students, increase contributions from the alumni, strengthen and circulate Villanova's credibility and generage the community around Villanova to come together and make Villanova a more enjoyable enviroment.

It is so sad we don't have football. This school has so much potential and we want to take that potential and make it a reality.

Let's come together and make it happen.

Group Reviews Foreign Policy

By DEBBIE SOKOLOWSKI

In support of a resolution to end the United States policy of constructive engagement to the Republic of South Africa, Dr. Alfred Moleah, the assistant of African Affairs at Temple University, spoke for the Villanova Political Union. Moleah spoke in place of U.S. Congressman William Gray who was unable to keep his scheduled appearance.

South Africa is ruled by a minority white government, the minority being barely 20 percent. The minority government policy, called apartheid, which rules under the right of so called "white supremacy," imposes "harsh" regulations upon the native Africans. These include racial quotas, visas to visit the white sections of the city or to ride a bus or train, housing restrictions and imposed living hazards such as contaminated water or food shortages. This, as the Liberal party member John Crouthimal stated, "is just short of Nazi Germany."

Moleah's speech revolved around the point that the U.S. government's policy in South Africa, has taken a turn for the worse since the Reagan administration has taken office. "Previous to this, the Carter administration had acknowledged the suppression and had started Apartheid moving away from racial discrimination, and the South West African People's Organization had taken hope," said Moleah. But now "the Reagan administration is backing this government." Reagan has defended the administration by stating that White South Africa stood by the U.S. in both World Wars, "which is false information" commented Moleah, and that the U.S. must support Apartheid because of a communist threat. "But the actual reason that the U.S. supports this government," said Moleah, "is that the U.S. depends on South Africa for minerals. These minerals the U.S. may receive now, but when the Black South Africans revolt, as they re going to, the U.S. will never be accepted by the new government. The U.S. should protect itself by helping South Africa and not supporting the apartheid."

After Moleah's half hour speech on the U.S. policy in South Africa, each of the political parties represented, the Liberals, Conservatives and Moderates, had an alloted three minutes to express their party's views on the issue.

Many valid points were made by all of the political parties. The stand points of each party were made clear by each spokesperson.

Logue Appointed to U.N.

By SARAH BELSON

Villanova University Professor John Logue was recently appointed a United Nation's Delegate representing the World Association of World Federalists. As a United Nations representative, Logue's duty will be to make statements on behalf of the World Association, as well as to promote the association's objectives.

The World Association of World Federalists, of which Logue is also a Council and Executive Committee member, is a 20 nation organization working towards "general and complete disarmament . . . and creation of an authority with adequate enforcement powers," stated in the association's declaration.

One of their specific goals is to change the United Nations' power structure to one of greater international power and fairer representation. "The three things I'd like to see are reformation, strengthening and restructuring," said Logue.

As part of the reformation, the association advocates equal representation of member states, the abolition of veto power within the United Nations, a reduction in the size of all current military forces and an overall realization of interdependence among nations, according to Logue.

In conjunction with its firm stand against nuclear armament and the arms race, the association would like to see a committee, similar to the Brandt Commission, formed within the United Nations. The recommended committee to be appointed by the Secretary General of the United Nations, would be comprised of non-political, independent representatives, possibly retired statesmen from different countries.

It would be this committee's responsibility to decide what actions are necessary to end the arms race as opposed to what is going to be accepted by the general populace. "They should concentrate on what would work, what can stop the arms race," stressed Logue.

Correction

In the Oct. 14 edition of the Villanovan, an error was made in the "V.U. Student in Auto Collision" story. Cathy Wilson, a Villanova alumnus, was a victim of the accident as a passenger on the motocycle. The Villanovan regrets the error.

Alcohol Policy

that alcohol must be dispensed for an event to be successful.

"The issue is strictly legal," according to Neville. The lack of success of on-campus events has prompted the administration to look into the poesibility of instituting a BYOB policy, similar to the one in operation at St. Joseph's.

A meeting has been scheduled with Villanova's legal advisors at which the legal ramifications of a BYOB policy will be discussed. A decision may be forthcoming by the end of the meeting, according to Neville, "but in the meantime, the current policy will remain in effect."

An examination of other large campus policies in the area reveals the Villanova policy to be one of the strictest. University of Pennsylvania's campus is governed by no apparent policy. Parties are held in resident halls with open admission at which alcohol is dispensed in large quantities. On Drexel's campus, parties are held with the only restriction being that no alcohol may be dispensed at on-campus parties held on weeknights.

St. Joseph's is governed by a BYOB policy. While the attendance at their on-campus parties has dropped since the administration prohibited student organizations from dispensing alcohol, attendance at the average student function hovers around the 45 to 70 mark.

Part-Time Teachers Contribute to V.U.

By SUE FRENCH

Over one-third of Villanova's faculty teach part-time. Any or all could teach in the Philadelphia Public School System and earn more money for what in most cases amounts to far less work. A part-timer's salary might even double if he or she switched to high school teaching. Yet, for various reasons, these 264 individuals choose to teach part-time at Villanova and other area colleges.

Each of these individuals teach for different reasons, and under different circumstances. Some, like Norman Leebron of the communications department, hold full-time jobs but also teach because they enjoy doing so. Others, like philosophy teacher Patrice Waitzman, are working on a doctorate. Finally there are people like Willa Pinto and Ken Bailey, also of the philosophy department, and Arlene Sciole of the theatre department, who teach part-time because they aren't able to find a full-time position in academia's higher competitive job market.

These are the instructors Villanova hires on a semester-to-semester basis to fill in when a department offers a larger selection of courses with more than its full-time faculty can, or are qualified, to teach. Hiring part-time teachers gives the University what the Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for academic affairs calls "malleability."

With a 26 percent decline in the number of eighteen year olds of college age expected between 1980 and 1994, college enrollment is likely to drop. Part-timers, such as Villanova's, are often hired during occasional enrollment surges. It is no secret, however, that part-time teachers also work much cheaper than tenured faculty members.

One of Villanova's full-time teaching faculty members might teach four or five classes a semester; part-timers at Villanova may teach no more than six credits a semester, according to the Office of Academic Affairs. Thus, as Gallen points out, while part-timers make up a third of the total faculty, they teach far less than one-third of the courses.

Few can survive on an income of approximately $5600 a year. (The income of a doctorate-holding part-timer teaching two undergraduate courses a semester, two semesters a year.) So, most part-timers take teaching jobs at other area colleges. Bailey works in an auto parts store as well as teaching a course at another school. Bailey also earns extra cash tutoring and proctoring. "Whatever comes up," he says.

The Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A.

At Villanova, a part-time without a terminal degree receives $1,050 for an undergraduate, three credit course; he or she earns an additional $45 if the course is taught at the graduate level. With a doctorate, the same professor would receive $1,395 and $1,725, respectively. The only benefits part-timers receive are tuition credits for their children.

Sciole, who currently teaches two sections of "Film Analysis," recounted her past exhaustive teaching experiences. "In the last seven years, I've taught eight courses in each of four semesters. The other semesters I taught seven or five courses . . . when I taught eight courses in one semester, I did not even equal a full-timer's salary."

Norman Leebron, on the other hand, is content to teach a single section of "Broadcast Sales" and one other course at Drexel. "I enjoy teaching and the contacts I make . . . the money barely pays for the gas." The career media and public relations consultant added that he could do better financially if he spent the time he currently spends teaching doing additional consulting. Leebron explained, however, that he views teaching part-time as a place for "people who really care about students." Helping students come up with ideas for media internships is one of the ways Leebron says he contributes.

A doctoral dissertation and two children keep Waitzman busy, but not too busy to teach, she says. "Teaching is a good outlet," commented Waitzman. Between her assistantship at Bryn Mawr and her Villanova salary, Waitzman estimates she'll earn "more than half" of what her husband earns. Waitzman expressed the notion that "It's a popular misconception that women who are teaching part-time do so because they have a husband who earns a large salary. I'm living a student existence with kids," remarked Waitzman.

Gallen doesn't believe there is an unfair gap between full-time and part time salaries. "There isn't because tenured faculty members are expected to do research, have office hours, serve on committees and advise students . . . We don't demand any research from the part-timers," said Gallen. He also noted of part-timers, "Some bring a special expertise," which makes them too specialized in given areas to be in great demand at any one school, and thus in line for a full-time position.

Pinto views the situation as more of a 'Catch-22.' Pinto, who is teaching five courses at three different schools this semester, finds herself juggling her research on Plato with her travel schedule.

Confusing Reality With the Illusion of TV Shows

By CHARLENE PARDOE

In a "Talks of the Times" lecture presented in the Connelly Center Cinema Oct. 12, communications instructor Michael Pearson spoke about the problems concerning television and its effect on people today. Entitled, "Muddling Reality With Illusion — Can Superman Really Fly?" Pearson noted that "people behave (towards television) as if it is dealing with reality. There is a sense in which we are taught that that which is on television is real," he noted.

Young children cannot always distinguish what is real from what is not. The way in which TV presents material alters a child's ability to learn. After watching "Superman" on TV, for example, a four-year-old boy jumped from a window and broke his leg because he believed he could fly, Pearson noted.

Certain children's shows also alter a child's perception. "Sesame Street" presents objects differently than they actually are, so children cannot connect the meanings. "The letter 'A' is presented with a face and legs," Pearson noted, "but in school, where the 'A' does not have those characteristics, a child does not know it is an 'A'." The child reasons that since it does not have a face and legs, it must not be the letter 'A'."

But it is not only children who are influenced by TV. According to Pearson, adults and teenagers are affected as well.

Some shows gain undeserved credit. During its seven-year run on ABC the actors of "Marcus Welby, M.D." received over one-quarter of a million letters asking for medical advice.

Pearson commented that TV programs are sometimes the only way we learn about a topic. "Television is influencing the way we live. It is in the nature of TV to teach people about what goes on," he said.

On the 1975-76 crime drama "S.W.A.T.," he noted, guns were fired and people died week after week. In actuality, however, the first special weapons and tactics team in Los Angeles, from which the series was created, fired only three times in two years. People who stay inside and watch TV, therefore become more afraid of the real world, he commented, because it dramatizes life. It exaggerates the way life actually is.

The reason he singles out television over other mediums is not because it exaggerates life more than any other but because it is the most persuasive. "Ninety-eight per cent of all the homes in the United States have TV," he noted. "More homes have televisions than bathtubs, and today the average length that the television is on in homes is six hours and 48 minutes." He also noted that other than sleep, children watch TV more than anything else.

His other reason for singling out TV is because it is available to any age. "TV doesn't require a lot of mind," he noted, so anyone can watch it. The problem with this is that children do not differentiate from what they see, he said.

Television is playing a greater part in everyones' lives. With cable TV, people can manipulate their own environment, but this removes them from a first-hand experience. "TV is influencing the way we live," he noted. "As consumers of mass media, we must teach ourselves and others the ways in which it influences our lives," Pearson said.

Black American Poetry Examined

By LAURA FORTUNATO

As man strives for independence and maturity, he seeks to reaffirm his identity. Manifestation of one's values and emotions in oral and written forms of expression is an important part of man's heritage — so too is the language of Black American poetry.

This spring, the English department will offer a course in Black American Poetry. Professor Ruth Fisher believes that the course will expose another dimension of American poetry. "Black poetry is not just for the Black population, but for everyone who wants to kow more about poetry," said Fisher.

The course in American Black Poetry reveals the changes in the chronicles of the Black experience as it transcends the beauty of poetry.

According to Fisher, Black poetry has often been categorized as protest literature, which depicts pain and sorrow, but Black poetry is more. It is a language and a rhythm which expresses images peculiar to the Black experience.

Fisher commented that just as the Black experience underwent changes, so did the style and forms of Black literature. "America began the apologetic phase of Black poetry with the creative voice of Langston Hughes. His poetry reflected the trials and tribulations of the Harlem Renaissance during the '20s. Hughes continued to write until his death in 1967, and his poetry encompassed the changing forms from apologetic to protest and early affirmation."

The '60s and '70s were periods of protest in many areas of American life, said Fisher. Black poetry was no exception. A Black poet, Amiri Baraka, through his essays, plays and poems, depicted what he believed poetry should be. Nicky Giovanni, also a major Black poet, was influential in raising the asthetic consciousness of the Black movement."

Fisher remarked that the late '70s and '80s saw the birth of yet another style of expression; the poetry of affirmation. "The poetry of affirmation rises above the necessity to prove that 'Black is beautiful.' "One knows who he is and the poetry affirms his identity. The poets write with a double consciousness as they proceed beyond the veil," said Fisher.

Professor Ruth Fisher.

This affirmative attitude is the essence of Black poetry and drama. For example, in 1982, Charles Fuller Jr. won the Pulitzer Prize for his drama "Soldiers Play." Alice Walker won the 1983 Pulitzer Prize for her poem, "The Color Purple." Fuller and Walker are not alone in their excellence. Gwendelyn Brooks won the 1953 Pulitzer Prize for "Annie Alan."

"There are so many new Black voices in poetry and each writer is capable of writing in any form and in any era. This course is a worthwhile course in understanding a special area of American poetry," said Fisher.

didn't expect that I would be learning things about myself, and others, beyond meeting some new people.

When I returned to Villanova after the weekend, I told my friends that I had learned something, but I didn't know quite what it was. This weekend was like others I'd been on. There were talks, spiritual in nature, and we celebrated Eucharist.

There was only one guy who really frightened me, especially at meals; because of cerebral palsy, he has little muscle control, making swallowing a major task. When he'd start to choke, I'd panic, fearing that he would stop breathing. What I failed to realize was that this was "normal" for him. It was I who needed to adjust. After a while I came to know John, this young man—this person who happened to have a disease. Communicating with his eyes, we were able to "talk" about what was going on around us. Toward the end of the weekend I discovered that John wrote poetry. Using his eyes, he created while his family takes down the words. Some of his poems are really funny, some are angry, and some talk about love. How often had I felt these same emotions . . . yet to express them on paper would kill me. Maybe the shell is a physical disability, or perhaps fear of having another know you as you are. Some shells are easy to see; some are hidden through humor or authority or withdrawl. The fact is, we all have some shell. Do I take the time to accept the frustration and pain and allow others to be artists? Maybe that's what I learned on the weekend.

Introduce yourself.

Introductions are in order. We're Bell Atlantic™, a brand new corporation born out of the AT&T divestiture and made up of Bell of Pennsylvania, Diamond State Telephone (serving Delaware), the C&P Telephone Companies (serving Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and the District of Columbia), New Jersey Bell, and Bell Atlantic Mobile Systems.

Even though we're new, we start our corporate life with almost unheard of advantages. We start with assets of $17 billion, $8 billion in annual revenue and 80,000 experienced, dedicated employees. We start with an exceptionally strong, well-balanced management team. We start at the leading edge of technology in our industry. And we start with 107 years worth of telephone heritage and know-how.

Where are we going? We're going to move more strongly into the Age of Information—already a $200 billion segment of the American economy, and growing daily. We're going to provide customers in our region and other selected markets with high value communications services and systems, and the equipment that is exactly right for both residential and business needs. We're going to be market-driven in a business we know very well. And we're going to be examining opportunities for diversification that fit our key strengths and strategies.

Which brings us to you. We'd like a chance to discuss where you might fit in—a chance to discuss your key strengths and strategies. Step up and introduce yourself. Just sign up for an interview at your college placement office by October 25, 1983. Our Bell of Pennsylvania representative will be on campus on December 1, 1983. See you then.

Looking Into Teaching

"[illegible] office hours for any professor, but it's not easy," said Fiore. Fiore has previously taught full-time at three different universities in six years.

Sciole also finds it hard to meet with students. "The hardest thing is to manage your time," said Sciole. Waitzman views the problems part-timers face as twofold, acknowleging first, the low pay and low job security and lack of benefits. "Then you have the everyday issues, which probably vary from department to department. Rarely if ever do part-timers have access to an office. Often they're hired at the last minute. Part-timers are not really members of their departments — they don't become members or are not made to feel as if they are members of a department," Waitzman said.

Waitzman served on an ad hoc philosophy department committee on adjunct faculty, the first time, she believes, any part-time faculty member had met on any department committee.

Full time philosophy faculty now observe part-timers; the results go into a dossier kept by the chairman on each part-time department member. When full-time positions do open up, generally, part-timers receive no preferential treatment. "We have to go through the Equal Opportunity Act, according to the law," said Gallen. This includes advertising positions publicly, Gallen explained. "Part-time people can certainly apply. The committee in the department reviewing the applicants might indeed show preference because the people know the part-timers," Gallen added.

Sciole tactfully stresses the fact that she was never promised a full-time position. "I was hired with the strict understanding that it would not lead to a full-time position," said Sciole. Bailey believes the largest drawback of being part-time is the lack of job security, although said Bailey, "It doesn't concern me because I have no family and no other immediate responsibilities."

You hope your course carries over."

According to Gallen, the quality of education does not suffer from part-time teaching. "We haven't seen it," said Gallen. "It can suffer in that part-time people are not required to be here." Gallen added that office space simply is not available for such a large number of people. Said Bailey, "It's my contention that part-timers, because they are not tenured, are more motivated. It's a thrill to teach, I enjoy philosophy."

These "Fellows" are not "Mellow"

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

23 East was the place to be Saturday night as Big Twist and the Mellow Fellows played two howling sets that had everyone clapping and stomping.

What is Big Twist and the Mellow Fellows? They're a Chicago-based blues band that's been around for close to ten years now.

Big Twist (aka Larry Nolan) is the 300-pound lead singer who has the soul of one B.B. King.

As a youngster, Twist sang and played drums in redneck bars in Southern Illinois in the late '50s and early '60s. He sometimes even had to play behind chicken wire strung in front of the bandstand to protect him from flying bottles; and he occasionally had to use force in order to get paid for a night's work.

Guitarist Pete Special explained how the band met. "Terry (tenor sax player Terry Ogolini) said, 'You've got to see this cat Big Twist, he's great; you'll love him.' So we traveled 350 miles down to Southern Illinois, and there he was, in this redneck bar. After hearing him sing, I said that I wanted to play with this guy. So basically, the nucleus of the band had been formed in 1971."

Besides Nolan, Special and Ogolini, the band consists of Mark Ohlsen, trumpet, Mike Halpin, trombone, Steve Eisen, baritone sax, Chris Cameron, keyboards, Tony Brown, bass and Wayne Stewart on drums.

The band's music is definitely rhythm and blues, and as the crowd found out, they are far from mellow.

Eight pieces strong, the Mellow Fellows have a unique sound, that makes one just want to get up and dance. Special is an excellent guitarist who can dish out any rift. Chris Cameron is a wizard on keyboards, getting various sounds out of his Hammond organ.

"What we do is a fusion of several generations," commented Special, "We listen to everything." As for the music scene today, Special shrugs his shoulders, "It's okay. It's like anything else, some of it is good and some of it is not. But one thing is for sure, the music isn't new. Every kind of music, it's all been done before. There are only so many things you can do with 13 notes."

The Mellow Fellows played two 45 minute sets with a bulk of the songs coming from the new LP "Playing Fore Keeps." Especially good were "I Got A Problem," and "We're Gonna Make It." The band has an infectious sound, and Twist is a dynamite frontman.

Decked out in a three-piece suit and hat, Twist looked the part of a Chicago kingpin. His baritone voice and perfect annunciation made his voice a pure delight to listen to. Twist sang each song with such ease, as he covered a wide variety of music.

The band also played reworked classics such as "Pork Salad Annie," and Willie Dixon's "300 Pounds of Heavenly Joy."

"The problem with a lot of the music today is that its run by business-

Big Twist and the Mellow Fellows

nessmen. Back in the old days it was run by people who knew music," Special commented.

The band released their first album in 1980 and followed it up with "One Track Mind" in 1982. Special said, "Even if we never attain much notoriety, I wouldn't do anything else. This is no flash-in-the-pan thing. I've been playing music for years. This is what I know, it's my life," he continued.

When asked if he thinks there might be an R&B revival, Special grimaced, "If there is, I don't want to be a part of it. The word revival means 'bring back something that's over with.' Music is not something calculated. It's something that draws an emotional response. If we can touch people emotionally, then it will all be worth it."

Fine Rhythm and Belews

By T.C. BIGGINS

It's a cold world of over-specialization out there. Most things seem to be more productive that way. There aren't many welders building the whole car, for instance, or relievers pitching nine straight innings. So, it's especially nice to see a world class sprinter like Adrian Belew running the marathon. In the past, he's lent his decidedly, hallucinogenic touches to the work of Frank Zappa and David Bowie, rode shotgun over the Talking Heads, and managed to produce the only really human element King Crimson ever had. He's one of those guitar aces who's known for his ability to deliver. The man is a spark plug.

On his debut album, the critically acclaimed "Lone Rhino," he made the transition smoothly from pyrotechnic whizkid to solo artist, and his second release "Twang Bar King" finds him continuing to mature as a songwriter and bandleader.

On "Twang Bar King" he subscribes to all the basic tenents of pop with his blue-collar rock and R&B roots dominating much of the album. On "Lone Rhino" he tended to wear many of his artistic reference points on his sleeve. And the result was that all the hooky pop verses got squeezed between bizarre instrumental breaks. Here, his crisp arrangements are still eccentric but infinitely more digestible, probably more heartfelt too.

Make no mistake, though, it's hardly fluff. "Sexy Rhino" punches hard with sweaty soulfulness, and the fiesty cover of the Lennon-McCartney "I'm Down" finds the band steady and daring, even if they do reach a little too far to achieve the punk inspired pissed-off attitude which has become so chic lately. The most interesting aspect of "Twang Bar King" is the way his guitar terraces the sound, there isn't 8 bars of straight lead anywhere to be found. In fact, much of the lead work is fielded out to the sax, which is sure to appeal to anyone's melodic sweet tooth because it chops conscious but never heavy. "Ballet for the Blue Whale," which is performed entirely on a Roland guitar synthesizer and acoustic guitar, is a superbly textured aural experience. And, if the simple-minded groove merchants ever got hold of "Another Time"s textural sensibility, they would have a top ten hit on their hands.

Which raises one of the problems with the album: it approaches pop with warmth and good feelings but at the same time manages to pass it at the speed of sound. In fact, the difference between "Twang Bar King" and Billboard's Top 40 is about two million years of evolution. Maybe the dance music people will pick up on "The Ideal Women" as a novelty song. The title cut is a great send up rocker and "The Rail Song" is a touching story-song in the finest tradition. As far as lyrics go, they're not so much intelligent as just plain perceptive. The production, however, leaves much to be desired. Belew produced the album himself and really doesn't understand how to use his voice to its fullest potential. A good producer would have been invaluable on a project like this. After all, everyone needs somebody to fluff their pillow now and again. "Paint the Road," with its foxx tone guitar, is a rich and captivating soundscape. "I Wonder," "Life Without A Cage," and "Fish Head" could possibly have been the album's highlights, but the production falls too short to allow them to develop.

So, if you like the work of the artist mentioned above and are familiar with Belew, this album is a welcome extension. If not, it should definitely open up your ears a bit.

Some Fun on South Street

By KELLY T. O'NEILL

For those of you who are unfamiliar with Philadelphia, South Street is the ideal place to spend an afternoon or evening. With a multitude of restaurants and bars, not to mention an array of specialty shops at your disposal, it is virtually impossible not to find something which appeals to you.

Next time you are in the area and are faced with the difficult decision of where or how to spend your evening, try H.T. McDoogal. On any given weekend, you will probably have to wait approximately 30 minutes, which, when you are hungry can seem like a long time. Fortunately, there is a lounge located downstairs where you can wait. With a handsome bar and sunken dance floor, the atmosphere is such that time passes quickly, not to mention enjoyably.

For dinner, my companion and I were seated upstairs in the library, a cozy room lined with bookshelves. Our surroundings were casual, yet refined, and our waiter was pleasantly attentive.

The extensive menu, ranging from appetizers to entrees has something to please just about everyone.

With a variety of appetizers to choose from, my companion and I ordered what is called the "Munchie Sampler," an assortment of potato skins, chicken legs, fried mushrooms, and fried zucchini.

For the main course I chose fettuccini with chicken, prepared with peas and parmesan cheese in a rich creamy sauce. Priced at $6.75, I found it to be fairly reasonable, not to mention delicious. My companion was also pleased with his choice of chicken florentine. His chicken breast was delectably sauteed with garlic, topped with spinach and mozzarella cheese, then broiled golden brown, and served with rice pilaf.

If you decide to make your dinner complete with a cup of coffee or even dessert, you have come to the right place. H.T. McDoogals offers a wide selection of international coffees, and many tempting desserts such as double chocolate, hot fudge waffles, and many other scrumptious delights. All in all, the dining experience at H.T. McDoogal is very pleasant and enjoyable.

If you decide that you are looking for a place just to dance or relax by the bar, the lounge downstairs is the place to go, as the overall atmosphere is quite conducive to socializing.

H.T. McDoogal is open for lunch Mon. thru Sat. at 11 a.m. and brunch on Sun. at 10 a.m. Sun. thru Thur. entrees are served 'til 11 p.m. and the kitchen is open for munchies until 1 a.m. but the lounge is open until 2 a.m.

The phone number is 382-7460, and it would be advisable to make reservations for dinner on the weekends.

Moore Film "Romantic Comedy" is Neither

By MARY KAY KIRLIN

Most of us are familiar with the image of Dudley Moore as the short, funny, middle-aged man, with the wry sense of humor, who gets himself into all kinds of embarassing situations and still manages to laugh at himself — that was until now. Moore's latest film entitled "Romantic Comedy," is no laughing matter. He plays the part of a struggling playwright who unintentionally teams up with a young, talented woman playwright by the name of Phoebe Craddock. Phoebe is played by actress Mary Steenburgen, and is portrayed as an inexperienced and somewhat naive writer, who is about to embark on her professional career. Moore is the experienced, egotistical playwright, Jason Carmichael, who is more dull and unoriginal than witty.

For example, in the opening scene of the play, we see Moore anxiously waiting for his masseuse to come and give him a massage before his wedding. When Phoebe arrives, he automatically starts stripping off his clothes thinking that she is his masseuse, until he finds out that she is not, then he very calmly starts to get dressed again. After she walks out of the room, he proceeds to run around the room, screaming that he is so embarrassed. The effect is not humorous; in fact it comes off as being too contrived and dull.

The storyline itself is not bad in that it deals with the growing and maturing relationship of the two playwrights over a period of nine years. It has good intentions, but is too predictable. We know from the start that sooner or later the two characters are going to get together.

Mary Steenburgen's portrayal of Phoebe is non-descript, in that the character is too bland. She is too nice and sweet to be a sophisticated woman playwright of the '80s. For example, she takes Moore's advice on most matters and does not date anyone that he does not approve of. She does rebel a little by the end of the movie, but by that time the viewer has almost lost interest.

All in all, the movie lacks originality; perhaps that is why Moore's character came off as lacking the spark that is needed to bring out the humor in the situation. Or it may be that this movie fails because of the lack of spunk exhibited by Phoebe's character, after all, this was not "10" and the character was not Bo Derek. Whatever the reason, "Romantic Comedy" is not the type of movie that you might want to run out and see; you would probably be better off to save your money and wait' til it comes on Cable TV.

La Fourchette Exudes Elegant Phila. Dining

By Mark Sullivan

If you are fond of gourmet cooking, and also appreciate a local place to have a pleasant lunch or elegant dinner, the latest addition to the Main Line is La Fourchette.

Located in downtown Wayne, the restaurant specializes in fine French cuisine expertly prepared under the direction of chef Van Allen. The atmosphere is continental, charming and elegant. One wall represents paintings on the menu, fresh flowers on all tables as well as carefully matched wallpaper, tablecloths and hand painted decor. An impressive split staircase divides the restaurant into two floors.

My companion and I sat upstairs, which is perfect for any romantic encounter. The dinner menu offers a wide selection of dishes including traditional lobster tails as well as sauteed calves liver and roast duckling. The list of appetizers is also impressive, as some offerings are duck pate, smoked salmon fume and wonton leaves stuffed with crab meat. Appetizer prices range from $3.95-$5.25., and entree prices range from $10.95 to $16.95. In addition to the menu, La Fourchette holds a fish special and meat special each day as well as a cold or hot soup when in season.

The specials were deliciously described by our waiter and sounded so tempting that I decided to try the fish special of the day. The fish, grouper, was served in a court bouillion sauce surrounded by quenelles (small dumplings) of shrimp. The sauce was a perfect complement to the fish, not overpowering, and the quenelles offered a delicious change of pace. My companion had the entrecote de boeuf (sirloin steak) from the menu. The steak was served with green, black and pink peppercorns, and was flambeed in cognac, bathed in veal stock and mustard sauce. The portion served was well worth the $14.95 price and my companion required some time to finish it.

La Fourchette offers a fine selection of wine, as well as special house-wine by the glass or carafe. The waiter was knowledgeable about each item on the menu, and offered excellent advice. The service was admirable, as constant attention was placed on our table and all our needs were attended to in a pleasant and courteous fashion.

La Fourchette offers a tempting display of desserts including several cakes, ice cream, fresh fruit and pastries. In addition, the bar is well stocked with a selection of fine after-dinner drinks. La Fourchette is open Mondays through Fridays, serving at six o'clock, and for lunch Monday through Fridays, serving at eleven. Reservations are suggested, especially on the weekends and all major credit cards are accepted. Although the prices might be a bit high for someone on a college budget, the experience at La Fourchette is worth far more.

Culture Shock (Jewish) exhibit showing the different worlds of different cultures. It is an educationally exciting trip worth taking.

When visiting the Balch, before leaving don't forget to add your own red ball to the "Ethnic Register" which records the ethnic and cultural diversity of American society. The Balch Institute for Ethnic Studies is on 18 South 7th Street, Philadelphia. It is open Monday-Saturday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Closed holidays. Admission

These permanent displays of immigration and foreign diversity are joined by two temporary exhibits. An exhibit called "Culture Shock: Soviet Jews in Philadelphia" will be on display until Nov. 19. Photographs, paintings and constructions demonstrate personal and universal problems and reactions by artists who are newly arrived immigrants from the Soviet Union.

A human form made up of oil paint on a board with metal. The face is oblivious because the features are not distinct. Totalitarianism has wiped the humanistic aspects away.

Most of the face in oil paint are emaciated. But it is the hollow despairing eyes that evoke empathy.

These few descriptions are but a sampling of art work presented in "Culture Shock." It is indeed a visual experience that captures emotional sadness, disillusionment, the struggles and the freedom felt by Soviet Jews who

Another interesting facet at the Balch is its Banner Room collection of beautiful ethnic banners made by Philadelphia high school art students. Bold symbolic colors and objects artistically represent many of the cultures.

There is also a window display featuring over a hundred dolls from every ethnic group. The

This permanent exhibit also documents the fact that immigration, through the port of Philadelphia, still continues.

CANCER. NOT KNOWING THE RISKS IS YOUR GREATEST RISK.

A lot of people think cancer is unbeatable.

That simply isn't true. In fact, over two million people have had cancer and survived to lead happy, normal lives.

And not only can cancer be beaten, it can also be prevented.

There are definite precautions that have been proven to decrease your risk of getting certain cancers.

Ask your local American Cancer Society to send you a free booklet about cancer risks.

Learn the facts about cancer.

And make not knowing the risks, one less risk.

Hey, "All You Zombies," it's the Hooters

By JACQUI ROSEN

Last Friday night, The Hooters brought their upbeat, danceable sound to the auditorium of Drexel University to perform in front of a crowd of about 500 students.

The Hooters performed at Drexel University last week.

Opening up for The Hooters was The Pinch, a band consisting of five members. The Pinch, who hail from Seaside Heights, New Jersey, brought with them lots of good-looks, a youthful, energetic style, and not much else. Most noteworthy was "Fun City," a simple, little tune about New York. However, after 20 minutes of unimaginative, repetitive music, the crowd seemed to be growing restless. When The Pinch finally left the stage, it was apparent that they had overstayed their welcome.

After a 15 minute intermission, the auditorium grew dark. When the spotlights came up, The Hooters surprised the crowd when they were found seated atop a ledge over an exit sign. The Hooters were well received when they took the small stage at about 9:30.

At their introduction, the crowd which had remained seated on the floor throughout the performance of The Pinch, got up and pushed their way towards the stage.

The enthusiasm of the audience never dimmed as The Hooters went through their entire repertoire. At the cry of "All you Zombies!" a burst of orange smoke leaped towards the ceiling and filtered over the crowd, and the floor of the auditorium vibrated under the throngs of dancing feet. As the familiar opening of "Hanging on a Heartbeat" started up, the crowd responded by clapping and singing along.

The Hooters initially did two encores and retreated from the stage, and at this time the dismayed crowd began a chant of "Hooters! Hooters!" It seemed as though they were not to be satisfied though, as the lights came back on. But The Hooters were not out of surprises just yet. After nearly a quarter of the fans had left, the band stole back onto the stage, and the lead singer asked mischievously, "Would you like to hear some more?"

After a few minutes had elapsed and nearly a quarter of the fans had left, the band stole back onto the stage, and the lead singer asked mischievously, "Would you like to hear some more?"

As the remaining fans roared their pleasure at the turn of events, The Hooters began a version of Eddy Grant's "Electric Avenue," and then flung themselves enthusiastically into "Fighting on the Same Side." During the encore of the song, the lead singer jumped into the crowd and weaved his way through it, urging the fans to join in the words.

The Hooters bring an air of excitement to the stage, which was obvious by the large reaction of the relatively small crowd at Drexel. They are likeable, enthusiastic and relate well to their audiences; and this, combined with an easy, rhythmic sound, made for an enjoyable show.

Vasey Theatre

Vasey Theatre will present William Gibson's "The Miracle Worker" on October 21 and 22 at 8 p.m. The play opened last weekend and received many favorable reviews.

It is the popular story of the valiant teacher, Annie Sullivan, who helped Helen Keller overcome insurmountable handicaps. The play stars Alisa Schulaman as Helen Keller and Margo Jones as Annie Sullivan.

Milton, who is guest directing the performance, has directed for the New York Shakespeare Theatre and Cincinnati Playhouse, to name a few.

Students may purchase tickets at a reduced rate 15 minutes prior to each performance.

Cats Hold No.5 C.W. Post in Check

By BOB HELLER

The Villanova Wildcat field hockey team took on the tough, nationally ranked team from C.W. Post on Friday, coming away with a 1-1 tie. Their record is now 3-5-3.

Neither Post nor the Wildcats were overly productive in the first half of the game. Both teams produced identical statistics; four shots on goal, four saves and two penalty corners.

The second half was a different story as both teams produced goals. C.W. Post opened the scoring at 8:48 as a defensive lapse by the Wildcats paved the way for the goal. Villanova evened the score at 1-1 at 19:46 when Danine DiBernardi took a pass from Amy Hutchison and put the ball past the Post goalie. Neither team was able to score for the remainder of the second half and for the 20 minutes of overtime and the game ended as a 1-1 tie.

Nova's defensive unit played exceptionally well, holding a strong Post offense to just ten shots on goal, well below their game average. The Wildcats' defensive unit includes starters Susan Antoon at sweeper; backs Sherry Boyle, Linda Norton and Cheryl Snyder; and goaltender Susan Ruff.

Offensively, Villanova was on the attack for the last eight minutes of regulation time and almost the entire twenty minutes of overtime. "They beat us to the ball almost every time," commented Post coach Nancy Butler. "Villanova proved that they can play against a tough team and control the tempo of the game."

In earlier Wildcat action, Villanova took on another team from Long Island, NY. This time it was Hofstra.

Villanova played well in the first half, scoring twice in the first ten minutes. At 7:12 Sally Poliwoda took a pass from Sue Lora and put it past Hofstra's goalie, scoring the first goal of her college career. About three minutes later on a penalty corner, Amy Hutchison fired a shot through to make the score 2-0 Nova. Hofstra got one back 15 minutes later and the score was 2-1 at halftime.

The Wildcat offensive unit of Lora, Hutchison, Bonnie Bell, Robin Garczynski, Poliwoda and Kelly Harabin went wild in the second half taking 18 shots and pummelling the Hostra defense. Lora and Garczynski teamed up for two more Nova scores as Lora scored at 4:26 and Garczynski at 16:19. Overall, the Wildcats took a total of 31 shots on goal.

Defensively, the Wildcats played well. "We are getting good goaltending from both Sue Ruff and Lisa Buschmann and both have been playing quite well," commented Diane Moyer, the Cats coach. "They have kept us in many games."

The 4-1 victory gave the Wildcats their third win of the season, with previous victories coming against Michigan State and Drexel. The Wildcats will be playing on Saturday, Oct. 22 against a strong team from Duke University. The Cats final home game will be on the 27th against LaSalle College.

The determined Nova defense held C.W. Post to a meager ten shots on goal during the 1-1 tie.

Women's Soccer Sizzling

By SUZANNE ONNEMBO

The Villanovan women's soccer team has taken off, winning seven out of their past eight games and improving their record to 7-5.

The only Villanova loss in the past eight games came at the hands of nationally-ranked Princeton. The Cats, who have never beaten the Tigers, played exceptionally well but still wound up with a 2-1 loss. The defense, led by senior captain Katie Graney, was effective in containing the opponent's stong offensive attack. The first half was played evenly as was evidenced by the 0-0 halftime score.

Both teams came out hungry in the second half, ignoring the rain that had begun to fall. However, Princeton was able to capitalize on two breaks and scored two goals. Freshman sensation Ann Brennan came back and blasted a shot past the opponents' keeper to put the Cats on the scoreboard. Time ran out, however, and a disapointed Villanova squad was forced to endure the loss.

Coach Lee Stevens feared a let down of the team which was to take on undefeated Mercer College (10-0-1). His fears appeared validated after the Cats had fallen behind 2-0 by halftime. Anxieties were heightened by the fact that Brennan separated her shoulder in the second period. The squad demonstrated its determination and made a brilliant comeback. Led by senior captain Annie Kemp, Villanova dominated all over the field. Kemp and Vinnie Johnson each contributed a goal. Sue Stavaros proceeded to power two more goals, giving Villanova a 4-2 lead. Kathy Ford showed that she's an excellent passer as well as a leading scorer as she picked up two assists. Mercer scored again late in the third period, but the Cats held on to defeat Mercer, 4-3.

The booters traveled to Franklin and Marshall on Saturday where they achieved their seventh victory by the score of 5-2. The Franklin and Marshall defense could not control the outstanding play of Ford who scored two goals and had two assists. Denise Finn also played very well, adding one goal and one assist. Marylou Curly and Johnson rounded out Nova's offensive attack, each picking up a goal. Amy Yax and Jean Murray were also big contributors to the outstanding Wildcat performance.

Coach Stevens feels confident that his squad will be able to win their remaining four games. However, they will have to play to their fullest potential, particularly against George Washington University.

The Cats will continue their season, playing Swarthmore on Tuesday at 4 p.m.

Runners Cop Both Big 5 Crowns

Men

By PAUL MACCHIA

The Villanova men's cross country team successfully defended its Philadelphia Big Five Championship last weekend at Fairmount Park's Belmont Plateau. The Cats duplicated last year's feat of taking the race's first three finishes.

The match-up against St. Joseph's figured to be tough for Villanova because of the absence of two key Wildcat runners, Brian O'Keeffe and John Keyworth. The duo did not run due to injuries. Despite this, Villanova bested the Hawks, 25 to 35, while the University of Pennsylvania (83 points), LaSalle (93 points), and Temple (131 points) weren't even close to the Cats.

Senior Marcus O'Sullivan paced the team with a swift 25:09.1 clocking, the fifth fastest time ever posted by a Villanova runner on Belmont Plateau. This time also shaved 35.1 seconds off his personal best. This was remarkable in light of the fact that the course had several mud puddles and other obstacles hindering the runners. Last year first place honors were shared by O'Sullivan, O'Keeffe and Tony O'Reilly. Freshman Gerry O'Reilly, running the course for the first time ever, finished second while posting the eleventh fastest time ever for a Villanova harrier. His 25:33.8 showing also established a Wildcat freshman standard.

Junior Tony O'Reilly also ran a personal best with a 25:35.9 clocking. His third place finish was 15.8 seconds faster than his previous best effort on the course. He also holds the distinction of covering the course faster than all but ten other Villanovans.

Freshman Sean O'Neil (26:35.1) and sophomore J.J. Clark (26:52.8) finished in sixth and 13th place respectively to give the Cats their winning score of 25 points.

Women

For the second year in a row, the Villanova women harriers decisively defeated their Big Five Conference competitors and brought the cross country silver cup home. Mary Ellen McGowan, second to teammate Jan Yerkes last year, won the individual title with the third fastest time ever run on the hilly, 2.9 mile course at Belmont Plateau in Philadelphia. She clocked a 16:30.5, which put her 23 seconds ahead of the nearest Outstanding performances were the order of the day, as freshmen Lauren Searby, Melissa Grubb and Colleen Gallagher came across the line in fourth, fifth and sixth places, assuring Villanova of its victory. Searby set a Wildcat freshmen record with a time of 17:11, although Grubb (17:18) and Gallagher (17:20) were not far behind. Freshman Katy Redden also ran well, finishing in ninth place, giving the team a point total of 25.

The University of Pennsylvania was the closest team in the final standings with 42 points. Other teams competing were St. Joseph's, LaSalle and Temple.

Although the women have firmly established themselves as the best team in Philadelphia, they ran a conservative race. Coach Bob Shoudt explained that he wanted them "to hang back with the other teams in the beginning, and then after about 1½ miles start moving. Penn usually runs in a pack of 3 to 4 runners, and tries to control the race that way. Even though they didn't use that tactic, we still ran a smart race." So, although Villanova's front runners had usually been hitting their first mile splits in times close to five minutes, they followed their strategy and ran slower through the first mile.

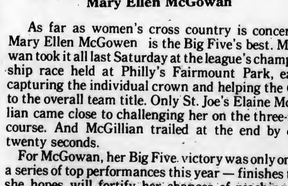
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK



Mary Ellen McGowan

As far as women's cross country is concerned, Mary Ellen McGowen is the Big Five's best. McGowan took it all last Saturday at the league's championship race held at Philly's Fairmount Park, easily capturing the individual crown and helping the Cats to the overall team title. Only St. Joe's Elaine McGillian came close to challenging her on the three-mile course. And McGillian trailed at the end by over twenty seconds.

For McGowan, her Big Five victory was only one in a series of top performances this year — finishes that she hopes will fortify her chances of reaching the nationals in November.

It all started back at the end of September. Competing against a field of over 200 runners, McGowan swept the individual honors at the Trenton State Invitational in a time of 17:43.

That performance, however, was not to be her best. Just a week later, McGowan ran a 17:41 in the 5000 meters at the Rutgers-Adidas Invitational in Piscataway, N.J. She was edged out of first in that one by Rutgers' Desiree Scott.

"The Rutgers Invitational was probably my best race so far," said McGowan, a Communications major who someday hopes to go into sports promotion.

She followed that performance with a 10th place finish on Oct. 8 at the Paul Short Memorial Invitational, where such top national teams as Oregon and Virginia were priming themselves for next month's NCAAs.

And then came the Big Five triumph, something she hopes to equal tomorrow at the Big East Championships in Boston. "It's a meet at which I would really like to run well," McGowan said. "But there will be a lot of competition from the other teams."

McGowan believes that the team is prepared to go against the best that the conference has to offer. "We have a relatively young squad this year, but I think our performances have shown that we have a lot of ability. Our goal is to eventually make it to the NCAAs. We have the kind of teams that can do it."

Baseball Prepares for New Start in '84

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

After two consecutive seasons of disappointments, the Villanova baseball team's fall exhibition season could be considered a portent of happier times.

The Wildcats finished with a 9-10-1 record in their exhibition games. Among the strong teams that coach Larry Shane's squad faced were the U.S. Naval Academy, Towson State, Maryland, Delaware and Philadelphia Textile. "I think we proved we can play with anyone," Shane commented.

"Despite the fact that we're relatively inexperienced, there is still sufficient ability to produce a winning division I baseball team," claimed Shane.

The past two seasons have been disappointing for the Wildcats. In 1980 and 1981, Villanova was involved in consecutive appearances in the ECAC South post season tournament. It was the first time the Cats were involved in post season play since 1961.

But in the 1982 and 1983 seasons, the Wildcats compiled an overall 14-33 record, for a .297 winning percentage.

The decline can be traced to the loss of 11 letter winners between the 1981 and 1982 campaigns, including former Wildcat slugger Bob Loscalzo, who now plies his trade in the Oakland A's farm system.

"We had a very encouraging fall season, certainly better than last season," Shane stated. "We have depth for the first time, and very good team speed, which is our real strong point."

"We were able to see what kind of freshmen recruits we had, and get our team set for the spring," noted senior co-captain John Corbin. "We were able to win some games and gain experience, and now we know what it feels like. We have to carry that over into the spring."

The core of the '83 squad will return for the spring 1984 season. Corbin, a centerfielder with a career .279 batting average (three seasons), hopes for better things. "We have a lot of talent that needs to gel and find a positive direction," said Corbin. "We need to come together and realize what it takes to win."

"I think everyone feels positive about the season," added senior third baseman Ray Paparella. "It's more positive than last year, but it's not quite to the point where it should be yet."

Villanova is in the unusual position of having extremely experienced underclassmen. Many have gained starting roles right from the beginning of their collegiate careers. Last year's offensive power was generated by junior outfielders Jim White (.333 batting average in 1983) and Dan Mostardi (.326, with a club high three homers).

An offensive powerhouse waiting to explode is junior second baseman Jerry Holtz. As a freshman, Holtz led the Cats with nine home runs and 27 RBIs, compiling a .352 batting average. Yet the Philadelphia Phillies first round 1981 amateur draft choice experienced a sophomore slump in '83. Holtz's average dropped to .257, with two homers and six RBIs. The Cats will need Holtz' bat to be hot in order to compete.

The Wildcats are also blessed with an experienced pitching staff. The lone senior, lefthander Kevin Stevens, saw limited action the past two seasons. Junior Rich Moore (a lefty) "has developed extremely well," according to Shane. Phil Ortolani, a right handed junior, "is a good college pitcher," Shane said. Both Moore and Ortolani will be keys to the success of the Cats' mound crew.

Sophomores Russ Gianforcaro and Steve Zolner, a lefty and a righty respectively, were the aces in Spring '83, and will be vital to the 1984 campaign.

Add to this mix a group of six promising freshmen, including three righthanded pitchers.

Pitchers Bob Crasley, Tom Gmahle, and Sean Grady have all posted excellent high school records, and are expected to contribute immediately to the Cat cause.

A trip to Florida will inaugurate the 1984 Wildcat baseball season. "I think everyone's anxiously awaiting that trip," stated Paparella.

Shane added, "I think the Florida trip will be a big plus to this program. In spring baseball, you have to realize that you're starting from scratch again, and whoever gets in shape earliest will be winning."

Villanova's 118th baseball team will saunter southward in March and meet the likes of Stetson, Rollins, Central Florida, Creighton, Illinois State, Western Kentucky and others.

Hopefully, a start in the warm weather will be the right thing to get the Cats back on the winning trail.

Cats in Del. Tourney

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

In their final home game of the season last Thursday, the women's volleyball team knocked off the LaSalle Explorers by scores of 15-0, 15-0, and 15-9.

The celebration was short-lived, however, as the Cats lost four matches at the Delaware Tourney held Oct. 14-15. The Providence College Friars knocked off the Cats in weekend play (8-15, 7-15), as did Delaware (5-15, 16-18), N.Y. Tech (5-15, 16-14, 10-15) and Va. Commonwealth (11-15, 10-15). But the Cats rebounded later in the day by defeating both James Madison (11-15, 15-4, 15-5) and LaSalle again (15-11, 15-4).

"I think we have the potential to do a lot better," said senior co-captain Stephanie Moore. "One of the problems is that the line-up has been really inconsistent. The team is worrying about where they are supposed to be because of the switches instead of on the games themselves.

"We're physically capable of beating these teams," she continued, "It's just that things still have to come together."

Lifters Compete

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

One of Villanova's least known sports is that of power-lifting. These athletes, however, are in a class by themselves and on Oct. 2, at the Penn State Championships for Power Weight Lifting, they proved it by placing second, only two points behind Temple.

One of the outstanding members of the squad, junior John Padova, put forth a spectacular display of brawn and walked off with first place in the 114 weight class. Padova, who placed second last year at the nationals held in Texas, squatted 345, benched 235 — just missing a national record of 245 — and dead lifted 360, for a total of 940. This amazing athlete is looking forward to possibly winning a national record at the 1984 Budweiser Lite National Collegiate Championships to be held at Villanova later this year, on March 22-24.

Mark Majerus came in second in the 114 weight class. He squatted 310, benched 160, and dead lifted 360, for a total of 830. Brian Nibblelink took first place in the 198 weight class by squatting 570, benching 355, and dead lifting 555, for a total of 1480. Captain Pete Anninos, competing in the 220 weight class, squatted 670, benched 400, and dead lifted 605 for a total of 1675. This fabulous display enabled the Nova captain to come away with first place.

For the women, Betsy Dilaura came in second in the 114 weight class. She squatted 225, benched 90, and dead lifted 225, for a total of 540.

Captain Anninos summed up the Cat's fine performance by stating, "We want to give our fans the best possible showing that we are capable of producing. This sport requires four to six days of lifting a week in order to be the best, and to achieve our goals it takes time and effort. We work as hard as we can. We are especially looking forward to hosting the 1984 Nationals because it will be a chance for us to show our supporters all the hard work that goes into lifting and just how difficult a sport this can be. Moreover, we are looking forward to winning the Nationals."

Intramural Round-Up

By JOHN ELLIOTT

The leaders are starting to emerge as the intramural football league heads into its fifth week of competition.

LTD took a closer step towards a Frat league title by tying DKE, 6-6, and knocking off Sigma Nu, 20-0, in play last week. Pi Kappa Phi remained undefeated by shutting out LXA and the Delts, both by scores of 12-0. Both LTD and Pi Kappa Phi stand at 4-0-1.

In the regular men's league, Moon Unit, Wallbangers and Blacksheep appear to be the top favorites for post-season play.

On the women's side, the Beavers and The Football Team head the Manhattan East Division with 3-0 marks. In the Western Division, the Ann Hannigan-led Mudgang squad continues to dominate and is also 3-0.

The Demo Squad also looks like a favorite for the women's playoffs as they sport a 4-0 record in the Queen's League Uptown Division. Downtown, it's the Mightmates and Bushmules at the top with 3-0 marks.

Random Thoughts

By LARRY GOANOS

During the past week many varied thoughts have been running through my mind about the world of sports. Not being able to fuse these into a cohesive column (So what else is new?), I've decided to print some of these random thoughts as they come to me. You've probably seen big-time sportswriters do this from time to time. Of course they get big-time bucks and I don't. Big-time bucks are probably more conducive to big-time ideas but here goes anyway.

Now that another baseball season has ended let me ask a question that a number of New York sports fans hve been asking for years.

What happened to the Mets?

Each season Met fans point to the team's youth and predict that the Mets will get better as the players get more experience but it never happens. The Mets' slogan this year was "The Magic is Back." The only Met magic I saw was their disappearing act from the pennant race sometime in mid-May.

Editor's Angle

Did you catch the post-game scene in the Orioles' locker room after they won the series in Philadelphia? President Reagan called and spoke to everybody in the Orioles organization except their third string catcher on the Triple A team. I would've liked to see the Phillies win it in seven with Carlton getting the decisive win. Then, with the President of the United States on the phone and 70 million viewers looking on, would he still refuse to talk after a game?

Since there's no football on campus this Homecoming Weekend, many Villanova sports fans are turning their attention toward the upcoming hoop season. We open with St. Joe's on Nov. 30 at the Palestra. That's one heckuva game for the team to start out with but at least we won't be subjected to as many roll-outs as the Hawk fans usually bring when we play them in February — most of the St. Joe's freshmen don't learn to read or write until the second semester.

Nebraska is becoming one invincible football team. Their front line is gigantic. The last time I saw four necks that big was at Mt. Rushmore. I heard that the center and left guard are applying for statehood.

Did you hear about Marcus Dupree leaving Oklahoma's football team? Rumors have it that he's contemplating joining a Division III team next season so that he won't have to sit out a year. Can you imagine Marcus Dupree playing in Division III? He'll have as tough a time as Albert Einstein in Math Appreciation.

* * *

The overstatement of the month comes from Alabama Head Coach Ray Perkins. The Crimson Tide lost a close game to Penn State two weeks ago thanks to a questionable call by one of the referees which nullified an apparent 'Bama touchdown. After the game Perkins said that calls which cost a team a game are a crime "worse than murder." It's good to see that some people manage to keep their priorities in sight at all times. Go get 'em Ray.

Hoyas Stifle Booters

By JOE MARUSAK

It has not been an easy year for the men's soccer team here at Villanova. And this past week, the Cats remained stuck in their season-long slump as they dropped decisions to Big East member Georgetown, 3-1 and Big Five rival St. Joe's, 1-0.

In their match-up against the Hoyas last Saturday in Washington, D.C., it was not as if the Cats didn't have a chance. "It was an evenly-matched game," said Nova midfielder Dino Spadaccini. "It was just that we couldn't catch a break."

Georgetown, as it turned out, caught all the breaks, including two off Villanova defensive miscues in the first half. The Hoyas converted on the two and held a 2-0 lead at the half.

"We controlled the game in the first half," said Mike Lombardo, a forward for Villanova, "We gave it our best effort but just couldn't convert."

It was a different league for Villanova on Monday night, but the outcome was no more favorable than against Georgetown. St. Joe's came into the Stadium and needed only one conversion to slip by the Wildcats for a Big Five victory.

Defense Dominates Action

Cats Scratch Spider's Web

By BETH WHITE

Although it was cold and windy at the Shrine Bowl in City Stadium Richmond, Virginia, the Wildcat defense was warmed up for a good battle versus the University of Richmond Spiders last Saturday. The tight Villanova defense carried the Wildcats to a close 9-3 victory and confined the Spiders to a total offensive gain of only 165 yards (92 rushing and 73 in the air). The Richmond quarterbacks were held to only seven completions in 23 attempts and both Spider passers were intercepted by the adept Wildcat secondary. Defensive captain Bernie Hober, who consistently read the Spider offense accurately and then organized the Cats' defensive attack accordingly, picked off one of quarterback Greg Gregory's aerials in the second quarter and then ran the stray ball back 11 yards. The offense then found it hard to mount a substantial scoring drive, but Hober's interception was the spark needed to keep the defense's determination lit throughout the game.

The second interception came from sophomore defensive back Tom Anthony, who pulled in one of quarterback Tim Venable's passes in the fourth quarter. However, deep in Spider territory, the Cat offense was once again forced to give up possession and rely on the punting foot of sophomore Joe Borajkiewics (whose average for the day was 40.9 yards, impressive considering the strong gusty winds). The 54-yard punt turned out to be a stroke of good luck for the Cats because the Spiders stalemated inside their own twenty. Finally, on a fourth down and 2-1 yards to go, Villanova added insult to injury and scored a safety on the final play for the game. Left end Bruce Kullman and defensive tackle Steve Slagle pulled down Venable inside the Richmond goal for a safety and a two-point padding on the Villanova win.

The only Wildcat touchdown was likewise set up by the defense. Junior defensive end Tom Jensen recovered a fumble from quarterback Gregory on the four yard line with a little more than half of the fourth quarter remaining. But the Cat offense took three downs before fullback Craig Dunn pushed on to paydirt and scored the sole touchdown of the game. Chuck Bushbeck's extra-point kick tallied the Cats' score to seven, later to be boosted to nine by the safety.

Richmond turned in stellar performances from their kicking specialists: punter Kevin Wolfe and kicker Scott Schramme. Wolfe was named the offensive player of the game, punting nine times for a total of 393 yards an average of 43.66 yards per punt). Kicker Schramme completed a 44-yard field goal attempt to put three points on the board for the Spiders.

Richmond's versatile backfield and host of pass receivers was shunted by the strong Villanova line and alert secondary. Leading rushers for the Spiders were tailback Jesse Williams, who carried 17 times for 70 yards and quarterbacks Gregory and Venable, who carried for 24 and 26 yards, respectively.

Junior back Mike Gold shone in the Cat backfield, carrying 14 times for an impressive 55 yards. Quarterback Pat O'Brien had a better day on the ground than in the air and gained 42 yards rushing. Juniors Shawn Passman and Don Ziesel rounded out the leading ball carriers with 27 and 35 yards gained, respectively.

Exceptional performances for the defense came from: Anthony Griggs, with five unassisted tackles and seven total; Steve Duda, who had five assists and eight total tackles; Paul Phillippy, with two solos and two assists; Kullman, who pulled down four runners (three for losses and one safety) and Jensen and Hober with five tackles each. Jensen was named Most Outstanding Defensive Player of the game for his fumble recovery which set up the Villanova score.

Head Coach Dick Bedesem remarked that, "I knew it was going to be tough, but not that tough. We moved the ball, but had good plays called back."

The Wildcats have this week off, which will give them plenty of time to prepare for the last two games next week at Rutgers and the final game against local rival Temple.

The strong Wildcat defense scored against the University of Richmond on the final play of the 9-3 victory. Defensemen Steve Slagle and Bruce Kullman sacked Spider Quarterback Tim Venable in the endzone for a safety.

Apathy Forces WKVU Shutdown

By JOSEPH MARUSAK

The airwaves over 640 AM have been silent these past ten days as WKVU, the campus radio station, attempts to reorganize itself.

The station temporarily shut down following its regular broadcasting hours on Oct. 25, just one week after Paul DonVito's resignation as general manager of the station. It plans to return to the air on Monday.

According to WKVU Program Director Paul Durand, "We're just in a position right now to reoganize. What we're doing now is checking out our transmitters at each dorm and putting together our schedule to be distributed around campus."

Durand said that the station plans to cut its on-the-air time by operating on a tentative Monday-Friday, 1 p.m.-9 p.m. basis.

"The time that we have we want to fill with quality programming," he commented. "And we just didn't have the personnel willing to do all the work that's involved in running a radio station as extensively as we had." WKVU had been operating seven days a week, averaging nearly 16 hours each day, Durand noted.

Former General Manager DonVito sees the whole matter as stemming from a more deep-rooted situation at WKVU.

"Last year, there was a basic aura of apathy among the people involved at the station, people who had worked hard and really hadn't gotten anywhere. People were not always agreeing on what was to be useful and what was not.

"This year we came in with a gung-ho attitude but realized again that we weren't getting anywhere. The apathy, combined with internal bickering, led to my resignation."

WKVU Sports Director Steve Fallon echoed DonVito's statements. "It's all a question of battling frustration. That's the reason Paul DonVito resigned and why we went off the air when we did."

"He kind of felt that his job was meaningless," said Skip McCargo, a disc jockey at the station, in reference to DonVito. "He probably felt that we were regressing rather than progressing."

These staff members cite the station's poor transmitting quality, which has resulted in low audience figures, as the essence of the problem now facing WKVU.

"People at the station just get frustrated over situations they can't control, like the equipment problems," Fallon said. "Students in the dorms just can't hear the station, and you can only put up with it so long before you give up.

WKVU Radio Station Office.

"Villanova basketball, for instance, is our big drawing card," Fallon continued. "We have, or could have, a corner on this particular market. But when students turn on our broadcast, they find the reception so poor that they become discouraged and don't bother to listen anymore."

According to McCargo, "From the people that have tried to listen to my show, I understand that they have not been able to get it in. There has been a lot of static."

The low audience figures, in turn, give little incentive for new disc jockeys, according to those involved.

"There's no doubt that there are capable people and that we could have even more," Fallon noted. "It's only that they need something real to work with.

"People ask themselves why they should give all that time and have no end result," Fallon added.

"The basic problem," DonVito said, "is that if the listeners can't pick it up, you know no one's going

Grenada Invasion Questioned

By AMELIA McGOVERN

Political science professors at the University have agreed that the Reagan Administration has set a dangerous precedent in invading the leftist Caribbean nation of Grenada.

A force of 1,900 American Marines and Army Rangers invaded Grenada a week ago last Tuesday. Six Americans were killed, 33 wounded and 8 missing. The forces were sent to protect some 1,000 Americans and replace the Marxist government installed the week before.

Four Villanova professors interviewed feel there was a problem with justifying the invasion of Grenada; that is, to protect the American students who were living in Grenada and also to protect the western hemisphere from the threat of Communism.

"In regard to the basic rationale, the protection of the students, if that can be justified, okay. But the question remains: how much danger were they in? Did the invasion put them in more danger?" asked the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A.

"If its (the invasion) chief purpose was to stop Communism or Marxism in the Western Hemisphere, why not invade Cuba," noted Dr. John Logue, director of the Common Heritage Institute and associate professor of political science.

"The argument used, that American lives were endangered has no clear evidence to support it," said Dr. Jeffrey W. Hahn.

"Another argument," he added "that the Soviet Union was going to use it as a base to spread Communism to Latin America has unclear evidence."

Dr. Hafeez Malik, the director of the American Institute of Pakistan Studies, said if "Grenada is a source of threat to the security of the U.S. and we can intervene, and we do recognize Cuba as being in the American sphere of influence, we are free to determine our own policies. If as a major power we can claim a sphere of influence, how can we deny others this right?"

"We've set a dangerous precedent," said Ellis, "in that a government invades a country because it doesn't like its political system. This is against the United Nations Charter. The Cubans are in Grenada by invitation of the government. We had no right to go in."

"Grenada is an independent nation which made no attack on anyone. The U.S. felt it had a right to send arms and troops into that country," Hahn said. "The U.S. lost moral high ground we held in respect to the Soviets in world affairs. To turn around and say the Soviet Union was wrong in Afghanistan — how can that be? We exercised the same unilateral right."

Hahn drew a parallel between the Soviet shooting of the Korean airliner, which they claimed was a case of mistaken identity and the American bombing of the mental hospital on Grenada, another so-called case of mistaken identity.

"It is truly unfortunate that they couldn't let reporters in,"

Villanova Seeks to Institute Honors Frat

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

Villanova's effort to establish a Phi Beta Kappa honors fraternity "is important to Villanova's reputation and the value of its degree," according to Dr. Michael Burke, director of the University's honors program.

Phi Beta Kappa is the nation's oldest arts and sciences honor fraternity, with less than 300 chapters nationwide. "Because the standards for creating new chapters are so demanding," Burke claimed, "the existence of a chapter at Villanova would signify to potential students, faculty and donors that the quality of arts and sciences here is truly superior.

"Its value, should we be successful, is that it provides national recognition, and distinction, to our best students," said Burke. "It acknowledges Villanova as one of the top arts and sciences schools."

The process of applying for the establishment of a chapter was initiated in 1982 by a group of Villanova faculty who are members of Phi Beta Kappa. The evaluation of an institution occurs over a three-year period.

Villanova was one of ten schools selected for further study out of 76 institutions which applied.

"As a result of being among the ten, a committee of faculty Phi Beta Kappa members have made a report on the University's objectives, the character of our incoming students, how our graduates are doing, the faculty credentials and development programs, our financial situation, the curriculum, and the honors program," Burke stated.

The Phi Beta Kappa committee on credentials, an advisory group from the national headquarters, evaluated Villanova's preliminary application for specific strength and weaknesses.

"In the course of their evaluation, they review at length what they see as positive and negative characteristics according to their own standards of excellence in arts and science," explained Burke. "Their priorities may not be the same as our own."

The committee's evaluation praised Villanova's "relatively rigorous degree requirements," the diversity of the curriculum, and the honors program.

However, it expressed "reservations" about teaching loads, the

Paris Trip

Dr. Cummings, History, and Dr. Mongeau, Modern Languages, will be offering this spring semester a three credit course, France Through the Ages, which will include a trip to Paris during the spring break. Students will also travel to Versailles and the Loire Valley. Faculty and students are invited to participate in the trip without taking the course.

Field Goal

Prof. Margaret Schaefer, College of William and Mary, will lecture on the decision that a football coach must make in a fourth down situation in the other team's territory with only a short distance to go for the first down. The lecture, sponsored by the Dept. of Mathematical Sciences, will be Nov. 4 at 3:30 p.m. in Mendel 162. A coffee will precede the discussion at 3 p.m.

Work-Study Jobs

Anyone who received a work-study award and is not currently employed elsewhere on campus is welcome to apply in the Alumni Office. Help is needed mornings, but temporary hours are available for a project to be conducted in the evening.

For more info., contact Pam Glennon, Austin Hall, x-4585.

Italian Club

The Italian Club is sponsoring the award winning foreign film "Viva Italia." It will be shown in the St. Mary's Auditorium Nov. 9 at 7:30 p.m. A reception will follow.

An informal meeting will be held Nov. 4 at 4:30 p.m.

Connelly Center

Two immediate openings for student representatives on the Connelly Center Board of Directors are available to a campus resident student and a student at large.

Student positions on the Board are established through a petitioning process. Villanova students may petition by obtaining an application from the Information Desk in Connelly Center or in the Office of the Vice President for Student Life in 202 Dougherty.

All petitions are due Nov. 18.

Student Reps

The Dean of Students Office is seeking two students interested in serving as members of the office's "Educational Programs Committee." For additional information about the committee and its programs, please contact Joseph Burke, 213 Dougherty Hall, ext. 4200.

Committees for the Homeless

The Villanova Committees for the Homeless will meet at 7 p.m. Nov. 9 in St. Rita's Chapel.

College Republicans

There will be a meeting of the College Republicans Nov. 8 in Tolentine 316 at 12:45 p.m. All members must attend. New members are welcome. A yearbook picture will be taken.

And the faint perfume from its chalice steals —
I know what the caged bird feels!

Senate Defeats New Grade System

By LINDA BOND

The University Senate met and defeated a motion to institute a grading system which includes minuses Oct. 21, at its third meeting of the academic year.

Patrick Leahy, president of the student government, also announced the results of an undergraduate poll taken to determine student interest in a fall break. A total of 2,041 students voted. Of those surveyed, 1,414 students were in favor of a week long semester break and 627 were opposed to it.

In response to a request from the executive committee of the Senate, the Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for academic affairs, clarified the hours that Falvey Library will be open. Last spring, the Senate successfully legislated extended hours for this academic year, but the administration did not add these hours to the library's schedule. Gallen said new library hours will go into effect when a new librarian arrives in January 1984.

Chairperson of the Senate, Eleanor Strack, asked Gallen "if a new librarian does come in place as you've indicated, does that person have the authority to overrule this recommendation from the Senate?" Gallen indicated she did not have the authority by replying, "She reports to me."

The motion that the University institute a grading system which includes minuses was sent to the Academic Policy Committee on April 15, 1983, for research, specifically to have a numerical equivalency table supplied and a cost-effective study done. At Friday's meeting the committee returned a table as follows: A=4.0, A-=3.7, B+=3.3, B=3.0, B-=2.7, C=2.0, D+=1.3, D =1.0, F=0.

The registrar, David J. Smith, sent a "cost-effective study" to Dr. John Green of the Academic Policy Committee regarding the impact minus grades would have on the Student Record System and in-place computer programs, citing likely problems and indicating prohibitive cost.

"It is not a cost-effective study," stated the Rev. John P. O'Malley, dean of Arts and Sciences. "All it says is that it can't be done and that it would probably take three years."

The floor opened for discussion and vote on a grading system which included minuses, a Senate issue which dates back to 1979.

Certain members of the Senate felt "grade inflation" exists in the present system because plus grades are not balanced by minus grades. They claim that employers and graduate schools are suspicious of Villanova student GPAs, believing they are inflated, and that this makes students less competitive in the job market and in graduate school admission.

Student senators were opposed to the motion to add minus grades. Student body vice president, Mike Ryan said, "There was a jump in the average GPA when we went from A, B, C, D, E, F and added pluses, but that can't be considered grade inflation. We've gone to a different way of showing people's ability or achievement. I don't know if it necessarily shows GPAs are going up year after year, but rather that it does change when you go to another way of grading. We have to be really careful about what we call 'grade inflation.'"

It was pointed out that more grades increased the likelihood of error in selecting an appropriate mark of achievement.

Alvin A. Clay, dean of Commerce and Finance, was in favor of returning to the University's former grading policy which excluded pluses and minuses because "it accomplished the same goal (concering grade inflation) and I certainly think we can evaluate performance with five grades." He introduced this as a substitute motion but later withdrew it when confronted by stubborn opposition from faculty and students who felt a motion of that nature needed research before being brought to the floor.

Senator John Eichman pointed out that the risk of error when selecting a grade is offset because any mistake made would be minimal. The senator felt that more grades make it easier to give a fair grade.

After approximately 40 minutes of discussion, the Senate voted and defeated the motion to recommend the incorporation of minus grades in the grading system by a vote of 14-16-2.

Students Look at Careers in New VALUE Program

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The new Career Development program VALUE, (Villanova Alumni Lending Undergraduate Experience) provides an opportunity for students to explore a career area with the support and insight of an alumni or alumnae professional.

"VALUE'S purpose is to create an alumni network that may be tapped as a resource by students and alumni alike," stated Wendy Elliot, career counselor and VALUE program coordinator. "The VALUE program provides important information to a student to explore career interests."

Students seeking placement in the VALUE program are required to attend a general meeting to discuss the program objectives, responsibilities and format. The final two general meetings will be held in the Connelly Center Cinema, the next meeting being Nov. 17 at 2:30 p.m.

Later, students meet on an individual basis with a career counselor for a pre-placement interview to determine if the program is appropriate to meet the student's needs at that time.

Once accepted into VALUE, through guidance from a career counselor, undergraduate students are matched with one or more Villanova alumni in their workplace to observe and discuss the field of work the graduate is engaged in.

The alumni's role is to communicate with students about their career area, giving students a behind-the-scenes look at their work. "Students are able to observe a career from a personal perspective," said Elliot, "and are given first hand, current career information. This will help students better assess their career choices."

Those students eligible, juniors, sophomores and second semester freshman enter into the program and mutually agree to meet at the alumni work setting, upon their own arrangements.

The student is responsible in contacting the chosen host or hostess and in making arrangements for a meeting time and place.

Elliot added that this is in no way a job placement program nor does it account for any school credits.

Approximately 4,000 alumni were approached to become involved in the VALUE program and Elliot reported, so far, over 350 have agreed to sponsor students.

Starting with a local group, students may now choose from active alumni in the five county areas. This geographic limit, Elliot explained is "necessary in the beginning to facilitate arranging visits during the students academic time, rather than having to wait and rely on a vacation period."

Elliot predicted that at a future date, the program has potential to expand to a broader geographical area.

"The program is restricted to second semester freshmen, sophomores and juniors to insure the initial success of VALUE, Elliot explained that "most first semester freshmen are not able to see how academics will play into an area of interest, and seniors will not be able to make use of the information given by this program.

Furthermore, Elliot pointed out that the alumni wanted insurance that this would not become a job search strategy.

The Career Development Center coincided its work with the Alumni Office to initiating VALUE.

After alumni returned a notice stating their interest for participation in the program, 'Fact Sheet,' to further explain the program, was sent out with a 'Volunteer Profile form.'

Information gained from the alumni included occupational field, degree of education, and background skills relative to their career and the success in that field.

Students are able to sort through files of the active VALUE alumni which are divided up according to occupation and major. "This division enables the student to answer the question "What can I do with my major out in the world?" Elliot commented.

Files are most abundant for liberal arts, English and accounting majors, although Elliot reported they have "many opportunities open for all majors. Those alumni who responded positively range from executive officers, presidents and vice presidents, to those younger alumni who are moving up the ranks in corporate businesses."

Not to inconvenience alumni and to make appointments more readily accessible to students, most VALUE interactions will be for a half day, Elliot added, however, that "those alumni who indicated they wanted to host a student for a full day are welcomed to."

Richmond, and at other colleges and universities in deciding how to initiate the program with the most benefit to students and alumni here at Villanova.

Elliot emphasized the "unique opportunity" VALUE has for students, in addition to the benefits the Career Development Center gains "by being able to get the students to come in to the office earlier in their college career which will result in less stress and better preparation once the students are seniors."

There will be an additional informational meeting for science, engineering, chemistry and physics students. The meeting will be directed in providing the opportunities available specifically for students in the sciences.

This meeting will also be held in the Connelly Center Cinema on Nov. 29 at 3 p.m.

The presentation lasts approximately 30 minutes and Elliot added that she would be "more than happy to give a presentation at any social club, hall or dorm meeting to introduce students to the program."

Jobs on the Rise

By DIANA K. SUGG

According to college placement officers and employees, hiring of college graduates nationwide is expected to increase in 1984. After months of gloomy forecasts, it appears that employers plan to hire 24 percent more graduates this year in all four curricular areas and at each degree level.

"The big thing is that we've been on a downward curve for some time," says Jack Shingleton, Michigan State University placement director. "I think we've bottomed out, and we've started back up."

Although Shingleton and others have little hard data on which to base their optimism, they take heart from the attitude of the recruiters moving back onto the campuses this fall.

"People finally believe we're in a recovery," commented University of California-Berkeley placement head James Briggs. "They're more optimistic, and companies anticipate a return to growth."

This "return to growth" is seen in the fact that the firms are not cancelling at nearly the rate they were last year. Also, many campuses have found that more firms are visiting them. The University of Texas-Austin reports the number of firms this year to be six hundred, as compared to 490 last year. In addition, even schools where the same number of firms are recruiting, the companies plan to hire more people than last year. Shingleton stated that "one of the Big Eight accounting firms was telling me that it was planning to hire ten percent more people."

One of the more encouraging signs is the estimate that 57 percent of 443 employers interviewed expect the economic outlook for their organization to improve in the last half of 1983.

Recruitment seems to be rising most significantly among business and marketing majors, and from high-technology companies. The market for teachers is still sluggish, although some predict it will pick up dramatically in a few years, as fewer students major in education and more children enter school.

Recruitment in the energy industry, which was hard hit, is still off. Liberal arts majors are drawing greater appreciation, as recruiters show increased interest in hiring generalists and are softening their former strict requirements for technical training. Briggs commented that liberal arts majors seemed to be having luck in management, financial services, and retailing.

Although these figures may at first seem to indicate sizeable increases, it must be kept in mind that they are being compared with the last two years, a time which was the most depressed job market for college graduates in recent years. This means that although employers will be hiring more, the market will not be the one of several years ago where it was not uncommon for an engineering student to be offered up to seven jobs.

Some of the placement officers' optimism is tentative, as they believe the increase in hiring has a lot to do with timing. Victor Lindquist, placement director at Northwestern University said that the 1984 presidential elections will inspire a lot of "economic pump priming" and much will depend on whether the basic industries "perk up."

Trackster Hit by Car

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

Villanova track member Craig Morris suffered injuries after being struck by an automobile entering the driveway of St. Mary's Hall on Oct. 24

At approximately 9:20 p.m. driver Douglas Siberski, 19, of Newtown Square, reportedly drove his 1983 Plymouth Sapporo on the wrong side of the roadway under dark and wet driving conditions, striking the victim, Morris, who was standing on the curbline area on the south side of the driveway.

A volunteer ambulance carried the injured man to Bryn Mawr Hospital for treatment.

Witnesses David Raickle of King of Prussia and Anne Walfer from Broomall indicated, as the police investigation did, that Siberski's vehicle was traveling north on North Springmill Road and did drive on the left side of the highway approximately 10 to twelve yards to where traffic was slowing down for a red traffic light at the North Spring Mill Road and County Line Road intersection.

As Siberski's car entered the driveway of St. Mary's Hall, he did drive on the wrong side of the roadway, the witnesses reported, and resulted in striking Morris.

Investigating officer R.J. Dorkoski from the Radnor Township Police, responded to the scene of the accident and acted as investigating officer. According to his police report, Siberski's car was traveling at an unknown estimated travel speed upon impact of the accident. There is a 25 mile per hour speed limit posted near the accident site. Siberski's car did not require towing from the scene of the accident.

Morris, the only one to be injured in the accident, is a member of the track team. Injuries to Morris from the accident, will "cause me to be temporarily unable to participate in track," commented Morris. "Let's just say I will be out of commission for awhile."

Scholarship Nominees Announced

By GARY R. DYER

The University Fellowship Committee has named six students as official Villanova candidates for four national scholarships, acording to Dr. Michael Burke, chairman of the committee of eight faculty members.

Michael Gormley, a senior Honors/Philosophy major, advanced to regional competition in the Rhodes Scholarship program. These scholarships provide two or three years of study at Oxford University in England, and 32 scholarships are awarded each year to U.S. college seniors or graduates. Applicants are judged on literary and scholastic achievements, character, leadership and involvement in sports. The Rhodes Scholarships were established in 1903 by the will of British diamond-mining millionaire Cecil Rhodes.

Mary Lu Hill, a senior Honors/English major, and Gormley are the University candidates for the Marshall Scholarships, which pay tuition and all expenses for two or three years of study at a British university specifically named by the applicant. The Marshall is awarded on the basis of scholastic and extra-curricular achievements and the capacity to contribute at a British university. As many as 30 scholarships are awarded each year. The Rhodes and Marshall scholarships are recognized as the most prestigious available to graduating seniors, and past winners can be found in the top ranks of many fields, particularly government, law and scholarship.

The Fellowship Committee has recommended seniors Robert Kelly, accounting major, and Robert Zampetti, Honors/Philosophy major, to advance in the selection process for Fulbright Scholarships, which allow for a year of research or work in a specific foreign country. Approximately 500 are granted to seniors and graduate students each year. Applicants are judged as much on their proposed activity and their ability to do it well as on their more general achievements. "The competitiveness for the grant depends on the demand to go that particular country," said Burke. Kelly hopes to study marketing strategies in Ireland, and Zampetti wants to teach in a French secondary school.

Sophomore Honors majors Theresa Filicko and Lydia Saad will be competing with hundreds of other students for 100 Truman Scholarships, which pay for the last two years of college and the first two years of law or graduate school. Applicants, who are required to be planning careers in public service, are evaluated on their potential for leadership in government and experience in public-sector work as well as their academic achievements.

Three times Villanova students have won national scholarships. Donna Collins in the early seventies and Robert Ackerman last year won a Fulbright grant and, also last year, Lisa Colautti was awarded a Truman Scholarship.

This year's candidates are now submitting full applications and essays to the regional selection committees. After examing these materials the committees pick the students whom they will interview in person. "Last year in Pennsylvania there were something like sixty or seventy Rhodes applicants," said Burke, "and only 12 were invited to an interview." For the Fulbright there is no interview; Rhodes and Marshall interviews are in December and the winners announced soon after. Truman interviews are in February and decisions are announced in March. These scholarships are distributed with a certain number going to each of the several regions delineated on the basis of population.

Burke stresses that these awards go beyond simply meeting requirements. "The idea is to come across someone who is special. High grades are presumed, but they alone aren't going to get you anything; so students pursuing one of these scholarships should go out of their way to do something original, whether it's publishing literary work, major research, or some sort of summer employment which really sets you apart."

size of the library in proportion to the University, and the "substantial amount of money going to athletic scholarships" relative to student aid as a whole.

"There is no news in those observations," Burke said.

"I don't think the library is weak," added Burke. "The number of volumes is not the only way to judge it.

"A standard 12-hour teaching load is high for a school of the quality Villanova wants to be considered," Burke continued. "The actual average is not that high.

"Financial aid, in my opinion, is underfunded," contended Burke. "An increase in the number of Presidential scholarships and an increase for financial aid proposed for next year's budget are good signs.

"The final decision will be based on what we are and what we have done. There's nothing we can do now that can make a difference," Burke said.

Phi Beta Kappa "is one of the oldest, most prestigious national honors fraternities," claimed Burke. "It's the most recognized outside of academic circles."

There is no formal accrediting of arts and sciences as there is in business, engineering and nursing. "Phi Beta Kappa has come to be recognized as one indication of excellence in arts and science," Burke explained.

The next step in the evaluation of the University is a two-day campus visit by three members of the committee on qualifications. The visit is scheduled for mid-March.

"The committee members will interview a variety of administrators, faculty and students," said Burke. "Our hope is that they will see Villanova at its best."

The final recommendation will be presented at a full convention of fraternity members in the summer of 1985, at which time the application will be voted upon. "The graduates of the class of 1986 would be eligible," Burke speculated.

"The administration is very much behind this," concluded Burke. "No one loses by getting it. Our hope is that our strengths will outweigh our weaknesses. I am cautiously optimistic that we will have Phi Beta Kappa .

to listen to your show. There's no incentive for new DJs in that thought."

DonVito and others involved see part of the solution to the station's situation in a conversion of WKVU to FM. But such a switch would present problems of its own.

"Our basic problem is trying to go FM," DonVito commented. "But the question is how to do it. It needs some professional influence since it is a long-term process. Students alone will never be able to do it. To advise on a long-term basis . . . that is where the University must step in."

Indications are that the University may eventually step in to deal with the matter.

"We are looking into FM," said Villanova's Director of Student Activities, Lucy Gorski. "The problem has been that in the past five or six years students who have done research on the matter have eventually graduated. Interest is lost each time until someone else comes in and picks it back up."

According to Gorski, if the University did eventually decide to become involved with the station in this regard, it would probably not happen for another year or so. It would also involve having someone working at the station in a full-time capacity. "That person would not run the station," she commented. "It would remain a student organization."

Union Debates Acid Rain Laws

By KATHY SCANLON

Richard Trumka, president of the United Mine Workers of America and a graduate of Villanova Law School, was the guest speaker at the Villanova Political Union's third debate this semester. The Union addressed the resolution, "This house believes the United States should not pass acid rain legislation that results in the unemployment of coal miners."

The United Mine Workers of America (UMWA) is composed of a quarter-million coal industry workers, which accounts for approximately 70 percent of all the coal workers in the country.

After speaking briefly about the UMWA and its objectives, Trumka addressed the issue at hand. "Today the UMWA is faced with a serious problem, acid rain. Historically we have been a pro-environmental organization. It was the mine worker who fought to bring about the Clean Air Act and the Clean Water Act, mainly because for so many years coal miners were forced to work in such unclean conditions."

Trumka stated, "I can see no equity in an action that results in the permanent unemployment of 60,000 coal miners and thousands more employed in coal related industries. This will mean the economic destruction of hundreds of communities dependent on these industries."

Trumka concentrated on the fact that acid rain is beyond our control at this point. "You are being asked to pass legislation that is not supported by evidence that it will allievate the problem."

The legislation currently being presented, the Stafford-Mitchell Bill, suggests the reduction by eight million tons the quantity of SO^2 in the air by fuel switching. Such fuel switching would entail the closing down of mines which would mean nature reclaiming them; it would be economically difficult to ever reopen them, even if the acid rain problem were eventually solved."

Trumka presented the position of Senator Byrd, who is in opposition to the Stafford-Mitchell approach. Byrd stated, "Before this body acts, let us be sure the legislation adopted will not be futile and needlessly disrupt a quarter million lives."

The proposed cutbacks on the coal mining industry will necessitate turning to other energy sources. Trumka stated that "If we are to ever become an energy independent nation, we must develop all our energy resources across the country."

Low-sulfur coal, which can be mined without the environmental problems of high-sulfur coal, would see a dramatic rise in price if this acid rain legislation were passed. Low-sulfur coal has been helpful recently in raising the level of U.S. exports. The rise in price could possibly result in a falling of our balance of trade. The rise in demand for low-sulfur coal will also place a strain on the communities producing it. They are ill-equipped to handle the boom that will result.

As for a solution to the problem, "I suggest creating an accelerated study to find the causes of acid rain so that something productive can be done," Trumka concluded. "There is no evidence that acid rain has harmed a single person and no evidence that this legislation will solve the acid rain problem. Why should thousands of workers be displaced for something which might work?"

The house passed the resolution with a vote of 14-7 with one abstention.

Grade System Defeated

nounced, "69 percent of the student body are willing to have a fall break and still come back a few days before Labor Day; and 31 percent opposed. At the meeting of the academic calendar committee a vote taken on this resulted in a 6-6 tie with the Chairman of the committee, Fr. Gallen, voting for the fall break. So that will be initiated starting next year."

O'Malley provided the additional information that the polls taken off the faculty among the various colleges of the University resulted in approximately 70 percent of the faculty being opposed with somewhat less than 30 percent being in favor of a week-long fall break.

After the Senate meeting, O'Malley commented that it was extremely hot in the classrooms before Labor Day, particularly Tolentine Hall, and that Bartley Hall faces construction noise in the late summer — "intolerable conditions under which to conduct class." O'Malley added that there is concern by some professors who attend meetings of their professional associations in late August, who feel that a break would interfere with this important aspect of their careers.

The most frequently stated objection to a week-long fall break on the part of the faculty members, according to O'Malley, stemmed from concern that it hurt student ability to earn money at part-time jobs over the summer.

"But faculty concern about students," remarked O'Malley, "is not mirrored by student concern."

O'Malley is in favor of a fall break of less than a week which could allow school to resume after Labor Day. He said that he was in favor of everything but starting before Labor Day. He also said that if school does resume before Labor Day, the objections raised would have to be addressed, which would imply air-conditioned buildings.

Invasion Questioned

commented Logue. "It is interesting that the bombing of the mental hospital happened the first day but not until almost one week later did we admit it. Also, the documents soldiers picked up and brought to Washington, without allowing the press to see them, do not lend credibility to our government."

In the short run, this move will strengthen Reagan's popularity," said Logue, "but in the long run this will make Americans skeptical, especially this coupled with the tragedy in Beirut."

"What an American Foreign Policy achieves in one area may be important from an American point of view, but has worldwide implications," Malik said. "Are we working on maintaining a world order or is the world becoming a hunting ground for the major powers?"

Hahn mentioned that "our involvement in Grenada is a product of a policy which divides the world in an East-West struggle, or in Reagan's eyes a Communist-Anti-Communist struggle, while ignoring other factors. This leads to bad foreign policy."

Ellis commented," We'll have to wait until all the facts are out before we can say the invasion is justified."

A Primer on Grenada

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

The nation of Grenada is one of the eastern Caribbean's Windward Islands. One of the southernmost in the West Indies, Grenada is 90 miles north of Venezuela and 1,900 miles southeast of Miami.

The islands of Carriacou and Pettit Martinique are also a part of Grenada.

Occupying an area the size of the city of Philadelphia (133 square miles), Grenada has a population of 110,000. Grenada is also home of the St. George's University Medical School, where many American students receive their medical training.

First sighted by Christopher Columbus in 1498, Grenada was settled by the French beginning in 1650, but the island became a point of dispute between France and England, and was alternately occupied by both nations until 1783, when it became permanently British.

In 1967, Grenada became an associated state of Britain with full internal self-government. Complete independence was achieved in February 1974.

A military coup in 1979 deposed the elected prime minister, Eric Gairy, who was replaced with a Marxist government led by Maurice Bishop.

Bishop was assassinated in another coup Oct. 19.

W. Wilson Goode

Readers of this week's edition will notice that there are several items pertaining to the current tense, chaotic situations in areas of Grenada and Beirut. News and feature articles, as well as op-eds and editorial cartoons, are featured. This coverage is our attempt to bring closer to home the reality that lies beyond Villanova's academic walls — a reality that must be understood by everyone.

Another issue closer to home and with national as well as local significance, is the Nov. 8 Philadelphia mayoral election. Last spring, we supported W. Wilson Goode over Frank Rizzo in the Democratic primary because of Goode's ideas and visions to bring progress and stability to Philadelphia; a Rizzo victory would have been disastrous in the local and national eye. Goode's win signified that Philadelphians want progress, not repression.

To say Goode is a shoo-in for the mayoral nomination would not be too far-off as an accurate prediction. His two major opponents, Independent Tom Leonard and Republican John Egan, have spent most of their campaigning time challenging, then belittling each other's qualifications instead of addressing the issues that face the city.

Goode has faced many challenges in his lifetime to rise to the current shining position he currently holds. Rising from impoverishment in a North Carolina farm, the frontrunning candidate is a well-prepared, well-informed administrator. A Wharton School graduate, Goode served on the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission from 1978 until 1980, becoming the commission's chairman. In 1980, Mayor Bill Green appointed him to the city's managing director's job, making him the first black to hold the post. He earlier developed many of his close, current neighborhood ties by serving a dozen years as a representative for a nonprofit housing group in Philadelphia.

Since Goode's victory in May, he has spent most of his time strengthening his already formidable campaign. He has won the endorsement of the city's Democratic organization, most of its labor unions and its major newspapers. All the candidates have spoke on Philadelphia's future, but none so eloquently and precisely as W. Wilson Goode.

A large percentage of the Villanova student body are Philadelphians, eligible to vote in the election.

We urge those eligible to vote to do so, not only in the mayoral election but in all general elections. The chance to help shape the future has been presented to the public. It is up to us to take advantage of this opportunity.

Attracting Attention

We just love it. Adulation and fame are the Villanovan's middle names. All the attention the local media has lavished upon us the last several weeks is enough to send our heads spinning. Since the inception of the semester, this newspaper, the articles and editorials in it, have been used as a basis for other articles or cited as references by such notable communication giants as The Philadelphia Inquirer, The Main Line Times, and Channel 10. It is rewarding and reassuring to know that not only do members of the Villanova community keep tabs on our progress and displays of journalistic prowess but that others outside the Villanova circle deem our information as important, accurate and entertaining.

In recent weeks, the Inquirer has used various articles concerning the various raging controversies over the possible restoration of Villanova football and the alcohol policy. The Main Line Times has also covered many of the same topics we have presented and even picked up on the infamous "Killer Tomatoes" presentation. And Chennel 10 called up one afternoon, to get background material and later that day were on campus to film a short feature on Villanovan's use of alcohol.

It's great to be a media star.

The Villanovan will print "Letters to the Editor" received prior to the deadline, Tuesday at 5 p.m. All letters must be signed, although the editors will withhold a name on request. Because of limited space, not all letters can be printed.

A Parent Questions Alcohol Policy

To the Editor:

While visiting Villanova during Parent's Weekend, I was exposed to both verbal and written opinions on the "new alcohol policy at V.U.

My fist impression as a parent was of course, that the decision to become a "dry" campus was probably arrived at due to some very serious incidents and circumstances and was therefore in the best interest of the student body.

As the weekend progressed, and the discussions among parents and students continued, I began to see a much more serious problem developing as a result of the ruling.

The parties and drinking will not cease, but simply be moved to another location, forcing many students onto the roads who are in no condition to drive.

I am not condoning the misuse of alcohol. It is such an integral part of today's society, it must be dealt with as intellectually and safely as possible, not just shifted to another location because it is an embarrassment to the University and difficult to control!

Most of us took the time and cared enough to educate our children about the dangers of over-indulgence as well as the pleasures of alcohol in moderation. For those who did not receive or heed the advice, I feel the safety of the campus is a must . . . they should not be driven away from their homes at Villanova in order to socialize as we know it today!

May I suggest that the time and energy currently being spent on "catching" the violators, be spent on educating the students on alcohol abuse and it's dangers. Why not put the whole responsibility on the students themselves, with a program permitting beer and wine at controlled campus functions. Perhaps those who overindulge and offend either person or property, could be reported by their peers and tried by a student jury and fined accordingly. For the repetitive offender, expulsion could be the final solution.

Confessions of a True-Blue Alum

Confessions of a True-Blue Wildcat, Class of '70, sitting in the Pitt Stadium pressbox on a cloudless October afternoon . . .

As I look beyond the stadium's rim, past the Pitt medical complex, the Cathedral of Learning, the animated scoreboard imploring Pitt's defense to hold Florida State one mo' time, beyond the impassioned yells of 52,000 fans and the fiery foliage changes that bring a matchless atmosphere to Western Pennsylvania at this time of year, why — how — can my thoughts wander 300 miles away?

But they do.

I look up to the VA Hospital atop Oakland Hill, at the plodding traffic winding up and down Allequippa St. and I, don't ask me how, see Galberry Hall, Lancaster Pike, and other autumn afternoons.

I get an invitation to Homecoming '83, extolling the glories of an Irish band, fellowship, golf outings, women's soccer games (2), a men's soccer game (1) — in the football stadium, Mass in the Chapel, etc. A sistine chapel without Michaelangelo, this invitation is. It is a Camelot without Lancelot and Guineveve.

And I get to thinking . . .

Why, however unwittingly, has Father President Driscoll become Villanova's Wojciech Jaruszelski figure, and why has football become its Lech Walesa?

Armed with the Agonistes/Don Quixote baccalauriate of administrative might and militancy, the Anti-Footballisti press on, fueled by a catatonia orchestrated by the likes of the Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A., and sentried by palace guardsmen, the Rev. Lawrence J. Gallen, the "1" in the Board of Trustees Committee's 8-1 vote to recommend football's restoration.

Whither this quixotic journey? The imagery is formidable: a handful of guppies forcing their way up the Mississippi against a floodtide of public opinion. The logic: "The stadium has never been sold out for a football game." Right, and neither has Three Rivers or the Vet or Mile-High, or RFK.

Is the fear of Augustinian clerical politics, the top-secret little memos that read something like "stick with us on this one or you may wind up (in a parish) in Lawence, Mass. or Hibbing, Minn., "this rampant? Is it the price some Augustinians will pay at the expense of common sense?"

Yes, men of the cloth do have to answer to a higher authority — the provincial and the University administration. But it is never too late to grow up. And to learn from fellow clerics.

The Rev. Edmund P. Joyce, C.S.C. took the athletic administrator's post at another Catholic university some 30 years ago, saying, "As we sow these seeds of might, so shall we reap a generation of wholesome right."

The school, of course, is the University of Notre Dame, a role model the Augustinians repeatedly choose to ignore. But Notre Dame's relationship with its alumni, real and imagined, needs not be documented here. But for Fr. Deegan's edification, my uncle, one of San Diego's more successful physicians, is one of the products of Notre Dame's "football mentality." The son of German immigrants, he grew up in the Marquette Park section of Chicago's South Side and attended Mt. Carmel High. Football was a vehicle to get him his college education, yes, but from Notre Dame, as from Boston College, Fordham, Marquette, Georgetown, Holy Cross, have come legions of magistrates, mayors, media persons, corporation executives.

The track record of Villanova is none-too-shabby, either, including a spate of lawyers, pediatricians, junior executives and media of whom the University (if not the antifootballisti) can be justifiably proud.

The tragedy of all this — and it is tragic by Websterian definition — is the obstinacy of the precious few costing the very many. I read where the militancy has cost the university a $500,000 donation, which could mean 50,000 new volumes for the Falvey Library, a new computer complex, new labs, updating the language department, a bonus incentive for the faculty. And I know of one youngster, son of a former Golden Domer from Frank Leahy years, a South Bend native who opted for Villanova, why?

To play football — and get an excellent education. Will he take home a positive image of his alma mater? Will Villanova's credibility in the midwest be enhanced?

Where Notre Dame's budget, endowment and rate of return could fuel the economy of some states, Augustinian "truth seekers" east their eyes skyward and ask, "Why aren't we cutting it with our alumni?" Simple. In the words of cartoonist Walt Kelly: "We have met the enemy, and they are us."

But life is like that with a severed umbilical cord. There is a 1500-year-old lesson for the anti-footballisti, should they choose to come down among us mongol hordes and learn it:

"Why, they ask, do not these miracles which you preach of as past events, happen nowadays? I might reply that they were necessary before the world believed, to bring the world to believe . . ."

On Campus

This week, the Villanovan posed this question to the student body: "Did you know WKVU recently went off the air and what impact is there behind this decision."

"No. All I can say is Villanova did it again. Another V.U. tradition has been taken away."

Colleen Gagliardi

The other thought on the subject that has crossed my mind is the fact that Villanova is a private institution. We pay for room and board as we would in a hotel. I am wondering if it is right to fine the occupants of that same hotel for their personal habits as you are now doing. I believe that job belongs to the LCB.

Please consider recinding or reworking the policy, the chance that one life may be lost in the effort to keep a "dry" campus is not worth it!

Pregnancy is Serious

To the Editor:

This is an open letter to the entire Villanova Community.

Approximately a week and a half ago a poster from Amnion Crisis Pregnancy Center was posted on the Villanovans for Life bulletin board in Dougherty Hall. The poster invites the reader to take a slip of paper that says, "PREGNANT? Need to talk? We can help," and goes on to give the address and phone number of the center. Over 100 of these slips have been taken. I am disappointed to say, however, that a vast majority of these slips have been taken not for their intended purpose, but only to play a joke on someone and throw away. What these people fail to realize is that their actions are not funny.

The Amnion poster has been put up in order to address a serious and very important problem that does indeed exist at Villanova. This problem is the unexpected pregnancy of unwed college women. Some Villanova women do engage in premarital intercourse, and some Villanova women do get pregnant. Yet, when you look around campus, do you ever see a pregnant student under the age of 25? The answer to this question is rarely, if ever.

What happens to these Villanova women who get pregnant but we never see? I do not know for sure the answer to this question, however, my best guess is that quite a few of them have abortions.

Amnion Crisis Pregnancy Center is trying to give women at Villanova and women on the Main Line as a whole an alternative to abortion. The center provides free pregnancy testing and counselling among its many services. If its poster helps only one woman at Villanova, then it will have served its purpose.

In order for this purpose to be achieved with any kind of success, we need YOU, the members of the Villanova Community, to take the Amnion poster (and those that will be going up to women's residence halls shortly) seriously.

Progress

To the Editor:

It has been approximately two months since the school year has begun. As representatives for the whole student body, Student Government would at this time like to inform Villanova of its pursuits and its accomplishments to date.

First, due to the significant majority of the students polled in the Fall Break Survey, 69 percent contributed to the decision on the part of the Academic Calendar Committee to institute the Break next year as scheduled. We would like to thank students who participated in the survey and hope that students will continue to help us make decisions.

Second, during the October Senate meeting, the reoccurring proposal to institute minus grades was indefinitely suspended as the topic for consideration. Acting in the students best interest, the rationale of the student caucus in coming to this conclusion was that the average student would be at a disadvantage.

Third, in regard to the extension of Falvey Library hours, it was stipulated that the proposed schedule of last year's Senate meeting will be made effective starting in January of 1984.

In writing this letter, it was the intention of Student Government to inform the Villanova Community of some recent decisions that have been made. In the future, your Student Senators will continue to make efforts to update the students of our activities. To this end, we encourage your support and ideas.

The Student Government

Union

To the Editor:

By this time many of you have heard that the Great Escape Cruise sponsored by the Villanova Union has been cancelled. I would like to take this opportunity to inform everyone as to the facts concerning its cancellation.

Due to problems incurred during last year's trip to the Bahamas it was decided that we no longer wished to sponsor a trip on the islands. In doing so we have changed travel agents. We found a very reputable travel agent whom we find very trustworthy. He worked hard all summer and came up with the Great Escape cruise in July. Everyone was psyched when they found out the package he had to offer. We were even able to see the ship to make sure that the students would be ensured a quality trip.

However, the ship has been recalled to Copenhagen. The owners felt that they would make more money if the cruise liner was converted into a luxury liner. Also the ship's home port and destination have been changed. It is in no way the travel agent's fault. He had no way of knowing anything like this would happen. The travel agent and the Villanova Union are working extremely hard to get a second trip just as fun and exciting. We are currently looking into another cruise, possibly out of Miami, or a trip to Hawaii.

I know this is a disappointment to many, and no one is more disappointed than I am. I assure you we will do the best we can to bring the most enjoyable and exciting trip to the Villanova community.

"WOULD ANYBODY REALLY OBJECT TO HAVING A MIDTERM EXAM NEXT WEEK SOMETIME?"

Jimbo

Your kind and caring thoughts were most appreciated by all of us here at Channel 6. It's comforting to know how many people cared about Jim. He would have loved hearing from you.

Thank you most sincerely for helping all of us at this most difficult time.

Please be assured that your message of sympathy will be forwarded to Jim's family in Texas. Thanks again for caring.

Gov't. Thanks

On behalf of the 1983-84 Student Government, I would like to take the opportunity to thank the student body of Villanova for their overwhelming support in last week's poll concerning the issue of a fall break beginning next year. Because some 2041 students took the time to make their voices heard, the Academic Calendar Committee voted seven to six to pass Senate Resolution US8283-7-1 instituting a week-long fall break starting on October 15, 1984. Classes will now begin on August 29, 1984 and will allow for a day off on Monday, September 1 — Labor Day.

1414 students voted in favor of the resolution and 627 voted against it (69 percent to 31 percent). This provided strong support against the faculty's equally strong, though opposing, vote of approximately 70 percent against and 30 percent in favor of the resolution.

Thanks again, to all who either worked hard to make the poll possible, or took the time to vote. Once again, we have seen that TOGETHER, WE REALLY CAN MAKE THE DIFFERENCE!

Proud

To the Editor:

Congratulations to Gus Hoban for his powers of observation and reasoning in writing "Changing Attitudes Towards Our Parents" in the Campus Ministry Perspective, Oct. 7 in the Villanovan. I'm proud to say our son followed through with Gus's suggestion and certain many others did likewise after reading the article.

Psycho Apology

To the Editor:

On behalf of O'Dwyer Hall, we would like to take this opportunity to publicly apologize to all of the people who showed up to see the film Psycho on Sunday night in our lounge. Due to circumstances beyond our control, the film was apparently misplaced and we were not informed of this fact prior to the scheduled event.

It was unfortunate that we had spent so much effort in preparing for this program. Not only were posters put up and personal invitations extended, but time was wasted moving around furniture, decorating, and setting up a screen. We lost over $20 from our House Council Fund which we had spent on refreshments for the event, and had to announce to a good-sized crowd waiting to see the film that unfortunately, there would be no movie.

Needless to say, O'Dwyer residents were not only disappointed, but embarrassed that this could happen. Having agreed to rent the University-owned film from the Theater Department for $50 in addition to paying a projectionist, we expected a projectionist and a film at 9 p.m. Sunday night, as promised. When neither showed up, all of the planning and money that went into the program was wasted.

Once again, we'd like to apologize to our residents and our guests for not coming through as promised with Psycho; however, please understand that what happened was out of our hands and that our future programs will without a doubt be successful!

Sad to Read

To the Editor:

As a parent I was sorry to read Fr. O'Rourke's letter on alcohol on campus. How sad that he feels students can't "mix and have fun" without it.

The many A.A. programs would be very discouraged by his approach to what has become a real problem on campuses across the country. My daughter's Catholic college boasts of being fourth on the lists of problem drinking campuses.

I think it is time for parents and college administrators to look to the cause. Are we putting too much pressure on our students? Is faculty readily available to students and their problems? Are the religious truly ministering to their students? I think it is time for us to be as radical as Jesus calls us to be and have prayer a vital part of every activity. "Ask and it will be given to you; seek and you will find; knock and the door will be opened to you. For the one who seeks always finds; the one who knocks will always have the door opened." Let's all try it.

U.S. and U.S.S.R. Exchange Roles

The United States of America has joined some very unusual company. Up until the time of our military invasion of Grenada on Oct. 25, Russia had the distinction of being the only country to forbid reporters from covering a war. This media censorship occurred during the Russian invasion of Afghanistan. We know the Soviets had something to hide. During the first three days of the U.S. invasion of Grenada, the U.S. military graciously provided all the necessary news coverage for its citizens, allowing reporters to remain at a safe distance from the action. This service, of course, was provided out of a heartfelt concern for the well-being of our media personnel, who really have no experience in covering wars.

The U.S. was quick to condemn the invasion of Afghanistan, noting correctly that it was in violation of international law. The Russians responded by telling its citizens that capitalists were subverting Afghanistan and that in order to save the country from western decadence, which would spread to Moscow in no time like some infectious disease, military intervention was justified.

With respect to Grenada, the twisted logic and rationalizaion is the same, only the U.S. and the Soviets have exchanged roles. Now we have Tass (official news agency of Russia) giving a rather accurate analysis of the invasion of Grenada, citing the U.S.'s violation of international law, expressed in the United Nations Charter. Reagan says we got there just in time, for the communists and Marxist-Leninists were already planning the subversion of Latin American countries all the way up to the border of Texas. Had it not been for our heroic and decisive attack of an island roughly the size of west Philadelphia, our neighbors to the south would have already been wearing red hammer and sickle tee-shirts.

My recommendation is that Reagan and company hop the first plane and join their comrades in Moscow.

In all seriousness, the call to action has never been more urgent.

Escalating U.S. intervention in Central America and the Caribbean threatens to lead to regional and perhaps even worldwide conflict. As persons and governments throughout the world call for peace, the U.S. government is on the brink of another Vietnam war. Now is the time for the American people to stand up and speak out clearly and strongly for justice and peace in our hemisphere. We urge you to join us in mobilizing for a national march on Washington D.C., on Nov. 12 to make our voices heard.

By responding militarily to the legitimate aspirations of people for self-determination, the U.S. government denies our own heritage and fundamental beliefs. Rather than support people throughout Central America and the Caribbean who are struggling to overcome decades of poverty, illiteracy, oppression, and powerlessness, the U.S. government has allied itself with the area's most repressive regimes, such as El Salvador and Guatemala.

We are told that present U.S. policy is to "preserve peace and democracy" in the region. But the U.S. has either ignored the various peace proposals made by the opposition forces in E. Salvador, the Nicaraguan government, the Contadora group, and others, or has responded to them with increasingly hostile rhetoric and further military buildup.

Military aid to El Salvador has tripled, a convert war against Nicaragua is being waged, U.S. military bases have been established in Honduras and are being expanded throughout the Caribbean. Military aid has been renewed to the military government in Guatemala which is responsible in the last 1.5 years for the death of over 10,000 civilians, mostly Indian peasants.

Our government's policy of military intervention against the people of Central America and the Caribbean is also directed against us — our ideals and our lives. The present administration's efforts to overthrow the government of Nicaragua and destabilize or threaten Cuba and Grenada violate U.S. and international law, and run counter to the principle of self-determination enshrined in our Declaration of Independence. We do not accept the argument or claim that these countries are a threat to our national security.

As the military budget is increased and draft registration imposed, more resources are cut from needed social and environmental programs. The most vulnerable in our society — minorities, women, the elderly, children — are the ones to suffer first. More than 60 percent of black and Hispanic youth and 15 percent of industrial workers are jobless. Many are pushed by economic need and racial of oppression into the armed forces. We, as students, will be forced to fight a war in the name of some mythical communist threat. These are the people who will fight and die if present U.S. policy is allowed to run its present course.

It is time for our government to learn from the past. In Nicaragua from 1926-1933, in Guatemala in 1954, in the Dominican Republic in 1965 and many other times in this century, direct military interventions have fostered brutal dictatorships and widespread suffering rather than peace, stability, or democratic freedoms.

We have learned from Vietnam. We remember how each military failure in South East Asia was used to justify further military escalation until the "few advisers" became an army — and the death of two million Vietnamese and more than 57,000 Americans was the result. In 1981, Reagan sent 55 military advisers to El Salvador, assuring they would be home by July of that year. Two years later they are still there, and 5,000 U.S. ground troops have been dispatched to Honduras for military maneuvers, and battleships equipped with nuclear weapons are now stationed off both coasts of Central America.

We must not stand by in silence as the soldiers and the deaths multiply. We remember from Vietnam that our protest made a difference. We must join with those voices from Latin America and around the world who demand peace with justice and propose that the conflicts in the region be resolved through political, not military, means. The U.S. government is relying on our silence. The people of Central America and the Caribbean are counting on our active opposition to U.S. intervention.

We urge you to march with us on November 12.

Khomeini: as Deadly as Hitler

On Oct. 27, 1983, terrorists struck a tragic blow at American and French troops stationed in Lebanon as part of a multi-national peace keeping force. A twin blast from two trucks filled with tons of TNT and driven by suicide drivers, left over 230 U.S. Marines and more than 50 French soldiers dead. It was not the first time that such an incident took place. Already in April of this year, a similar method destroyed the U.S. Embassy in Beirut killing dozens.

The question asked in both tragedies was: Who was behind it? Government officials blamed "pro-Khomeini Shia elements within the Lebanese AMAL Organization" — a Moslem group better known as the Army For The Liberation of Lebanon. In both cases Iran was linked to the incidents, but less than 24 hours passed before the whole story on a possible "Iranian connection" was hushed. Twice Khomeini's name was mentioned and twice forgotten. After so many deaths, why is the truth not told?

Who is behind this wave of deaths? The answer is clear to those who know and those who don't want to know. The culprit is not the fiction of Iran but the mad dogs of Ayatollah Khomeini and his henchmen.

Since August 1983, the so-called Islamic Republic, which Khomeini has boasted will "last for a thousand years," has been faced with a renewed challenge from a coalition of Iranian Resistance Fighters, both inside and outside Iran, who wish to restore "sanity, democracy, and the 1906 constitution" to their wounded country. Five years of Iranian resistance to Khomeini's Islamic Order has meant some 30,000 executions, ethnic genocide, and concentration camps for several thousands awaiting extermination. A senseless war has already taken the lives of half-million Iranians. Yet the resistance lives and grows bolder.

To save his crumbling Republic, the Ayatollah has once again resorted to "crisis strategy," that is to resort to destabilizing acts of political terrorism on national and international scales. We all remember the 444-day hostage crisis, the Tabbas rescue failure, counterrevolutionary plots as an excuse for increased repression, the Beirut Embassy bombing, threats to shut the Strait of Hormuz, the exportation of his revolution, and now the slaughter of soldiers in Lebanon. Such incidents allow Khomeinists to distract domestic and international enemies.

For more than a year now, Khomeini has sent 3000 volunteers from the Artesh Hezbollah (Party Of God's Army), a branch of the Revolutionary Guard to Syria. President Assad of Syria has used the AMAL to train these troops. Already several hundred Hezbollahis have settled in the Lebanese town of Baalbek in the Syrian controlled Bekaa Valley. The Hezbollahis have been programmed for suicide missions. Their motto: "To Die For Khomeini, is To Die For Allah. Our Home is Paradise."

With 3000 human time-bombs, Khomeini and his Soviet-backed Syrian ally, can literally wipe out thousands of Americans, French, British, Italian, and Lebanese soldiers in waves of "kamikaze" strokes. To the Ayatollah, Syria and the Soviet Union, the Hezbollahis are expendable. Khomeini needs the chaos to survive and to distract the Americans from the Iran-Iraq war and to avoid any U.S. involvement in the Hormuz Strait. The Soviets and Syrians view the Ayatollah's death troops as an ideal way to inflict such horrible casualties on the multi-national forces that public pressure would eventually force their governments to pull out of Lebanon, without having to commit any of their troops in battle.

Now we come to why the "Khomeini Connection" as I prefer to call it, is being downplayed. Many opponents of Khomeini are convinced that the U.S. Administration has made a "pact with the devil" by indirectly supporting the Ayatollah through a pro-American faction of his regime as an "unpleasant bulwark against Communism." Moreover they ignore the fact that Khomeini has raped Iran's national identity and tarnished the image of the Iranian people, who have had a history of peaceful and civilized behavior.

The British and the Soviets have also exerted their influences through sympathetic factions. But no one is in control of the unpredictable Khomeini, who dreams of reviving the Islamic Empire at the expense of his enslaved subjects. While the West comforts itself with news of Khomeini arresting thousands of Tudeh (Iranian Soviet-backed Communists) leaders and sympathizers, Iranain observers have noticed the successful infiltration of new Tudehis into the Islamic Republic. The fear is that if Western support for Khomeini continues, repression in Iran will reach such exploding levels that any group that overthrows the Ayatollah will be hailed as national liberators, even pro-Soviet fifth columnists. If this happens, Iran will "go communist," bringing the Soviets access to the strategic Persian Gulf and Indian Ocean, and cutting off oil supplies to the industrial nations, at the expense of Iranian independence.

The continuation of Khomeini means the further destabilization of the Middle East which threatens to create a dangerous power play between the superpowers extending beyond tiny Lebanon. The activities of Khomeini in Lebanon are only a fraction of his threat. He is as unpredictable as Hitler on the eve of World War Two and as deadly if the Western democracies continue to appease him at the expense of national forces working against the madman. The free world must wake up to Khomeinism, best exemplified in the recent attack, condemn it with vigor and support the Iranian Resistance and end the nightmare.

Let us pray that the dead soldiers in Lebanon are not heroes of a bigger and more devastating conflict between East-West rivalries. Let all free men and women in the world unite by saying NO to totalitarianism.

V.U. Grad Operates Under Fire

By CHARLENE PARDOE

St. George's University Medical School in Grenada operated as usual until three weeks ago, when the military assassinated Maurice Bishop in a coup. That night, a curfew was put into effect, which halted classes for the more than 600 American students until further notification. But after U.S. troops invaded the island, most decided to return to the United States. One of those flown back was Joseph Cariello, a 1983 graduate of Villanova.

Cariello said that things were going well on the island until Oct. 19, when the coup took place. "On Wednesday, I was taking an anatomy exam when an official came in and said Maurice Bishop had been captured. Later that night, we found out he was assissinated," Cariello recalled.

Following Bishop's assassination, the island was governed by military rule. That night they put up a curfew which is still in effect, Cariello noted. Except for a four-hour break on Saturday to go shopping, no one was allowed in the streets. "We had some food supplies, and extras were brought in, but there were water problems. The only shower you could take was with rain water," added Cariello.

Cariello said problems with water are an everyday occurrence, however. The water and electricity are turned off on a regular basis, he noted. "It might be off for the day or for just a few hours. There is not enough electricity for the island, and they do not have fresh water wells. The water supply is collected from rain."

Throughout the curfew, they had meetings with the vice-chancellor of the school, Dr. Jeffrey Bourne. "Because they do not have many newspapers or televisions, we got information through him." Other than local officials, the only source of information was Radio Free Grenada, Cariello said.

On Saturday, Oct. 22, they had a meeting with the British ambassador to Barbados, who told them there wasn't any problem and she couldn't see anything happening in the future, but they could go back shortly if they wanted.

The following day they met with Gen. Hudson Austin, army commandant of the Grenadan Army. By then, about 320 out of the 650 medical students wanted to leave. Cariello noted that Austin said "he could not guaranteee that many getting off safely. The northern airport was closed off and, with the curfew, no more cruise liners could come in."

On the morning of Oct. 24, they had a second meeting with Britain's ambassador to Barbados. "We could tell by her mannerisms she was nervous," Cariello said.

"She suggested we leave if we were given the chance."

That same night, however, they recieved a different opinion from a representative of the Cuban Army. He told them he did not think they were in any trouble, but said "if anything breaks out, we'll guarantee your safety," noted Cariello. From the way he was talking, the students thought everything would continue as normal.

Joseph Cariello.

Consequently, most of them did what they usually would have done that night. The curfew was still on, but, disregarding that, things were normal. "I went to the library to study, and then came home and went to bed," Cariello said.

At 5:30 a.m. on Oct. 25, however, they awoke to the shooting and bombing of the two sides and watched paratroopers land. The 75th Army Ranger Unit landed 50 yards in front of them near the Point Salines Airport. "The whole invasion was fought around us," Cariello said.

By 9 a.m., when they were called into the lecture hall, the United States had secured the runway. They remained there throughout the day. "We stayed in the lecture hall all day and heard the gunfire," he noted. While they were inside, they could hear a lot of noise and at times "the room shook," he noted.

Meanwhile, M*A*S*H units for the injured Cubans and Grenadans were set up in the school's lecture hall and library, Cariello said. "When the United States landed, they only had a physician's assistant and a medical assistant."

But the campus was not damaged heavily. Grand Anse, the northern campus of St. George's, was damaged the most, Cariello claimed. Its location on the beach made it a likely target for fighting. "A lot of that building was destroyed," he said. "It will probably take a year to reconstruct."

Cariello did not think they could have stayed on the island because of a note found in the possession of a Russian general. When the Army Ranger Unit captured the soldiers at Point Salines, there were some men from the Russian military. One of these, Cariello noted, was a four-star Russian general with a letter in his hand stating the Cubans' plan to invade within the week.

He also felt the U.S. forces should have entered the island. Before they came, they were not sure of what was happening. "Things were unstable," he noted. "We were not getting a straight answer from either the chancellor (Charles Modica) or vice chancellor. There was a communications gap, and we were stuck in the middle."

The med students did not notice any antagonism before the invasion. "We weren't directly in any danger," he said. "There was nothing directed toward us," Cariello said.

It wasn't until after U.S. forces came that the med students learned these Cubans were soldiers.

Museum Maps Memorabilia of Philadelphia History

By BARBARA SIMON

"It is a handsome city, but distractingly regular. After walking about it for an hour or so, I felt that I would have given the world for a crooked street."

tion of the city, Atwater Kent is appropriately named after a local radio manufacturer who donated money for a museum to be built concerning historic Philadelphia in 1938.

Some of the Museum's Art.

Charles Dickens wrote this quote in 1842. The city he was referring to was, of course, Philadelphia. If he were alive today, Dickens would find, despite the complex maze of contemporary Philadelphia, the same simple grid paths that make up this city.

One place to visualize Philadelphia's layout can be seen at the Atwater Kent Museum, in its map room. Located in the historic sec-

The museum is small, but chock full of the most interesting historic treasures of society from 300 years ago until today. Some exhibits include the vast changes of police, fire, and municipal services.

The map room shows the detailed progression of the city from the time William Pennlaid out the street plans in 1682, until now. Maps arranged chronologically detail the growth and development of Philadelphia over its 300 year history. The first maps were hand drawn. Later, engraved lithographs were used until contemporary satellite surveys and the computer assisted plotting of today's maps.

The William Penn room covers his life in chronological order (1644-1718) including highlights of his conversion to the Quakers, his repeated imprisonments, and his founding of the colony of Pennsylvania.

Since the best is sometimes saved for last, don't leave without seeing peerless pachyderms and prodigies of pandemonium. The Circus Room exhibits the most colorful, exciting days of the very first circuses as seen in Philadelphia. The first American circus was in 1793 and held in a covered arena at 12th and Market Streets. Later, three circuses merged in 1881 to become the sensational Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus.

So, come one, come all, to the greatest show of all. The city of Philadelphia is revealed at the Atwater Kent Museum, 15 South 7th Street. Open Tuesday through Saturday; 9:30 a.m. to 4:45 p.m. and the admission is free.

Hermitage Dig

By GARY R. DYER

The Augustinian Historical Institute is planning an archeological expedition to San Leonardo al Lago in Tuscany, central Italy for July 1984, to continue excavations at the ruins of the medieval monastery or hermitage there. According to the Rev. Joseph C. Schnaubelt, O.S.A., director of the institute, the team at the dig will consist of more than thirty people, including under-graduate and graduate students from all over the United States, and will be led by Dr. George Radan, chairman of Villanova's art and art history department. Students participating may take for credit one or two of the three courses offered at the site. The project is being sponsored by Earthwatch, Inc. a non-profit funding organization, Villanova University, and the Augustinian Historical Institute.

This will be the fourth Villanova-based expedition to the site near the city of Siena. The San Leonardo hermitage may have been inhabited as early as 600 A.D. by monks who were precursors of the modern Order of St. Augustine. The archeoligical work is of importance both to a more substantial understanding of life in the Middle Ages and of the history of the Augistinians during the unrecorded period between the death of St. Augustine in 430 A.D. and the formal founding of the Augustinian Order on 1256.

The earliest document attesting the existence of the San Leonardo community dates from 1119, but carbon-dating has shown that pottery and human bones found at the site date from about 600 A.D. San Leonardo and its nearby companion communities, Lecceto and Santa Lucia de Rosia, were part of a group of monastic hermitages in Tuscany. At first they were simply groups of men in caves, but as Tuscany became a center of medieval religion, the hermits moved into buildings, and these monasteries became stopping places for pilgrims on the way to Rome. The local hermitages were filled by Augustinians until Napoleon's conquering army evicted them in 1808. The San Leonardo hermitage was then occupied by native peasants who used the refectory at the end of the building as a stable, laying wet straw against the wall and causing the beautiful fresco to deteriorate.

The Gothic church at San Leonardo, dating from the 13th or 14th century, was restored in 1962. Underneath this ground-level church is a crypt built in the 12th century, and below that is a rectangular cave which was

Theater Course Offerings

By CAROLYN MILLER

Calling all movie buffs: Did you know that in viewing films, there are levels of visual literacy? Do you know what they are? If you are in need of fulfilling a humanities requirement and interested in obtaining some film culture, the theatre department has the answer for you.

Dr. Joan Lynch, assistant professor of theatre, is offering a new introductory film course next semester called "The Moving Image." Unlike the Film Analysis course, which is a required course for all communication arts majors, "The Moving Image" is a free elective course that is organized around a different concept each semester.

The course topic chosen for next spring concerns The Films of Alfred Hitchcock. In selecting the Hitchcock topic for "The Moving Image," Lynch explains, "This is such a timely course because Hitchcock has recently died and his entire work is being re-evaluated. Thus, we will look at his work in the light of the new criticisms being written."

Hitchcock, the foremost film stylist in history, has made over 50 films in a 50 year period (1922-1976). There are at least 20 common themes which can be found in the combination of all of Hitchcock's films.

"The Moving Image" (195-2005-01) will be offered next spring on Thursdays from 3 to 6 p.m.; no pre-requisite is needed to take the course.

There is another new course the Theatre Department is offering next semester, which is also a suitable humanities elective. It is called "Oriental Theatre" and will be taught by visiting faculty member Dr. Joanna Rotte. Rotte is a teacher at the University of Massachusetts in Boston; She will teach here for one year.

"Oriental Theatre" is a cultural introduction to the Noh, Kabuki and Bunraku forms of Japanese theater, whose early influences are from India and China. The Japanese theater is the oldest surviving, traditional theater in the world.

Concerning Oriental or Japanese theater as an art form, Rotte explains, "There is not much orientation toward stylized theater in the West. The main form of theater in the Western world is realism.

"Oriental Theatre" (195-3005-01) will be offered next spring on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 11:30 to 12:45 p.m.

HANOVER

Christian Guidelines

(Father George Magee is an Augustinian Priest who is an Associate Director of Campus Ministry).

The Gospel Mandate for Discipleship with the Nazarence, Jesus Christ, demands:

Love of God; love of neighbor as oneself!

In our everyday lives here at Villanova how do we translate that call to Discipleship with Christ?

As we go through life's experiences, certainly, on every plateau, we have "checklists" of what has to be done to achieve a stated and defined goal.

Thus it is for our goal of discipleship with Christ. What is to be done? What I want to suggest in this brief encounter with you is that we can devise and generate a "checklist" of dicipleship.

A few suggestions:

___yes___no Do I see myself as a valuable, loving, human person?

___yes___no Do I attempt to affirm the goodness and richness of talents within the other person?

___yes___no Can I see Christ in the other; the stranger?

___yes___no Do I respect the world in which I live?

___yes___no Do I share the gifts God has so generously given me?

___yes___no Do I allow others to minister to me or to help me in my need(s)?

___yes___no Do I have a sense of values and do I set priorities with Christ as the center of my life?

___yes___no Am I respectful and courteous to my brother and sister students?

___yes___no As a faculty member or staff person, am I respectful and just to the student population and others?

___yes___no As a faculty member or staff person, am I respectful and just to the student population and others?

___yes___no Do I have a sense of humor?

___yes___no Do I look for ways and experiences to develop my imagination, talents and intellectual life?

___yes___no Do I pray for myself and those in this Community of Villanova?

___yes___no Do I reduce persons to "stereotypes"?

___yes___no Do I drink too much or use drugs?

___yes___no Do I try to understand my sexuality more?

___yes___no Do I deal with stress, fear, anxiousness well?

___yes___no Do I celebrate the life I have with Christ through the sacraments especially the Eucharist and Confession?

___yes___no Do I love and respect myself?

___yes___ no Do I maintain and nurture my relationships with my family?

___yes___no With my friends?

___yes___no Do I read the Scriptures, especially The New Testament outside of the Eucharistic Celebrations?

Now, a certain challenge! In one's own mind, construct questions that you believe are necessary for your personal and Church pilgrimage with Christ. Center yourself on your own goodness and praise the Lord for your life — the very beginning of your mystery. Ask Him to stir up your goodness. Imagine ourselves holding the hand of God Himself. We can daily ask ourselves, with our own language and experience, what is required of ourselves. Oliver Wendel Holmes once said, "Is it required that Christ die in every generation because men (and women) cease to imagine?"

Now, after this brief encounter what image do we have of our friendship with Christ?

apparently a chapel for the earliest hermits. Radan discovered this cave by accident in the early 1970s. He was visiting the upper section of the monastery when a friend leaned against a wall which broke, sending her falling down some steps into the old cave.

The 1984 expedition to San Leonardo will run from June 27th to July 26th. In addition to Radan and the Rev. Schnaubelt, specialists in the fields of monasticism, medieval art, historical reconstruction, and carbon-dating of ceramics and bones will be present at the dig. The team will continue to investigate the exterior foundations and the large cemetery of the settlement.

Students are welcome to come, work at the site, and take one or two of three courses offered there: Medieval Italian Monasticism with the Rev. Michael Benedict Hackett, O.S.A. from England; Archeology, with Radan ; and Medieval Archeology with Schnaubelt; each for three credits.

Students and supervisors will live in the Hotel Vico Alto in nearby Sienna, a one-hour bus ride from Florence and one hour by train from Pisa. Siena has museums, concerts, and plenty of restaurants, and is "utterly delightful", says Schnaubelt.

The last trip has over twenty students participants, as well as some older people who came along just for pleasure and the excitement of archeological exploration. Some students make the project part of an extended summer European vacation.

Cost of participation will be $1495 plus a $20 non-refundable application fee. This money covers complete room and board, tuition, and all expenses pertaining to the dig. Some partial scholarships are available for students with such skills as ancient languages, photography, and line-drawing, or with previous archeological experience. Participants will make their own travel arrangements.

Additional information can be obtained from Schnaubelt or Mrs. Marcese Downey at the Augustinian Historical Institute, second floor of Old Falvey, or by calling them at 645-7590.

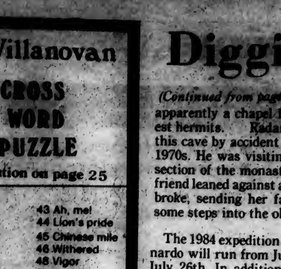
WHEN IT COMES TO YOUR CAREER



THAT'S WHY NSA OFFERS YOU THESE EXCITING CAREER OPPORTUNITIES

ELECTRONIC ENGINEERING
There are opportunities in a variety of research and development projects ranging from individual equipments to very complex interactive systems involving large numbers of microprocessors, minicomputers and computer graphics. Professional growth is enhanced through interaction with highly experienced NSA professionals and through contacts in the industrial and academic worlds. Facilities for engineering analysis and design automation are among the best available.

MATHEMATICS
You'll work on diverse agency problems applying a variety of mathematical disciplines. Specific assignments might include solving communications-related problems, performing long-range mathematical research or evaluating new techniques for communications security.

COMPUTER SCIENCE
At NSA you'll discover one of the largest computer installations in the world with almost every major vendor of computer equipment represented. NSA careers provide mixtures of such disciplines as systems analysis and design, scientific applications programming, data base management systems, operating systems, computer networking/security, and graphics.

LINGUISTS
NSA offers a wide range of challenging assignments for Slavic, Near Eastern and Asian language majors involving translation, transcription, and analysis/reporting. Newly-hired linguists can count on receiving advanced training in their primary language(s) and can plan on many years of continued professional growth.

THE REWARDS AT NSA
NSA offers a salary and benefit program that's truly competitive with private industry. There are assignments for those who wish to travel and abundant good living in the Baltimore-Washington area for those who wish to stay close to home. This Dancing Job is No White Elephant

By STEPHANIE SCHWARTZBERG

In May of 1983, Anne-Marie Riley, a communication arts student at Villanova, answered an ad for sales help at Fern's Elephant's Trunk, a gift store located in Ardmore. Upon arriving for her first day, much to her surprise, she was handed a large furry elephant suit. At this point Riley didn't know just what she was in for.

What Riley discoverd was that her new job entailed dressing as either a bunny rabbit, and elephant or as a clown and delivering balloons or gifts, mostly the former, all over the Main Line and Philadelphia area.

On her first assignment Riley was understandably confused as to what to do once she arrived. "Most people expect you to sing, dance, or strip when you get there," Riley said, but she has had no voice or dance training at all.

So while Riley could have just stood there and handed over the balloons she insted decided, "These people have no idea who I am, (the costumes completely cover from head to toe), so I can do whatever I want, act silly as I want and really give them their money's worth."

Riley decided to really let go, so now she sings, dances around and tries to embarrass the recipient of the balloons and generally creates a good time for herself and those around her.

Riley says she can tell exactly how a person will react when she first spots them. Each assignment is new and she alters the act to fit that individual person. "You know which people will run up and hug you and which will run away and hide in a corner from you."

Riley's job has taken her from Pennsauken to downtown Philadelphia. It also has given her the opportunity to meet several distinguished figures: like the time she delivered balloons to Billy Cunningham after the Sixers won the championship last year. She also attented the posh birthday/wedding celebration at the grand Rosengarten Estate on the

Anne-Marie Riley

Main Line. She was awed by the house and surroundings. "We're talking bigger than the house in Dynasty" she said. What is there to do in such a ritzy place? The same thing you do anywhere else — have a good time.

With such an out of the ordinary job, Riley has had a wide variety of experiences. Riley recounted her most embarrassing moment as the time she went to a bank in full elephant regalia — to celebrate a birthday. It was Friday afternoon and as with any bank at this time, it was absolutely packed. She was singing and dancing away, with all eyes glued to her. She assumed that the person she was looking for was quite shy since she did not step forward even after some time. To Anne-Marie's chagrin, she found that she could not find the balloon recipient because she was in the completely wrong bank.

At first Riley had trouble figuring out Philadelphia for her deliveries. Inevitable, she was stopped by one of "Philadelphia's finest" for driving on a street closed to all traffic but public transit. Anne-Marie said that the officer strode over to her car and yelled, "Get out of the car!" When a large furry elephant stepped out of the car, the officer promptly yelled, "Get right back into that car! I can't write a traffic ticket for an elephant. No one would believe me. Now get out of here!"

Riley felt that her weirdest moment was when a woman came into the Main Line store and paid her a few extra dollars to give her husband a bag of peanuts along with the balloon delivery. The catch was that Riley had to feed the man the peanuts one at a time through the end of her trunk.

Once at a child's birthday party, Riley was dressed up in the elephant outfit. A rather inquisitive child spent his time surveying the outfit, attempting to determine whether this was indeed a real elephant or not. After a close examination, the child discarded the possibility that this may be a true elephant with the remark, "Real elephants don't wear Nike sneakers."

Riley's experiences are not always humorous. They are on sad and touching. One time she was taking balloons to a man in a hospital who was dying. The balloons were sent by a co-worker. The co-worker knew that this man had always had his pockets filled with balloons to give to children when they came into his work place every day.

When Riley walked in the room was filled to the brim with balloons from all the children who the old man had given balloons to in the past. The man was touched, almost to tears when Riley came into the room. She found out the co-worker was the mother of a retarded child whom the old man had given a balloon to each and every single day. The old man's biggest regret was that he could no longer bring happiness into people's lives through his simple gesture of giving balloons.

So this trip didn't include dancing or singing, but Anne-Marie spent the time sitting and talking with the man about the happiness a single balloon could bring.

So if you know anyone who is having a birthday, a wedding, a promotion or just needs a lift, call your local elephant at Fern's Elephant's Trunk. For around $25, Riley can deliver a lot more than just balloons.

A Touch of Old Italy in S. Philadelphia

By PAUL DONVITO

"Next, who's next here?" shouted the old raspy voice from behind a sea of fresh produce. With a chill in the air and a cloud of a thousand aromas, the aura of the Italian section of Philadelphia engulfs a passerby. Through trash-strewn streets and tables of wares, the wandering shoppers have a look of a 1930's gangster film. But these aren't apples for sale in the depth of the Depression, but rather a thriving business of the 1980's.

In the heart of South Philadelphia, which is best known from the film "Rocky", the Italian market is a landmark. Only a short walk from the hippest street in town, South St., the market combines old world charm with a strong cultural heritage. With the feel of the late 19th century, the crisp early morning air is cut by the smell of baking bread, fresh fish, and imported provolone cheese which hangs from all but a few of the windows of the local grocery stores. The market runs along 9th Street, from Christian Street to Federal Street, but is centered at 9th Street and Washington Avenue. Along the awning-covered sidewalks, the wares being offered range from fresh meats and vegetables to clothing, and from olive oil to Ivory soap. The main staple, fresh produce, is brought in daily from the riverside depots only a short distance from the market itself.

9th and Washington. The Heart of The Italian Market.

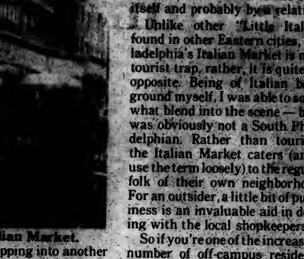
Running along behind these outdoor produce stands are stores bearing such names as the D'Orzio Cheese Company, and Anatasio's Fresh Seafood. These stores have a distinct old European feel, with their ownership often spanning two or three generations in the same family. This family tradition can easily make one feel like an outsider stepping into another country or even another era.

In the heart of the market, at the corner of 9th and Washington, advertising a full line of provisions is P & F Giordanos. Seemingly the largest store in the market, Giordanos features such imported delicacies as imported meats and cheeses, fresh produce of all types, and, of course, pasta brought in from the old country. Along with their meats and produce, Giordanos sells fresh-baked Italian bread, undoubtedly baked within a few blocks of the store itself and probably by a relative.

Unlike other "Little Italies" found in other Eastern cities, Philadelphia's Italian Market is not a tourist trap, rather, it is quite the opposite. Being of Italian background myself, I was able to somewhat blend into the scene — but I was obviously not a South Philadelphian. Rather than tourists, the Italian Market caters (and I use the term loosely) to the regular folk of their own neighborhood. For an outsider, a little bit of pushiness is an invaluable aid in dealing with the local shopkeepers.

So if you're one of the increasing number of off-campus residents and you're bored with the old ladies in the Acme, the Italian Market can make your weekly shopping trip an experience and not a chore.

The market, more than just a place to shop, is a step into an all-but-forgotten part of American history. Like something out of a story your grandfather has told you, the Italian market is a living and apparently flourishing relic. And to top your day off in South Philadelphia, try one of the scores of great Italian restaurants which hide among the back streets of this cultural phenomenon. For the America of the 1980s, like the 1920s, is still the melting pot of the world.



Some of the fresh produce available at the market.

New Spectrum Facility Inaugurated

By NICK ANASTASIO

On Oct. 26, the Spectrum introduced a new concept in concert presentations: the Showcase Theater. The new venue was inaugurated by a concert featuring Hot Tuna and Bobby and the Midnites.

The Showcase Theater was designed by Bruce Birkholz, vice-president of operations for the Spectrum. Its purpose is to provide a mid-size venue for Philadelphia concerts. Before the Showcase Theater opened, there were no indoor concert halls in the Philadelphia area that could seat between 3,100 and 12,000 people (the Tower Theater seats 3,100; the Spectrum Theater seats 12,000). The Showcase Theater fills that gap by seating between 5000 and 7500 people (for the Hot Tuna concert, the capacity was 7036).

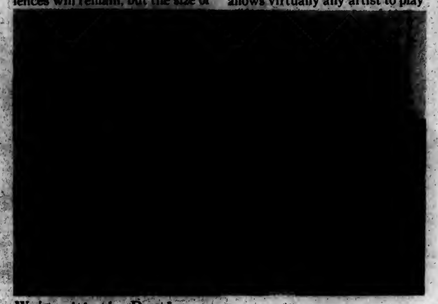
Said Spectrum president Aaron Sigel, "The Spectrum realized a need for a middle-sized venue in the Philadelphia marketplace. Our intention is to provide patrons with a more intimate, theater-like atmosphere in which to enjoy concerts, family shows, and other events."

The Spectrum Theater is the fourth type of concert set-up within the Spectrum. It is wedge-shaped, with the stage located in the middle of the Spectrum. Two curtains extend outward in a fan-shaped fashion from both sides of the stage, with a third curtain situated behind the stage. These curtains isolate the Showcase Theater from the rest of the Spectrum. All three levels of seats, as well as the floor, will be used.

"The theater will actually span the width of the facility, which gives us a smaller, more compact, seating area," said Birkholz. "This concept will bring every seat in the house closer to the stage. All the full-service conveniences will remain, but the size of the Spectrum has been reduced to accommodate smaller audiences within a more personal atmosphere."

The other three set-ups are the Center Stage, End Stage, and Spectrum Theater. The in-the-round Center Stage, which has been used for such acts as Yes and Kenny Rogers, seats 19,500. The End Stage format, which seats 18,500 people, is the most commonly used set-up. It was used recently for the Moody Blues concert. The Spectrum Theater, which has the stage moved forward from the End Stage position and employs a curtain as a backdrop, seats 12,000 people. It will be used next week for the Rainbow concert.

Economically, the Showcase Theater is a good idea because it allows virtually any artist to play in Philadelphia, no matter how big or small a following that artist has. For example, last December Phil Collins had to play three shows at the Tower Theater (two of them on the same night) because he was not a large enough draw to sell out the Spectrum and would not have made enough money to cover costs in two Tower shows. One show at the Showcase Theater, however, could have sold out easily, and provided enough money to cover costs and turn a profit.



Weir with the Dead.

Acoustically, the Showcase Theater is topped only by the Tower Theater, but not by much. There were some flaws in the sound system, mostly feedback, but once these were worked out, the Showcase Theater will rival the Tower in sound quality. Even with the first-night flaws, the sound quality of the premiere concert was much better than that of the End Stage format, which is an acoustical nightmare.

Visually, the Showcase Theater has no equal. It creates a cozy atmosphere, and there are no obstructed-view seats (unless the person in front of you stands up). And people who sit in the last row of the upper level still get a good view of the stage.

As for the concert itself, the Showcase Theater deserved a better premiere. Both Bobby and the Midnites and Hot Tuna started out strong, but lulled the audience to sleep. However, Bobby and the Midnites were able to revive the crowd, while Hot Tuna was unable to do so. Hot Tuna was the headliner, yet Bobby and the Midnites played longer and seemed to get a better reception (bolstered, no doubt, by the number of Dead Heads who came to see frontman Bob Weir).

Bobby and the Midnites have a diverse lineup. Formed by Weir as an outlet to channel his creative resources away from the Grateful Dead, the band covers a wide range of styles. They opened with a reggae tune, and before their set had ended, they played blues, rock and roll, jazz, and even did a ballad. During the set, every member of the band was highlighted.

Weir was the main attraction, of course, but emphasis was also given to lead guitarist Bobby Cochrane, drummer Billy Cobham, bassist Kenny Grabney, and keyboard and saxophone player Dave Garland. Cochrane, a former member of Steppenwolf, was excellent throughout the show, and even displayed his vocal abilities on "I Want to Live in America." Cobham, considered by many to be one of the world's best drummers, was phenomenal on "Bombs Away" and had the crowd going during a five-minute drum solo. Grabney, of Little Feat fame, got to show off on the band's rendition of Little Feat's "It's So Easy to Slip." And Garland showed off his sax skills during the jazz piece. The music was tight, and the band displayed a versatility that allowed them to go from one genre to another with no difficulty.

Just as it seemed that the band was starting to sag, Weir brought the laid-back audience to its feet with "Heaven Help the Fool," one of his earlier solo songs. After Cobham's drum solo, the band closed their set with "Too Many Losers," their best-known song. For an encore, they did "Josephine," during which Weir did his only guitar solo of the night.

Hot Tuna also opened strongly. Initiating the set with a blues song, lead guitarist and vocalist Jorma Kaukonen overpowered the audience with his sharp leads. Unfortunately, he also overpowered the rest of the band, and this set the pattern for the rest of the evening: feedback from the PA system; garbled unintelligible lyrics, and sound-distorted guitar. Even the highly-publicized '60s psychedelic light show did not work until the fourth song.

Rhythm guitarist Mike Falzarano and drummer Shigemi Komiyama were almost drowned out entirely by Kaukonen, and bassist Jack Casady was a non-entity on stage. Hot Tuna played for only an hour (compared to an hour and a half by Bobby and the Midnites), and did only one brief encore.

Some X-rated L.A. Fun

By MIKE NOONE

After the release of "Under the Big Black Sun," X proved that they were not just another loud punk band without talent. In fact, this four member band from L.A. is proving to be an impressive force in today's rock scene. Their latest, and fourth release, "More Fun in the New World," reaffirms the true talent and energy of X. The chief writers for the band, singer Exene Cervenka and bassist John Doe, have departed from the melancholia and gloom which characterize the songs of "Under the Big black Sun," and have concentrated their efforts on having, as the title suggests, more FUN.

X truly deserves much more attention, for they offer so much to those who are willing to listen. Many people believe that there are no great American bands these days. Well, X surely proves them wrong. The straight ahead, traditional rockin' guitar sounds are reminiscent of Creedence Clearwater Revival, and the distorted "three chord" blasters defy even the Ramones. However, this band has a truly unique sound. The moaning, off-key harmonizing of Doe and Exene, which characterized their early hard core style, has been toned down without losing its rawness and creates a sound more pleasing to the average ear.

Musically, this band is superb. The group is tight, as is evidenced by the easy manner in which they breeze through hard core slammers, as well as complicated blues tunes. The backbone of the band, and its highlight, is guitarist Billy Zoom and drummer D.J. Bonebrake. Billy Zoom is the guy who you see giggling to himself on MTV as he rips through "Hungry Wolf." (This is the only tune which made it past the strict MTV programmers.) But, unlike most punks who couldn't play a 12-bar blues progression to save their lives, Zoom excels with fast and furious licks and fillers.

Lyrically, the band concentrates on those issues with which they are most familiar. You won't find any great philosophical statements, but rather keen insights concerning everyday life. However, they are far from being narrow-minded. The first track, "The New World," is about a bum who wants to get a drink on Election Day, pointing out several downfalls of Reaganomics: "A turkey on Thanksgiving like alms for the poor. All we need are the necessities and more. This was supposed to be the new world!"

Their fabulous remake of "Breathless" has already received some airplay, but other tunes on the album like "Poor Girl" and "Hot House" certainly warrant some mention. "I Must Not Think Bad Thoughts" is a tribute to the other bands from L.A., and a justified poke at radio for ignoring them, as well as a statement about the confusion: "Both sides are right, but both sides murder. I give up; why can't they?"

One astonishing highlight of the album is "True Love Pt. #2." This outstanding and fitting end to a great album, is made up of complicated rhythms and guitar work reminiscent of Santana. The song is a collection of images which tell us that "true love is the land of a thousand dances," but also the land of Zip guns, choke holds and the devils drag-strip.

X has proven to be a refreshing addition to the American music scene, and deserves more attention and admiration. They have risen above the punk movement which got them started, to a talented level worthy of praise. Commercial success should be in the near future for X.

'The Right Stuff' Lands on the Wrong Foot

By GARY DYER

"The Right Stuff," a new film based on Tom Wolfe's best seller, chronicles the development of American artificial flight from 1947, when test-pilot Chuck Yeafter became the first man to break the sound barrier to the last of the Mercury space missions in 1963. This rambling three-hour-and-fifteen-minute movie, written and directed by Phillip Kaufman (the remake of "Invasion of the Body-Snatchers"), is first and foremost a nostalgic elegy on American heroism in the not-too-distant past. Chuck Yeager and the seven Mercury astronauts, played by a group of relatively little-known actors, are men with that extra resource of success, the "right stuff." These men are shown as figures of a more assuring episode in American history.

•John Glenn waves to the crowd after becoming the first American to orbit the earth.

In 1957, the Soviet launching of the space satellite Sputnick wounded the self-confidence of the United States. Suddenly, it seemed as if the U.S. had fallen behind the Soviets in technology. The government's ensuing program of manned space flight received billions of dollars in funds and all the coverage the popular press could muster. There resulted the six Mercury single-man space missions, the last four of which included orbiting the earth. The selection, training and missions of the seven Mercury astronauts are the focus of this loosely-structured film. Alan Shepard, Gus Grissom, John Glenn, Gordon Cooper, Scott Carpenter, Walter Schirra, and Deke Slayton are shown being presented to this country as little short of gods, Olympians with crewcuts. The astronauts have to fight both for their chance to be true pilots of their flights (instead of guinea pigs), and for their dignity in the face of the demands of celebrity.

"The Right Stuff" never skimps on earthy details, usually concerning the sometimes-funny ordeals of the astronauts in the selection process testing. Gordon Cooper, played by Dennis Quaid, supplies a required sperm sample while singing the Air Force Song, or the less-publicized aspects of their lives, as in the scene where John Glenn (Ed Harris) and Alan Shepard (Scott Glenn) almost throw punches when Glenn objects to the others having sex with groupies.

Some characters in this film do view the current presidential hopeful as a stick-in-the-mud, but he generally comes off well. This film shows the failures of bravery: Gus Grissom panics when floating in his spacecraft in the ocean, and he blows the explosive bolts of the hatch, thereby sinking the capsule and almost losing his life. The harshness of life in the spotlight is never so apparent as when Grissom and his wife are by their front porch, crying over his disgrace, and a TV crew appears outside, with more reporters and photographers.

Despite its frankness, this movie is filled with adoration for the astronauts. When they are introduced to the press, the "Hallelujah" Chorus from Handel's "Messiah" breaks out. Director Kaufman's strategy relies on heroism and the American past intersecting in and out of collective psyche.

Film nostalgia is always suspect. The twenties did not roar as much as one might think from movies; the fifties had as much fear and confusion as sunny stability; and the Kennedy era was not Camelot. Most such nostalgia is a betrayal of the past, idealizing it to contrast it with the present, which is always grim until it is past. "The Right Stuff" views these men from the safe, hazy distance of a full generation.

The nostalgia here works at a mythical level. Sam Shepard plays Chuck Yeager as a steel-nerved and steel-jawed far-Westerner, challenging the prescribed limits of flight speed and altitude. He is a man who ignores several broken ribs so he won't lose his chance to try to break the sound barrier. He is an American archetype, bequeathed to us through hundreds of western and war movies, where he has most recently been incarnated as Clint Eastwood and Lee Marvin.

Kaufman utilizes bits of heroism as they appear in the racial (or at least cinematic) memory. In the early part of the film, (dealing with Yeager and the test pilots), we see rolling fields of wheat, two plane crashes, and two scenes of graveside hymn-singing which are shot against a sky lit golden by the setting sun. Brave death memorialized against the domestic landscape — an image with echoes from war dramas and TV movies.

A more crude manipulation is the use of period detail as a hook, a common device for a director who doubts that the amnesiacs watching remember something of the era depicted. "Ed Sullivan Show" clips with space jokes convey too little of the perceptions about the astronauts; they are given as bits of the late fifties. Kaufman delights in period songs: "The Tennessee Waltz" for the forties, "Good Golly, Miss Molly" for the fifties. It's amazing he didn't throw in the Beach Boys' "I Get Around" for the space flight scenes. The Soviets are treated by Gliere's lumbering "Russian Sailors' Dance," but the film deals out stereotypes whenever it depicts non-Americans: the German scientists who provide the space program's technology are shown as cold, technocratic eggheads mean enough not to give our boys a window in the capsule.

The protagonist of "The Right Stuff" is not Yeager or any of the astronauts, but rather their common strength or effort. This is the emotional hook of a film which relates a series of exciting events lacking a dramatic tension (after all, we know John Glenn survives). To use imaginary ties in place of a compelling concern is theoretically sound (plot can be the least important element of drama), and it works here in a soft-headed way; but when the euphoria fades and you think about what you've seen, the film is on weak legs. And if you lack the necessary preconceptions, forget it.

Although "The Right Stuff" cannot bear much thoughtful analysis, the giddy excitement of the accomplishments shown is still fun. The acting and art direction are superb, and this will probably be a breakthrough for actors Ed Harris, Dennis Quaid, Scott Glenn, and Sam Shepard (who is also a Pulitzer Prize winning playwright). There is lots of low comedy, sometimes funny, often using lavatory humor.

The film is too long, although it does maintain movement. It is a shame, however, that this film could have been so much better: shorter, sharper in focus, and lighter without all that excess mythocinematic baggage.

Gloria Steinem Confronts All the Issues

By BARBARA TESKIN

"Gloria Steinmen sitting in a tree, w-o-r-k-i-n-g, first comes love . . . then comes abortion, then comes Gloria's ERA revolution."

This childhood jumprope song is but a simple paradigm of Steinmen's first book, Outrageous Acts and Everyday Rebellions. A New York Times best seller, this book is a compilation of Steinmen's articles, speeches and reflections from the past 20 years, and it's all about feminism.

The book is as controversial as it is provocative because of the adamant stand Steinmen places behind reproductive freedom and abortion. Therefore, anti-abortionists might be turned off by this book because of their collective moral conscience. Some men might also shun the book for reasons raging from chauvinism to fright (because of her assertiveness), to concerted ignorance about sexual conflicts of today. Transsexuals will hate the book because of Steinmen's disapproval of them. In one chapter called "Transsexualism" she concluded, "If the shoe doesn't fit, must we change the foot?" Steinmen calls a transsexual operation a multilation of the body and calls abortion reproductive freedom.

Despite the quandaries her book incites, Steinmen's writing is concise, light in its readability and quite lucid. All sexes may enjoy reading different sections of the book. The perspective is from a woman, and in this male-oriented world, the approach is fresh and realistic.

Humor is an evident characteristic in Outrageous Acts and Everyday Rebellions. Because Steinmen injects a lighter tone now and then, the book is more enjoyable. In the chapter titled "If Men Could Menstruate," she speculates on the fantasy of men menstruating and vice versa for women. Steinmen cleverly takes a serious problem related only to women and creates a magnificent pun on role reversals. Just imagine how different society would react to "period" problems if only men had them. "Clearly, menstruation would become an enviable, boast-worthy, masculine event: men would brag about how long and how much . . . some men would pay for the prestige of such commercial brands as Paul Newman Tampons, Muhammad Ali's Rope-a-Dope Pads . . . (and) to prevent monthly work loss among the powerful, Congress would fund a National Institute of Dysmenorrhea."

The humor is as purposeful as her seriousness, and for the most part, Steinmen writes to the point. "Networking" is an example of her confrontation to obstacles women face in the business world, and Steinmen offers possible solutions. She talks about how women define power differently from men, and gives examples of boundary-crossing networking that have worked. Steinmen says, "Women of every race are the only discriminated-against group with no territory, no country of our own, not even a neighborhood."

There are 27 chapters in Outrageous Acts and Everyday Rebellions and each one can be read in separate context from the other. Jointly they represent Steinmen's own personal progress towards strengthening feminine awareness and real equal opportunities. The introduction and "Ruth's Song" give tremendous autobiographical insight into Steinmen the person. By far, the most controversial chapter is the one about Hitler as Steinmen discounts the analogy of Hitler's concentration camp to abortion clinics.

Outrageous Acts and Everyday Rebellions is the platform and theology behind ERA. Steinmen uses history, humor and exploits of horror to convey her urgent messages. For Steinmen, four great goals must be achieved in the future: reproductive freedom, work redefined, democratic families, and depoliticized culture. The book touches on the past progress and future outlook for these four goals. It is a book that needs to be glanced at, at one time or another, because of the many feministic issues that need to be confronted today.

'Coppelia' Dazzles the Stage

By JAYNE M. STUART

The Pennsylvania Ballet's latest effort was Coppelia, under the direction of Robert Weiss and Peter Martins. The performance was a breath of fresh air for the Philadelphia audience. Not only is Coppelia a charming story, but the ability of the dancers is superb. The audience delighted in leaps and pirouettes about the stage for approximately two hours.

The story is of a young girl (Swanilda) and her fiance and the problems that arise when he falls in love with a girl who is actually a doll. Until the fact that Coppelia is a doll is revealed, much distress is experienced on the part of Swanilda. When Swanilda, performed by Victoria Lyras, and her friends find the key to the toymaker's shop, lots of fun ensues and the alarming discovery of Coppelia's true identity is unearthed. In the end, Swanilda and Franz (her fiance) are reunited and the whole village rejoices.

One of the simply amazing qualities of ballet is the ability to tell a story without the use of any words. The characters in Coppelia convey emotions such as frustration, happiness, curiosity, and jealousy by the movement of an arm or a simple gesture.

In Act I, the manner in which Swanilda tries to become friends with Coppelia is a perfect display of the feelings of frustration. She dances, bows and curtsies for Coppelia to no avail; the stonefaced Coppelia does not respond. Eventually, Swanilda becomes angry and stamps her feet, and runs off. The grace and agility with which this is done is beyond words. Lyras bends and stretches in directions that seem to contradict gravity, not to mention anatomical boundaries. Her movements seem effortless, which only means that they require endless amounts of energy and exertion.

The stage comes alive with village people all dancing in syncopation. Each leg rises simultaneously, and the group leans and pulls together.

Special mention must be made of Marin Boieru's portrayal of Franz. His gestures are priceless — when he flirts with Coppelia in the window, he embodies all the traits of a vain, young man. It is obvious why he was chosen for the lead, as his ability shone through the whole performance. His solo dances were greeted with quick gasps as the audience believed he was going to leap right off the stage into the orchestra pit.

It is oftentimes the subtle gestures that complete a thought. This is true, too, in dance. When Swanilda and her friends enter the toymaker's shop, one of the girls must be dragged in, and before she passes through the threshold she makes a sign of the cross. As they poke about the shop, their timidness and uncertainty charms the audience.

The characters that represent the toys in the shop are simply wonderful. They repeat a particular pattern of movement, regardless of whether or not they are standing upright or have been pushed over.

The scene in which Swanilda pretends she is Coppelia to the toymaker, Dr. Coppelius (played exquisitely by Edward Myers) is fascinating. She slowly transforms herself into a live person, from a doll, right before the audience's eyes. She is curious and mischievous and proves to be too much for the aged doctor. She performs robot-like dances and even impersonates a Scottish woman and a Spanish dancer. Again, Lyras' dexterity amazes.

It is in the final act that Franz and Swanilda are reunited. Much to the audiences pleasure, this means the two dance a "Wedding Pas de Deux." To watch these talented dancers complement one another with every move is a joy. Each time Swanilda seems about to fall, Franz is there to catch her. These dances exemplify all that ballet strives to be — graceful, and effortless.

Peter Martins, Artistic Advisor

During the finale, the full company descends upon the stage. This is the only time that the stage seemed to inhibit the dancers as it was too small. It was a bit crowded, but most of the performers handled this limitation well. Most notably, Boieru, who when, given the chance, utilized every inch of the floor.

This review would not be complete without a mention of the fine job done by the Pennsylvania Orchestra, with music director Maurice Kaplow. A flawless performance, no doubt.

In December, Pennsylvania Ballet will perform the Nutcracker. We all are familiar with this story, and one can rest assured that the Pennsylvania Ballet will add new flavor and excitement to this age-old story. If it does not conflict with your finals, go see the ballet; it will be well worth it.

King's 'Dead Zone' is Worth Exploring

By BILL SANTOS

Did you ever wish you could predict the future? Don't. "The Dead Zone" is a film of this sort and carries with it a message of vital importance in this day and age — nuclear war. Although this film does not deal with this subject directly, the impact is still strong.

"The Dead Zone" stars Christopher Walken as John Smith, a teacher who later contracts this special ability to foresee the past, present and future. His girlfriend, Sarah, is played by Brooke Adams, and the politician Greg Stillman is acted by Martin Sheen. These are the main characters upon which the film centers.

There are two stories incorporated in the plot of the film. The first is a rapist-murderer on the loose in the town; the second is a political election involving Greg Stillman. Both "problems" are resolved by using Smith's prediction powers. But are they really solved? Could these dastardly deeds occur in the future? Who will know now?

"The Dead Zone" is a film in which the picture plays a more important part in the success of the film rather than the music or dialogue. Precise editing makes the film smooth and easy to follow. At different points in the movie during the prediction scenes, Smith would appear in both the present and the future. To do this, the director, David Cronenberg ("Scanners") introduced a light and dark imagery, so one could tell which was the present and which was the future. High and low camera angles were used in abundance in this film. This was to show a disorientation of the situations.

Death is the major theme in "The Dead Zone." Many deaths, natural, homicidal, or suicidal, occurred throughout the film.

The Dead Zone was written by Stephen King, author of Carrie and The Shining. King has outdone himself this time. With an intricate plot and satisfying but horrifying ending, one leaves "The Dead Zone" with ambiguous feelings — caution concerning other people and a relief that one cannot predict the future. The present is frightening enough; why complicate things with the frightening future? One is better off to live life and not worry about what is to come. Forseeing the future is not meant to be.

The acting was mediocre in "The Dead Zone," but was strengthened by the remarkable camera work of Cronenberg. Christopher Walken played a believable English teacher and psychic but lacked the intensity needed for a part such as his. Martin Sheen, on the other hand, had the vital, intense madness to portray the power-hungry Greg Stillman. Perhaps the actors played dead to reinforce the major theme.

"The Dead Zone" is a must to see. When leaving the theater, one feels frightened, not because of the fantasy of the film, but because of the reality. This story could happen, with the exception of the future predictions. Rape, murder, fire destruction, drowning, war and the all-encompassing death are in our present. Nuclear war is in our future. "The Dead Zone" opens one's eyes to the grim reality of life by showing it in fantastical terms. An abundance of bloody violence added to the intensity of the film. In answer to the question, "Did you ever wish you could predict the future?" — just ask John Smith.

'Colour By Numbers' Paints Artistic Pictures

By FRANK DUNNE

Once again the American music scene has been struck by Britain's Fab Four. No, I'm not talking about the Beatles, mind you, but the updated version, otherwise known as Culture Club.

Coming off their blockbuster "Kissing To Be Cleaver" album, one would expect a somewhat disappointing effort from the newly born superstars. However, to the contrary, mastermind Boy George has devised several exceptional cuts off the new release, titled "Colour By Numbers" (pretty catchy, huh?). Since their last album, the Culture Club have been busily refining their sound to the delight of Epic Records.

Boy George has mastered his vocals such that they resemble an operatic tenor. There is not one song on the album in which his vocals would not be considered outstanding. Especially with the help of back-up singer Helen Terry, the combination is a hard one to beat. Although renowned for being the band's lead singer, Boy George is in fact also the chief songwriter. "Colour By Numbers" happens to be considerably more mellow than its predecessor, but that format has already been proven successful by bands like the Police.

What is impresive about this album is its simple mechanics, uncluttered by synthesized, computerized pop. "Changing Every Day" for instance, sounds as if it should belong on Joe Jackson's "Steppin' Out" album, with its rudimentary keyboards and flowing vocals. It is a complete turnaround from the previous album, but that is not to say that it is any less effective. In fact, the song only proves the diversity of Boy George's songwriting abilities. The catchiest of melodies is an island song called "Mr. Man," (ooh, how clever). It manages to incorporate a reggae beat into pop music, resulting in a clever, danceable tune. But if it's dancing that you want, have a listen to "Miss Me Blind." Regardless of the fact that the lyrics consist of only five words or so, it is compensated for by its symphonic qualities and once again, Boy George's vocals.

Without a doubt, the most popular cut off the album has proved to be "Church Of The Poisoned Mind." Already released as a single on both sides of the Atlantic, it is to be considered both a critical and commercial success. Complete with a harmonica and a superb range of vocals by Boy George, it's easy to see how the song sky-rocked through the charts.

"Colour By Numbers" is not without its slow songs, however, including an uncomplicated rendition of a melody called "Black Money." Unfortunately, the other slow song, "That's The Way" is an unredeeming effort but does not detract from the rest of the album.

Indeed, the band should be commended for its fine effort on its latest release. It is striking how a trendy band like the Culture Club can expand into such a number of directions successfully. After the hit "Do You Really Want To Hurt Me" from the first album, most everyone throught that was the last we would hear from the Culture Club. But nearly two years later, they have three top-ten hits to their credit.

Before reaching international fame from the newly formed band, Boy George (born George O'Dowd) was a struggling London musician. For five years his appearance brought him nothing but ridicule and mockery.

Today, however, his flamboyant presence, combined with plaited hair and a ton of make-up, serve as an example for the young Britons to model themselves after. In fact, it has been said that Boy George is pop's most fashionable affiliate since David Bowie. Boy George's only explanation for his feminine appearance is that he enjoys doing it, and NOTHING else. In the music industry, flamboyance must be supported by musical talent, which in this case, has been successfully accomplished. Boy George is overcome by his newly acclaimed fame. He should be flattered that imitations are spreading rapidly throughout the countryside.

It will be interesting to see in what new directions the Culture Club will endeavor. Indeed, it will be a difficult task to top the band's first two efforts. As long as Boy George continues to let his creative imagination flow, Culture Club should succeed without any substantial difficulty. Until Culture Club's next album, don't deprive yourself of a listen to "Colour By Numbers."

Cat Harriers Best in Big East

By PAUL MACCHIA

On Oct. 22, the cross country team competed in the fifth annual Big East Cross Country Championships at Franklin Park in Boston.

The Cats went into the race predicted by others to finish second to Providence. What they did was to defy those predictions by finishing first and taking the team title by beating Georgetown and the heavy odds-on favorite Friars. Villanova scored 45 points, Georgetown scored 48 and Providence scored 59. The remaining teams were far back in points.

Coach Jack Pyrah remarked, "It was a great performance by the whole team. In the last four years since the Big East meet was held, Providence has won all four team titles and nobody was even close to them."

Villanova's Marcus O'Sullivan crosses the finish line first at the Big East Championship Meet at Boston's Franklin Park.

Irishman Marcus O'Sullivan paced the Cats by running the five mile course in 22:48.5, which is the fourth fastest time ever for that course. Coach Pyrah stated, "This is one of the fastest five-mile courses in the nation. Marcus ran the race easily and wasn't really pushed until the last mile."

The opening mile of the race was run in the 4:25 range and the pack leaders included O'Sullivan, Richard O'Flynn (Providence), Brian O'Keefe, Tony O'Reilly, Andrew Ronan (Providence), and Kevin King (Georgetown). After the second mile, O'Sullivan and O'Flynn broke away from the pack and ran together for about 1½ miles with each exchanging the lead. With a little over a mile to go, O'Sullivan broke O'Flynn and went on to beat him by 11.4 seconds. Kevin King of Georgetown closed the gap to take second in 22:56.7.

O'Sullivan stated about the race, "I went in the race thinking I had a good chance, but it would have to hurt in order to win. I tried keeping a close hold on O'Flynn and I was eventually able to break him. . . . I knew he would be a top contender to win."

Outstanding performances came from everyone who ran. Freshman Gerry O'Reilly turned in a spectacular performance as he was the second Wildcat across the line and finished fourth overall. His time of 23: 00.6 is a Villanova freshman record for the course.

Sophomore Tony O'Reilly, also running in the lead pack, finished in sixth place with a time of 23:09.9. O'Reilly has been one of the consistent scorers for Villanova both this year and last.

O'Keefe was running with the leaders and after the second mile developed severe stomach cramps. He was still in contention with a mile to go but the cramps took the best out of him. O'Keefe stated, "It was getting very, very tough in that last mile." He finished in 11th place with a time of 23:35.6.

Coach Pyrah said, "If Brian wasn't stricken with stomach cramps, he would have easily been in the top five or six as he has beaten those runners before."

Sean O'Neill was the last scorer for Villanova. The freshman from Northern Ireland placed 23rd in 24:01.4. O'Neill is primarily a half miler who has run in the 1:47 range. Coach Pyrah stated that he was extremely pleased with O'Neill's performance considering his lack of cross-country experience.

Sophomore JJ. Clark finished 29th with a time of 24:20.6. Mike McDonnel and Bill Rahn finished in 51st and 87th place respectively.

Coach Pyrah made additional statements about the meet. "This was one of our better cross-country achievements over the years, even though we won the IC4A championship and were NCAA champions from 1966-68 and 1970. We have a good tradition for cross country using middle-distance runners." Pyrah also stated, "We were hampered by the absence of John Keyworth, who is still ill with chest congestion trouble. Had he raced last week, he would have easily been in the top ten."

Villanova's next meet will be the IC4A/NCAA district meet to be held at Lehigh University on Nov. 12. The main competition in the IC4A division will be Providence, while in the NCAA district II the main opponent will be Fairleigh Dickinson (Teaneck, NJ) led by Jama Aden (who has gone undefeated this season) and Hufane Ali, both of whom are from Somalia.

Women Place 2nd in Big East

Franklin Park in Boston was the scene of the second Big East Women's Cross-Country Championship, and Villanova came away with a slew of strong performances. Led by Mary Ellen McGowan who took second overall and recorded one of the fastest times ever on the 5000-meter course, the women placed a strong second behind the defending champion Eagles of Boston College.

McGowan's time of 16:37 put her only 15 seconds behind the eventual winner Suzanne Girard of Georgetown, and 21 seconds ahead of last year's individual Big East champion, Michele Hallett of Boston College.

The 3.1-mile course, set over a rolling but hard terrain of paths, sidewalks and fields, yielded quick times for the rest of the team as well. Freshmen Melissa Grubb (17:34), Lauren Searby (17:35) and Colleen Gallagher (17:40) ran in their usual pack to take ninth, tenth and eleventh places respectively. Villanova's point total of 59 points was bested only by Providence Eagle Andrea [illegible] with Providence Eagle Andrea [illegible] a 15[illegible]

Wildcats lost to Boston College by a scant 13 points.

Senior Patty Bradley also broke through the eighteen-minute barrier with her 21st place time of 17:58. Coach Bob Shoudt remarked, "In New England, breaking 18 minutes on this course is some kind of magic number. We had six girls under that mark."

Although Boston College emerged the victor in this meet, and is certainly a strong team in this part of the country, the Wildcats will not have to face them again unless both teams make the nationals. The Eagles must qualify in the NCAA Northeast Region, while Villanova competes in the Eastern Region.

In preparation for the upcoming Regional Meet at Lehigh University on Nov.12, the women passed up competing at the Penn State Invitational this past weekend.

Explained Grubb, "We're piling up a lot of [illegible] to get ready for the Easterns, and I don't think we wanted to go head-to-head with Penn State." In their last meeting with the Nittany Lions

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Cathy Ford

When Cathy Ford leaves Villanova, the women's soccer records will resemble her own personal scrapbook more than anything else. As a sophomore she holds or shares every scoring or assist record for an individual season and career. She had set six new records by the end of the season and one can only look at her future in awe.

"I just like to go out and play. Last year I was really conscious of my play. This year, though, the scoring was much more balanced. The few freshmen who came in knew where the net was, so all I had to do was put the ball on their foot and they would put it in the goal. So they made it a little bit easier."

Ford's secret seems to be consistency. She scored points in 11 of Villanova's 16 games. In fact, the only games Villanova won were ones in which Cathy Ford scored points.

"I think we did well this season. We played a lot of Division I and top tournament teams. We lost to some, but it was very good experience. After our first four losses it was very frustrating. But we knew we were playing teams of our caliber and in those first four games we weren't quite ready, so we weren't as good as they were. We knew by the fifth game, though, that we were ready." It was then that Villanova took off, losing only one more game in twelve and finishing 11-5. Ford scored fourteen goals during the season, including hat tricks against Lehigh and West Chester.

"I've gotten better since last year. I have more control over my game. Hard work is really what improved it. Over the summer, I played in different leagues and different tournaments. I played through the spring, too, so that I could play year round."

If she gets any better, though, the conference may put snowshoes on her to make things fair.

LaSalle Drops Cats 1-0; Nova Ends Season at 5-7-4

By BOB HELLER

Last Thursday, the Villanova field hockey team took on local rival La Salle College at Villanova. The Wildcats needed a win to keep their playoff hopes alive, but were unable to get one as LaSalle won the game 1-0. The loss dropped the Cats record to 4-7-4.

Neither team played exceptionally well throughout the game. A defensive lapse by Villanova produced the only goal of the game as a LaSalle player batted the ball past Nova goalie Sue Ruff at 12:20 in the first period. Statistically, LaSalle outshot the Wildcats, 13-5.

In earlier hockey action, the Wildcats played a scrimmage game against the defending national champions, Old Dominion University.

The Wildcat defensive unit, consisting of halfbacks Kelly Harabin, Sherry Boyle, Linda Norton, Cheryl Snyder and Noreen Anderson; sweepers Susan Antoon and Marie Wozniak; and goalkeepers Lisa Buschmann and Sue Ruff played exceptionally well, holding the powerful Old Dominion offense to just 12 shots on goal - most of them in the first half.

Offensively, however, the Wildcats only managed one shot on goal the entire game. One highlight of the game was junior Gina Roman's return to action after being out for every previous game with a knee injury.

Three days earlier the Wildcats took on Duke University in an exciting homecoming weekend game.

The Wildcat offense produced two picture perfect goals in the second half of play. The first came at 25:57 as Sue Lora put a shot past the goalie. The second came with 2:11 remaining as Danine DiBernardi took a pass from Lora and caught the Duke goalie off guard to make the final score, 2-0 Wildcats. Both goals were shot from extremely difficult angles.

The Wildcat offensive unit consisting of DiBernardi, Lora, Bonnie Bell, Robin Garczynski, Sally Poliwoda, and midfielders Amy Hutchinson, Regina Agrusa and Kelly Hart, played very well as a whole, producing 19 shots on goal against the Duke defense.

The Cats' previous game was against Rutgers. The Wildcats dropped this game by a score of 2-0, with Rutgers' second goal coming on a penalty stroke. Before the Rutgers game, the Wildcats played a close match against rival St. Joseph's, finishing with a 1-1 tie.

The Cats season is now completed, finishing with a 5-7-4 record. Coach Diane Moyer comments, "We had a very competitive year as far as scheduling goes and it was a learning experience for us all. We will benefit from this experience in the long run."

NOTE: In the Cats' last game of the season on Tuesday they defeated Widener, 5-0.

N.B.A. vs. N.C.A.A. The Choice is Clear

By LARRY GOANOS

The pro basketball season is upon us once again and, as usual, it forces me to think about the great disparity between the styles of play in the NBA and NCAA. Granted, the NBA possesses a much higher level of talent, but for sheer excitement and entertainment it can't touch the college game.

The reasons for this are many. The main reason, however, is the players themselves. College hoopsters are enthusiastic athletes who are out there to give 100 percent for the full 40 minutes. Representing their school on the hardwood motivates college players to pound the boards, set picks and do all the dirty work. A player in this hustling mold is Mike Mulquin, a 1983 Wildcat graduate. He used to work up a sweat just sitting by the scorer's table waiting to get into the game. The guy hustled every second.

Editor's Angle

Defense in the NBA or the lack thereof, also presents a glaring fault. I think that pro players have a tacit agreement amongst themselves that allows them each to take shots from the top of the key unimpeded. This type of game leads to a lot of scoring but not a lot of excitement.

In college, players take it as more of a personal insult when their man takes them to the hoop for two. It's not uncommon to see a college cager who has just been burned taking the ball up court in an attempt to return the favor. Often this results in a charging call (also a Mulquin trait) or a turnover, but at least the genuine effort is there. In the pros the chances of a player seeking revenge for being beaten are reduced by the possibility that the other guy is a partner in the same corporation as he or they both endorse the same footwear or something like that.

A classic example of retribution in the college ranks occurred during last season's Virginia-Georgetown game. During one three minute stretch of the game Ralph Sampson and Patrick Ewing engaged in a stunning series of slams and blocks which totally obscured the fact that there were other players on the court with them. It was the ultimate exchange of the old "in your face" play. In the pros guys face each other so often in the course of an 80 game schedule that no single game really carries that much importance. There are a few exceptions of course, like a Sixers-Celtics game, but even that pales in comparison to the excitement generated by a match-up of the magnitude of a Louisville-Kentucky, a Houston-Arkansas or any of the other college rivalries.

Also detracting from the quality of play in the NBA are all those long term, no-cut contracts for astronomical figures. If a player knows that he's guaranteed a million dollars a year for the next six years why should he bother to exert that extra effort when chasing a loose ball? Or worse yet, if his contract isn't no-cut, diving for a loose ball could produce an injury that could end his career and cost him an untold sum of money.

In college, every loose ball is another way to prove to the coach that you want to play. If you don't want to dive for that ball there are eight other guys collecting splinters who will.

In the end, college basketball proves to be the better form of entertainment, a fact compounded by its relatively cheap tickets. Eight bucks will get you a courtside seat in a college arena; in the NBA it will get you a nosebleed.

When it comes to watching basketball, I prefer to give it the old college try anytime.

End Season With 11-5 Mark

Booters Take 11 of Last 12

By SUZANNE ONNEMBO

The Villanova women's soccer team completed its regular season play winning the last eleven of twelve games. The booters have compiled an overall record of 11 and 5.

In the past five games, the women have outscored their opponents 22 to 2. Villanova began its domination by defeating Franklin and Marshall 5-2. Two goals were scored by Cathy Ford. Mary Lou Curley, Denise Finn, and Vinnie Johnson also contributed a goal apiece.

The Cats traveled to Swarthmore on Oct. 18 where they easily defeated their opponent by 4-0. Cathy Ford blasted two more goals. Jean Murray and Sharon O'Hanlon each scored a goal.

The booters returned to their home turf to overpower Lehigh 8-0 on Oct. 21. Ford earned a hat trick, easily maneuvering past the defense and the goalkeeper. Other goals were scored by Ann Brennan, Jean Murray, Paula Skinkis, Sue Stavros and Amy Yax.

Although the Cats' play was obviously mixing together well, their true test came against the always strong George Washington squad on Oct. 23. The women did not relent. Goals scored by Ann Brennan and Cathy Ford, combined with sixteen saves by goalie Sue Onnembo, led Nova to another victory. This time the score was 2-0.

The Villanova squad finished its season defeating West Chester 3-0. Cathy Ford picked up another hat trick, scoring all three goals.

The scores are evidence of Nova's offensive domination. However, much of the booters strength lies in their defense. The midfielders deserve credit on both sides of the coin. There was rarely a transition that they didn't control.

The success of this year's team can be seen through an examination of the record books. The squad was able to break 20 combined individual and team records. Some of these team records are as follows: longest win streak — 6 games; most goals scored — 57; most assists in a season — 32. Cathy Ford was responsible for breaking many indiviual records. Among two of them are most goals in a season (36) and the most assists in a seasor(8). Ann Brennan's five goals in a single game put her in the record books. Sue Onnembo broke records for the most shutouts in a career (18) and the most saves in a career (461).

The team will be losing four seniors this year. The absence of these captains will be strongly felt. Starting left wing Denise Finn shares the career assist record with Ford. Finn has been a big part of Villanova's strong offensive punch since her freshman year. Annie Kemp, the core of the Cats' midfield, proved to be a very dependable player. Kemp did an excellent job of feeding the offense as well as supporting the defense. Linda Padula, was unfortunately plagued with a leg injury most of the season. The skilled left footed midfielder fit in well with Nova's scheme of play. Katie Graney, defensive star, was responsible for much of the direction of the fullbacks. Katie, who has great ball control, was a big contributor to Villanova's defensive stronghold.

The team will begin its postseason play this weekend. For the first time in their history, the women have been invited to the ECAC Division I Eastern Tournament. The tournament will be held this weekend at Villanova.

Tennis 3rd in Big East

By ELIAS A. PAPADOPOULOS

The Wildcat women's tennis team competed in the Big East Tournament at Kiamesha Lake, N.Y., two weekends ago, and posted a third place finish in the overall standings. They scored 16 points in placing third behind Boston College, which scored 31½, and Syracuse, which scored 30.

They beat out Connecticut for third place by only 1 point. Last year, the Wildcats finished eighth in this same tournament.

With recent victories over St. Joseph's and LaSalle, the team finished the season with a 14-3 record.

In the singles matches, Trish Stairiker led all Wildcat scorers with three points in finishing in third place in the individual standings. The other singles scorers for the Wildcats were: Zenia Matkiwsky, who finished third with 2½ points; Cynthia Burke and Tracey Brewer, who both had 1½ points and finished fifth in scoring; and Luba Matkiwsky, who got one point in her sixth place finish.

In the doubles matches, the Matkiwsky pair fared the best. They received an initial bye, and went on to win two of their three matches and finished third in the doubles scoring with 2½ points. The Stairiker-C. Burke duo won two of four matches and won two points in finishing fourth in total scoring. One of their losses was the 6-1, 6-0 decision to the top-seeded pair from Syracuse. The final doubles team of A. Burke-Brewer also won two points in their victory over Connecticut following their initial bye. They went on to lose their other two matches but also finished fourth with two points.

Looking back at the tournament, Coach Langran said, "I was very pleased with the team's performance in the tournament." He noted that, "Everyone played well, and everyone contributed to the team's effort." Since both Boston College and Syracuse tennis players are predominantly on scholarships, Langran believed "the team did very well in placing third behind these two much better teams."

Blue and White Game

The men's basketball team will hold an intra-squad scrimmage on Wednesday, Nov. 9 at 7 p.m. in the Field House. There will be no admission charge.

Veterans Spark Nova

Icecats Win Opener 5-2

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

Villanova's ice hockey team skated to a victorious start on Sunday by defeating West Chester 5-2 in the team's home opener. Returning for Nova were 15 veterans and making their Icecat debut were 13 freshmen and one transfer student.

The Icecats' scoring drive was initiated by Captain Frank Segreto, who on an assist from assistant captains Mike Bufano and Tim Curran managed to place the puck between the posts with 30 seconds left in the first period. The Cats' scorer in the second period was Mark LaFond with Bill Davis assisting.

In the last three minutes of the third period the Cats managed to place three goals past the Golden Rams goalie. These scores came from Bufano, with an assist from Curran, and Segreto; Davis with an assist from Rookie Glenn Smith; and newcomer Brian O'Connor with Joe DeLude assisting.

Coach Skip Probst is extremely proud of his team's performance. "We outskated them. Our only errors came from dumb mistakes. Their goalie was outstanding, though, and the 66 saves frustrated us. I'm pleased with our defense, especially with the efforts of freshmen Smith and Glenn, and with veterans Doug Simo, Paul Critchley, and Huston. I'm also pleased with the goaltending of Fred Christie. He has played consistently well every time."

In looking to the year ahead Probst is optimistic. "Our freshmen look good and they are a serious group of hard workers and are extremely coachable. Our schedule this year includes a lot of travel and is extremely tough. This weekend's two games against Lehigh will be physical but I'm looking for success against them."

Waterpolo Flounders

By MICHAEL F. IRONS

Severely handicapped by the loss of six of seven starters, not much was expected from the men's waterpolo team in a tournament at Cornell. The team won only one of five games but several players performed extremely well. Mike Duch scored 14 goals, Steve St. Louis was right behind with 13 scores, and Paul Riley had six goals, as all three scored in every tournament game. The team's record is now 4-9.

The Cats' sole win was against R.P.I. by a 7-5 score on Oct. 22. Duch had three goals as Villanova led throughout the game and held off a late R.P.I. rally to secure the win.

Against Penn State, Duch had five goals and Steve St. Louis had four. The team on the whole played well but came up short, 14-11.

Division II power Cornell overwhelmed Villanova, 19-7. Cornell controlled the game right from the beginning. Once again the Wildcats played as well as to be expected but were no match for Cornell. St. Louis and Duch both had three goals to lead Villanova.

The Cats got two fine efforts from Bob Brawley and Martin McMahon against Queens but came up on the short end of a 15-10 score. Brawley had three goals and McMahon had two to lead Villanova, though it was not enough.

In the final game against Johns Hopkins, Villanova lost 19-12, getting fine efforts from McMahon (3 goals), and Duch, St. Louis, Paul Riley, and Mike Riley (all with two goals). The Wildcats fought back from an 11-1 halftime deficit and outscored Johns Hopkins 11-8 in the second half.

The team has been invited to the Mid-Atlantic Conference Championships at Annapolis, Md. Villanova is one of six teams chosen to play on Nov. 5-6.

Ruggers Pummel Hens

By FRED MURPHY

The Villanova rugby team continued its success this season after defeating the Blue Hens of Delaware, 16-4, on Homecoming Weekend. Delaware, a divisional powerhouse, is a perennial rival and this match represented a must-win situation for the Wildcats, who were trying to keep their post season hopes alive.

The Villanova ruggers opened the game with a try by Bo Minogie in the early minutes and a conversion by Mike Scalzo to make the score 6-0.

Villanova scored two other tries in the game, with another conversion by Scalzo. Delaware scored one try but failed to make the conversion.

The B-side also won decisively over Delaware by a 20-0 score. This marks the seventh straight victory for the B-side, as it increased its record to 7-0. Dave Ritz, Greg Bernocco, Jamie Crawford, Jon Meisel and Philip Merble have turned in stellar performances thus far.

With their victory over Delaware, the ruggers increased their record to 7-1 overall and an equally impressive 4-1 in divisional play.

Intramural Round-Up

The men's intramural football season has just passed the halfway point and the playoff race is beginning to shape up. In the National Conference West the Moon Unit is atop the standings with a 4-0 mark. In the National Conference Central Division Athlete's Foot is sporting a 5-0 record, while the 4-0-1 Stallions are leading the pack in the West.

Checking the American Conference, the Wallbangers, South Philly, and the Killer Tomatoes lead the East, Central, and West respectively. All three teams are boasting 5-0 records.

In the Fraternity Division, the class of the competition appears to be LTD and Pi Kappa Phi, both of which are undefeated at 5-0-1. These two teams will be squaring off under the lights on Sunday night to play the game that will probably decide the division championship.

In women's football action, the Beavers lead the Manhattan Eastside Division with a 5-0 mark. In the Westside Division a 20-6 victory over the Nasty Girls has upped the Mudgang's record to 5-0.

The Queens Uptown Division is headed by TKD, recent winners over the Demolition Squad by a 10-6 score. The Queens Downtown Division is currently being led by the Mighty Mates, who now have a gaudy 6-0 record.

The Intramural Department Coed Cross Country Meet was held in the stadium on Oct. 26. Winning the 2.5 mile run was freshman Peter Holowka (13:21) in the men's division and senior Therese Graboski (18:04) in the women's division.

Cats Fight For Winning Season

By ELMORE SMITH

Leon Mareski (84), Dan Burke (41) and Steve Slagle bring down B.C. quarterback Jay Pafazola. Photo by Jack Straub

Oh, to have a winning season; Oh, to have Howie Long play defensive tackle; Oh, to watch Chet Zalesky drive Freddie Smerlas into the top row of the stadium. Last Saturday, Dick Bedesem's Wildcats were given new life and hopes of a winning season, as the Cats rushed passed the Boston College Eagles, to a 28-16 win. Villanova rushed for 408 yds. (third highest ever by a Wildcat team) as they completely befuddled the Boston College defense, scoring on their first three possessions.

On a day when starting QB Pat O'Brien, defensive tackles Steve Duda and Joe Posch were sidelined with injuries, Villanova played with a tenacity and expertise that had not been visible in the Cats first eight games. Junior QB John Sutphin directed the Villanova offense in the first half on drives of 82, 77, and 39 yards. "Offensively, we were able to control the ball a lot longer than we thought, and that gave our defense the rest to come in there swarming when we were on the field," said a jubiliant Coach Bedesem of the win.

BC opened the scoring on a 21 yard scoring strike from quarterback Joe Palazolo to wide receiver Kevin McCarty. Sutphin brought the Cats right back on 10-play 82 yard drive, that brought the Parent's Weekend crowd to its feet with Dana Shelton racing 35 yards for the score. The Cats controlled the ballgame from there on. Sutphin and the rest of the offense managed two more touchdowns before the end of the first half; Shawn Passman's one yard plunge and Mike Golds 10 yard burst put the Cats ahead 21-10 at the half, as the confused Eagles could only muster a 30 yard field goal after their initial score.

The only misfortune the Wildcats suffered during the game was the loss of Sutphin for the remainder of the year with a dislocated shoulder. Sutphin's brilliance in the first half, however, enabled an injured Pat O'Brien to preserve the win in the second half. BC threatened to take over the momentum when frosh quarterback Robert Loscalzo fumbled the snap on a 24 yard field goal attempt. The Eagles marched 52 yards for a touchdown that made the score 21-16, and went for two points, but the attempt failed. O'Brien however lead the offense to one more score to ice it, with 12:00 left in the period. The Eagles posed one more threat, but fell short when Eagle tight end Tom Carr fumbled in the Villanova endzone and Steve Plastek recovered with 5:11 to go. "Today we were going to be aggressive, win or lose, we were going to do it that way."

Next week the Cats travel to Newark, Delaware, to take on Tubby Raymond's Fighting Blue Hens. The Hens feature a potent offense with three year starter Bill Kolmo doing the signal calling. Delaware is primarily a running ballclub (Halfback Ivory Sully and Fullback Bob Ciccone have over 1000 yards rushing between them) and runs the famous Delaware Wing T. Raymond however has utilized the strong arm of Kolmo and the blazing speed of "Disco" Lou Mariani to put in an explosive passing attack to the rush. Raymond and his Hens (6-3) at one time number one in Division II, must win their next two games to land a berth in the Division II playoffs. Bedesem and his Wildcats, however, need at least one win in their next two games to have a winning season. Kickoff is at 1:30 and promises to be one hell of a dogfight.

Ford Plans to Visit V.U. Students

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

Former President Gerald R. Ford will make his second visit to Villanova University Nov. 15 and 16. The 38th President's visit is "specifically for the Villanova campus," emphasized Dr. Charles Cherry, assistant to vice president of academic affairs, "and we feel the Villanova students and faculty should have priority in attending the events."

The planning committee for Ford's visit has devised a schedule to balance Ford's intimate addresses with his general addresses.

Tentative schedule of former President Ford

Tuesday, Nov. 15.

6:45 p.m. Former President Ford arrives at Philadelphia International Airport from Palm Springs, CA.

7:15 p.m. Arrives at Union League, Philadelphia, for formal dinner honoring "Trustees Associates" of the University and special guests.

Wednesday, Nov. 16.

9:00 a.m. Lectures in seminar on "Soviet View of the World" conducted by Dr. Jeffrey Hahn, associate professor of political science. Topic: "U.S. — Soviet Relations."

10:30 a.m. Classroom session on the U.S. Economy, Connelly Center cinema.

12:00 p.m. Luncheon with student and faculty representatives in Connelly Center. Informal discussions on the U.S. Presidency. Introduction by Patrick Leahy, president, Villanova Student Government Association.

★ 2:00 p.m. "A Conversation with Gerald Ford." Assembly session open to campus community in the Villanova Room, Connelly Center. Introduction by the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president.

3:30 p.m. Former President Ford departs campus for Washington, D.C.

As Ford's visit is intended to be exclusively for Villanova students and faculty members, the former president will speak to an assembly of the Villanova community 'informally' in his speech "A Conversation with Gerald Ford," in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center at 2 p.m. Admission requires a ticket and Villanova I.D., to be presented at the door by 1:45 p.m. so Ford can promptly begin his address.

The 400 tickets available for this event are free and will be distributed on a first-come,first-serve basis only to student and faculty members. Each individual is limited to obtaining one ticket and is required to show a Villanova I.D. to collect the ticket. Tickets will be offered at the ticket office in the Connelly Center beginning Monday from 10 a.m.-4 p.m. and continue Tuesday, 8:30 a.m.-4 p.m. and Wednesday, 8:30 a.m.-1 p.m., or until all tickets have been alloted.

Ford will encounter a range of experiences during his two-day visit at Villanova "which is what he wants," said Cherry.

There is an intimate sense of structure upon Ford's arrival Tuesay evening as he will immediately attend a formal dinner honoring "Trustee Associates" of the University and special guests at the Union League in Philadelphia.

Wednesday will be the primary day of Ford's on-campus visit.

The intimate structure will carry over from Tuesday as Ford's lecture "U.S.-Soviet Relations" will be directed to the seminar class on "Soviet View of the World" conducted by Dr. Jeffrey Hahn, associate professor of political science, with the attendance of approximately 20 students.

"The small group addresses are to accommodate Ford," said Cherry. "This will keep the spirit of informality throughout this visit.

As the day's events continue, addressed groups will populate to enable more students to see and listen to Ford.

At 10:30 a.m. the 38th president will conduct a classroom session on the U.S. economy. Tickets were given to 200 students through Dr. James Clarke, associate professor of economics and chairman of the Faculty Council, who will serve as moderator.

Following this lecture, Ford will be attending a ten-minute press conference in the Connelly Center Lounge, then proceed to a luncheon.

An informal discussion on the U.S. Presidency is scheduled during the luncheon to be held in the Connelly Center. Student and faculty representatives were invited to this event. "Approximately two-thirds or more of those at the luncheon will be students," said Cherry, "to keep in track with the thrust of Ford's visit to be exclusively for Villanova students."

The finale of the former chief executive's two-day visit to the Villanova campus will be Ford's address to the student and faculty members at the assembly "A Conversation with Gerald Ford."

Former President Ford during his 1976 campaign visit.

In spite of the comparatively large number of students who will be able to attend the general address, approximately 400, "if you notice, the structure of the topic speech will follow on the informal basis the president's visit is scheduled to maintain through the two days," commented Cherry, "coinciding with Ford's preference."

Ford will then depart campus for Washington, D.C.

An advance team of Secret Service personnel arrived on campus this week to prepare for the former president's visit. Ford will be accompanied by the accorded number of Secret Service men former presidents are usually ascribed.

The former chief executive will be coming to Villanova as a distinguished lecturer under the sponsorship of the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research.

Ford's previous visit to Villanova University was Oct. 27, 1976. Prior to this Presidential visit, the last Presidential appearance at Villanova University dates back to 1910 when William Howard Taft spoke at commencement exercises.

A Protest . . .

By JAMES H. De LORENZO

A vocal group of approximately 1,000 students gathered in the courtyard between Sullivan and Sheehan halls late Wednesday night to protest Villanova's current alcohol policy.

"We believe student needs are not met by the administration," James Kaczymski, the organizer of the demonstration, told the crowd. "We are here to achieve a strong and unified effort in finally getting student voices heard."

Speaking from a darkened room on the second floor of Sullivan Hall, Kaczymski asked the crowd to stage a sit-in yesterday in the cafeteria for one hour past closing time. A petition was to have been circulated for students to sign.

"We must act rational and responsible," stated Kaczymski. "We are no longer going to take a simple no — we deserve an explanation. For us to be successful, we must be assertive."

"The administration is aware of the issue, and is working to resolve the concerns students have," Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for student life, who was in attendance, claimed.

The demonstration, which began at 11 p.m., was peaceful, except for an explosion in a trash barrel minutes after Kaczymski ended his 20-minute speech.

"We got word from Dr. Neville at approximately 7:30 p.m. about a proposed student demonstra-

A "B.Y.O.B. T.G." scheduled for this evening in the Connelly Center has been cancelled by University officials.

"No permission was ever requested for the party," said Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for student life. "School policy does not allow for B.Y.O.B. parties. This particular event was not approved by the University."

The Rev. John O'Rourke, O.S.A., who planned the event, stated "I thought the administration would have some reaction. I hope I've made a point."

"Father O'Rourke did this on his own initiative," Neville claimed. "We had a meeting Tuesday morning with President Driscoll, and he (O'Rourke) has been asked to discourage the proposed gathering."

"The unrest about the alcohol policy is there," explained O'Rourke. "I've heard it, I've felt it. I was trying to direct it to a reasonable alternative. I don't want to see any confrontations."

The event was organized by the "Committee to Bring Spirit Back to Campus." O'Rourke said "that was a one-shot deal. The Connelly Center is open Friday anyway; the only thing that deters people from going there are parties elsewhere.

"The spirit just isn't back on campus until Monday," continued O'Rourke. The advertisement for the event appeared in last week's Villanovan. "I was upset that an ad would be run by the paper contrary to our regulations," Neville said.

"It's a matter of advertising dollars, plain and simple," responded Leonard J. LaBarth, editor-in-chief of the Villanovan. "The ad was pre-paid, citing an on-campus event that I believe merited any advertising publicity.

"The ad was toned down from the original submission," added LaBarth.

"The administration told me not to place another ad," O'Rourke stated. "I can't even place a counter-ad telling people it's been cancelled. They don't want to agitate people."

"Our policy involves any programming with alcohol to be cleared by my office. No one ever came forth to ask," said Neville.

"Some statements about the state law have not been honest," O'Rourke claimed. "The impressions we've been left with are not honest. It's Villanova's choice to enforce or not enforce.

"This new policy seems to be more Neville's philosophy than state law," said O'Rourke.

O'Rourke said that the idea for the party came to him "while sitting with a group of students talking about alternatives to the current alcohol policy. Some of them talked about disrupting food services or classes. My focus was on an event at the Connelly Center involving all students, not touching the academic area.

"It's a place (the Connelly Center) which should be open to all students to come in," continued O'Rourke. "All we did was invite students in, which is not a violation in itself."

"We are in the process of talking to the subcommittee of the Board of Trustees on student life," Neville explained, "assessing the impact of our present policy."

"I'm just working for a solution," stated O'Rourke. "I think it should be resolved, one way or another. It has to be.

"I hope it can be resolved openly and honestly," O'Rourke concluded, "or the unrest won't die down."

Sports Medicine

A seminar on sports medicine, the prevention and rehabilitation of ankle and knee injuries, will be conducted Dec. 1 in 110 Bartley, 7:30 p.m. Dr. Michael Koury, a licensed physical therapist from York Hospital, will speak. Also covered, will be anatomy and common problems of the ankle and the knee. Sponsored by the Athletic Trainers at Villanova. This seminar is open to all interested Villanova students.

Thanks

The Villanova Committees for the Philadelphia Homeless would like to thank all the House Councils for their cooperation and efforts in the Trick-or-Treat for the homeless. Thanks to you and the generosity of the student body we are better able to provide for the poor and homeless of our Philadelphia community. Thanks!

Bulimia/Anorexia

Counseling is available on campus for students suffering from bulimia or anorexia. If your eating is out of control, if you are struck in the binge-purge cycle, or if you or someone close to you is on an "endless" diet, even after becoming very thin, you might benefit from talking to a counselor. The University Counseling Center provides free, confidential counseling on campus. We are sensitive to the dilemmas of being anorexic/bulimic while being a student. For an appointment, stop by Room 106 Corr Hall, or phone Ext. 4050.

SWE

The Society of Women Engineers will hold a meeting Nov. 8 at 5:30 p.m. in Tolentine 212. Committees will be formed and chairpersons for upcoming activities will be elected. Membership is open to both engineering and science majors.

Coffee Social

This is to remind all Pre-Law Society members of a coffee and danish social Nov. 16 in the West Lounge, Dougherty from 3:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. Faculty will be present.

Kidnap For Hunger

On Nov. 14, Lambda Chi Alpha will hold its annual Kidnap for Hunger. Fraternity members dressed as gangsters will kidnap any student you request from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. from anywhere on campus and hold them hostage in the Belle Aire Terrace, Connelly Center until the ransom is paid. Proceeds will be forwarded to Campus Ministry to help in their campaign to fight world hunger. For more information, contact any member of Lambda Chi Alpha and consult the ad in this issue of THE VILLANOVAN.

Campus Ministry

Campus Ministry is sponsoring Hunger Awareness Week, which will be held Nov. 13-20, is designed to raise the awareness of Villanova students on hunger issues, while at the same time raising money to help people who have to go without food.

On Nov. 14, the annual Run for Hunger will be held from 3 to 6 p.m. in front of the Falvey Memorial Library. This event raises money by soliciting pledges for each mile run by individual Villanova students, faculty, and staff.

However, we need your help. Please consider supporting this event by urging your members to participate in any way possible. Whether it be by running, helping to staff the event, or giving a pledge to a friend, their participation will contribute to the overall success of the run, and of Hunger Awareness Week in general.

If you have any questions, please contact Campus Ministry (x4000).

Volunteer Opportunities

Are you looking for post-graduate volunteer work placement? Would you like to know more about volunteer work placement for one or two years? Representatives from Jesuit Volunteer Corps, Maryknoll Lay Missioner, Response-Ability, Mercy Corps, and Missionary Cenacle Volunteers will be on campus to speak about their volunteer organizations, to show audio-visual materials about their organization, and to answers questions. Come hear and talk to these representatives Nov. 14, from 7 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. in the North Lounge. Sponsored by Campus Ministry and Hunger Awareness Week.

tion," said Sgt. Vince Rondolone of Villanova security. "We were never told what it was about, but it seems peaceful." Five security officers were among the crowd.

"I could see them protesting Vietnam, but this is different," one security guard stated.

In an interview with the Villanovan following his address, Kaczymski claimed his speech was "three months in coming, but the situation with Father O'Rourke was the straw that broke the camel's back."

The Rev. John O'Rourke planned a "B.Y.O.B. T.G." for this evening, but the administration cancelled the event.

"My original goal was to get Sullivan and Sheehan halls involved," explained Kaczymski. "There were more people here than I expected.

"I am a senior, and throughout my four years here, I've seen the good and bad at Villanova, but it's all come to a head this year," Kaczymski said. "The administration is so anti-student I saw a need for someone to do something."

"I am disappointed that they didn't use the procedures outlined for student rallies," said Neville. "It diminishes the potential for what the rally is focused on."

According to Kaczymski, "I went to Neville's office and got their rules for mass demonstrations. We followed his guidelines, but I feel they are inappropriate — they are outdated."

"I tried to make it clear that our purpose is within the bounds of University guidelines," Kaczymski continued. "I don't foresee any problems unless the administration provokes us."

In his speech, Kaczymski described the proposed sit-in as "a large step for students in banding together."

"I think it is inappropriate and against the University's guidelines for acting on purpose," responded Neville. "This might lead the students down an unproductive path."

Assistant Director of Residence Life, John Eccles, also in attendance, stated, "I think this is a positive expression of the students need to be heard."

"We will respond to any detrimental behavior towards the students or the University," said Neville. "They will have to answer for their behavior."

Kaczymski plans to present his petition to administration officials Monday, in the name of "The Committee to Restore a better Social Life at Villanova."

"The protest will only be effective if we get a large number of people," Kaczymski said. "If we get 50 percent of the people we had tonight, we can be effective."

"I am a student representing a group of students," stated Kaczymski. "I am not alone.

"I resigned my post in the RSA (Residence Student Association) because I didn't want to hurt a group within the administration.

"I heard Tuesday about Father O'Rourke, and put my plan in gear. He was speaking for students, and did something concrete," Added Kaczymski. "If the administration felt his plans didn't fit into their policy, then they did their job. But there could have been a better way."

Decision Near on Security Post

By AMELIA McGOVERN

A search committee has been formed to find a new director of security, a job left vacant when Captain Joseph Cunnane retired a year ago.

The committee has looked at 250 resumes, according to the Rev. Charles Lafferty, O.S.A., chairman of the committee. "We have evaluated the applicants to the best of our ability and we've conducted some interviews. We are to present a summary of ur findings to President Driscoll. The president will make the final decision."

Lafferty continued, "President Driscoll will accept input from Fr. Rice, to whom the director reports, and Dr. Neville. If he feels a likely candidate is arrived at he'll meet with him personally. Then if he feels we need to search further, interviews will continue."

Sgt. John Harrity is the acting director of security until a permanent director is found. When questioned why Harrity was not promoted to director, the Rev. Patrick Rice, O.S.A., vice president for administration said, "He has certainly been considered. Fr. Driscoll is concerned that in all areas we get the best qualified person we can." Rice continued, "We are looking for highly trained professionals. People may be qualified without a degree. We want the best professionally trained person."

When Lafferty was questioned concerning Harrity he said, "Anyone in Villanova security was eligible to apply. Sgt. Harrity did not. In an important job like director of security, in charge of the safety and security of the entire Villanova community, you wouldn't necessarily just move someone up." He added, "That's why we have the committee, to represent the university."

Rice commented, "There has been no problem with Harrity. As acting director everything has been going along fine. The president wanted input from all types of people around the University. That's why we have a committee."

Harrity did not care to comment on the issue.

According to Rice, "All the people we've interviewed are excellent. But whoever walks in will be faced with a difficult situation—security has only two rooms and a broom closet as its space." He added, "The professional who comes in will realize that Villanova University will have to do more for security. There is a need for work space, a locker room and a briefing room, break/lunch room. The biggest problem we face is lack of room for our force."

As the search for a new director of security continues, the emphasis is on professional training and input from various people on campus.

Grades Analyzed

By CATHERINE HEFFERNAN

"Adding minuses into the present grading system would redress the balance in grade point averages, bringing the averages back to a non-inflated grading system," said the Rev. John O'Malley, dean of the College of Liberal Arts and a member of the Academic Policy Board. The University Senate defeated the motion to institute the new grading system which would include minuses at its third meeting of the year.

The idea was introduced to the Academic Policy Board last year by Paul Tufano, 1982-1983 student body president. Tufano explained to the Board that when he applied to law school, the pluses were dropped and as a result his cumulative average dropped.

O'Malley is in favor of incorporating minuses into the grading system, regardless of the recent Senate decision.

To further investigate the currently inflated grade system, O'Malley assigned a computer project to be made, to scan the averages of Villanova undergraduates over the past 25 years. Results showed that 25 years ago, the undergraduate average was a 'C+'. Today, it is a 'B'. The tests show that student averages were increasing at a steady rate until the institution of pluses into the system, at which point averages made a noticeable jump.

"I feel that if minuses are not added to the system then pluses should be dropped," said O'Malley. "I do not think that the general average of 'B' would decrease, but rather stabilize."

David Smith of the registrar's office presented last October, a list of changes that would have to be made to accommodate a new grading system. Smith said that "all the forms, reports and transcripts would have to be reprinted, but the major cost factor would be the reprogramming of the computer." Smith commented that it would be a "great cost change to no great advantage."

No actual cost analysis was completed due to the defeat of the system by the Senate.

"I think it would be splitting hairs. Eventually, it would lead back to numeric grades, and I do not think any student wants that," said Smith.

The Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, vice president of academic affairs, is also opposed to the proposal. Gallen feels that the University should have a straight grading system with no pluses or minuses. In reference to how this would affect graduating students, Gallen feels "employers ignore pluses and minuses."

Robert Wendover, career development counselor, said "employers do not even look at specific grades but rather at the grade point average."

This statement agrees with that of an employer interviewed who commented that he "looks at the grade point average rather than the specific grades." The employer did however add that "If there were two candidates for a job with identical grade point averages, and one came from a school with an inflated grading system, I would hire the other more qualified academically. I would consider the one with non-inflated grades to have the better grades."

Judge Speaks on Legal Sentencing, Plea-bargains

By GARY R. DYER

Judge Charles P. Mirarchi Jr., of the Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas, spoke to the Villanova Pre-Law Society in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall on legal sentencing and plea-bargaining Nov. 2. A Philadelphia native and a graduate of Temple University and Temple Law School, Mirarchi was elected in 1971, after 23 years of law practice, to the Common Pleas Court for a ten-year term. He has been an adjunct professor of the Delaware Law School of Widener University since 1976, and in 1981 he was re-elected to the Court of Common Pleas for another ten years. More than 99% of his judicial decisions have been sustained by the appellate courts.

According to Mirarchi, the sentencing of offenders is severely affected by the heavy case-load. In theory each of the ten judges of the Common Pleas Court has to try eight cases a day, "a physically impossible job." The Common Pleas Court must deal with about 400 homicides and 2,000 major felonies a year. When also confronted with the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania's Rule 1100, which states that each defendant is to be tried within 180 days of arrest, the judiciary has a serious problem, according to Mirarchi.

Handing out periods of probation for crimes like petty theft disposes of 3,000 cases a year, but leaves the figure of eight cases a day. Trial for which the defendant agrees to eschew a jury save time.

Plea-bargaining can be a quick route to prison for the offender who commits a second crime while on probation. He returns to the judge for violating the privilege of probation and can be sentenced to the punishment he would have received in trial before. "The time element is approximately two-thirds less. You don't have a jury trial on a probation violation. It can be concluded in a matter of an hour, while a jury trial may take a week," said Mirarchi.

Mirarchi is skeptical about the insanity defense. "The question, I believe is, did the defendant know what he was doing when he did it?"

ROTC Fall Review Revived

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The Navy ROTC reinstated their Fall Review Nov. 1 "as a chance to perform the drills they have been practicing daily," said Deputy Operations Officer Bill McDevitt.

Vice President of administration and representative to the association of NROTC of colleges and universities, the Rev. Patrick Rice served as the reviewing officer for the Fall Review.

Rice demonstrated his ceremonial role as an honorary officer through his reviewing of the 267 member battalion. The inspection by Rice, the officer in charge, was conducted in a brief scan in passing the midshipmen, before each battalion member passed Rice for a more formal review and the guests including the Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A., president of the University and Alvin Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance.

The battalion parade was lead by the ROTC band, followed by the whiskey drill team, seven drill teams, and a flag squad.

The last fall Presidential Review was conducted in 1980 on Parents Weekend as a customary performance at halftime during the football game.

"Once football was dropped," said McDevitt, "there was no reason to perform, or actually no one to perform for."

Last year's ROTC seniors decided to reinstate the event as "an opportunity for the midshipmen to perform in the fall," expressed McDevitt.

"It gives us a chance to show ourselves to the University in a formal presentation, something more than the performance weekly on Mendel field," commented McDevitt.

The Fall Review lasted approximately 45 minutes with individual performances from the Navy ROTC band, the whiskey battalion, and the flag squad. Ten presiding officers were presented at the affair prior to the marching of the drill squads.

"The ceremony gave a real purpose, especially to the incoming freshmen, for the early morning drills they have to endure," said McDevitt.

On Money I and II

This is an exposition on two sums of money: $12,500,000 and $30. Each monetary amount means a great deal to the individuals responsible for collecting these dollars.

First, the lesser amount, in total dollars. In a letter to the editor, one Bill Mousseau, a Philadelphia cab driver, picked up four Villanova students as his last fare of the night and delivered them to Sullivan Hall, their supposed residence. Instead of paying the fare of $19.60, the four students jumped out of the cab, leaving a perplexed and cheated driver cursing Villanova students.

With waiting time and gas money, this hard-working small businessman was cheated out of $30, a considerable amount for a family man trying to eke out a meager living to subsist in today's world.

Additionally, not only did these students cheat the cab driver but they are possibly cheating other future Villanova "paying" customers needing the service of Philadelphia taxis. Try getting a cab in the Philadelphia area and announcing Villanova as the destination. See how eager the driver is to accept the fare, let alone allow the presence of a Villanova "deadbeat" in his vehicle.

Knowing the apathy of Villanova students in addressing problems, asking assistance in securing money for this cheated driver would be useless. However, it may be enough for those four Villanova thiefs to realize that they stole from an innocent, trusting figure. The pain in the wallet felt by Mr. Mousseau should disturb the consciences of the four students who committed such a despicable act.

The much larger figure of $12,500,000 represents the amount Villanova must raise in less thanfour years to pay off the first installment of the bond issue that was issued in 1982 to pay for various capital expenditures for the University. No one wants to talk about the fund-raising efforts,but reports are that manyof the plans for collecting the monies solicited have been thwarted by various factions. A major source of funds is available but the University refuses to tap the source: the loyal Villanova alumni.

As one alumnus writes in a letter this week, "With saddened heart I feel my loyalty to Villanova which I have cherished these past years and my present ability to financially express my thankfulness is waning quickly." Thoughts and expressions such as this are prevalent sentiment espoused almost daily in correspondence to President Driscoll. Sitting in his office, surrounded by unsigned checks that would bear a signature if only the administration would treat the alumni with dignity and respect, one can envision Driscoll muttering to himself to remain firm in the face of adversity. But this staunch stand is costing the University much more in revenue than the school could possibly save with no football program draining monies. So the daggers fly and the University faces a red sea caused by alienation and a lack of unification desperately needed at the University.

This is a narrative of monetary matters that reflects stubbornness, selfishness and thought lessness. The amounts do not matter but the lack of thought does. Everyone loses in the end.

Student Gov't: Football is Dead

Football is a dead issue at Villanova. At least, that's the opinion of the current Student Government.

A recent proposal for a student rally in favor of football was defeated last week by our student government, 9-3. Among the reasons cited—no one would come to the rally anyway.

There is a prevalent opinion on this campus that only the class of 1984 really cares about the football issue, and when they have graduated, the issue will be moot.

Our student government has not helped to dispel that rumor. If they, our elected representatives, are apathetic towards football, the Board of Trustees will feel, when it's time for the final decision, that all students feel the same way.

We urge the student government to take a firm stand, pro or con, on the issue of football. That is your elected responsibility. Together, you can't make any difference if you never act.

Sullivan "Deadbeats" Steal Wages

To the Editor:

This letter is from a Philadelphia taxi cab driver. I express great dismay in telling this story, yet I feel the Villanova students that possess honor and integrityshould be aware of some of the hoodlums that are their classmates.

On October 26, at 2 a.m., I had the misfortune of picking up four male students near the Jailhouse Bar where they were finishing up a night of partying. I told them the fare would be approximately $20, and they agreed and got in my blue Silver Top taxi. I asked them to display the money so I knew they had it, which they did. I assumed that being Villanova students they would have the decency to pay the fare upon arrival.

We arrived at the campus area, passed security with amazing ease (anybody could have gotten by: killer, vandal, rapist) and proceeded to Sullivan Hall where they exited rapidly from my cab without paying and scurried into the mazed dorm, leaving me dumbfounded, as I gave chase to no avail. Gate Security claimed no jurisdiction in the dorm and advised me to "shake it off" and head home. The fare was $19.60 and I spent nearly an hour on the road at a time of night that was beyond my quitting time and another 45 minutes scouring Sullivan Hall in a futile attempt to locate these inconsiderate students. The waiting time raised my meter another $5.40 for a total loss of $30 which included $6 in gas money. For a low income family man with a small child trying to eke out a meager living, this is a lowly, despicable trick, and accounted for nearly a full day's wages.

I hope that justice can prevail in this case. I felt a letter to your newspaper might help. I intend not to condemn Villanova as a whole; I realize that there are bad

A "Villanova" Family Member

Well here it is another weekend at Villanova University and all I can say is that it's too bad I live in Boston so that I can't go home like 23 people on my wing did, as well as many others. It's not bad enough that we "privileged" on-campus residents have to go to parties miles off campus, but now we find ourselves going to New York, New Jersey or Maryland to socialize. College for most students is both an academically as well as socially enlightening four years. And this school has the audacity to say, "Nova Party Nova" or "You've go to believe!". It would be more appropriately phrased, "You've got to be kidding!!". The "family" here at V.U. is rapidly drifting apart as the administration repeatedly fails to approach the social life of college men and women realistically. The Madd Hatter Dance along with several others that don't come to mind (not surprisingly) were all whopping failures.

There are a lot of things I like about Villanova, but there are several things that I don't care for. The visitation and alcohol policies are not only unrealistic but inane. College students are going to go out to drink and socialize with the opposite sex on weekends or weekdays either on or off campus. Unfortunately, some people get into accidents or worse. How many people have to be hurt before the administration stops saying "It's not our responsibility!"? It is time this school put an end to its hear-speak-and-see-no-evil-ideology and realize that we students are their responsibility.

Football (what else) is another of my pet peeves. As a young boy, I remember coming to Villanova with my parents and sisters and making a weekend of the football game on Saturday. Coming down from New York City always seemed like a long drive but was always well worth it. The tailgates were at least three times the size of this year's and there was always one more football buddy of my dad's or some friend of my uncle's that I had to be introduced to. Sadly enough, they're nothing but good memories now.

My dad played football here from 1947-50 and I can honestly say as his son that he loved Villanova Wildcat football more than anyone I've ever known. As regretfully as I may say this, I feel fortunate my dad passed away before the administration decided to phase out this "breeding ground for the pros". That statement comes from the very same adminstration that refutes the accuracy of the polls of V.U. students and faculty last year which gave a resounding yes to the restoration of the sport.

Don't get me wrong, I do like this school. The sad thing is I grew up loving this university. I was born a V.U. Wildcat and it wasn't enough that my grandfather, several uncles, my dad, and now my sister (Anne, '84) went/go here, but he had to name me after the school he loved so much. On my birth announcements (which had a kitten in V.U. diapers with a football and helmet on the cover), he had the year of his graduation as well as all of my relatives that have gone here and then on the bottom it read T.V.C. - ??. I was a destined child.

In conclusion I find it unfortunate that aside from basketball and track the only publicity this university gets is fromhow "dry" the campus is or how the alumni and administration are brawling over the football issue. All one has to do is simply open to the letters section of the Villanovan and you'll find that a majority of the letters concern the alcohol policy or the football issue. This school could be and should be a place where students, alumni and faculty get together at football games, socialize at tailgates, cheer for the Cats, and generally act like a real college family as they did for 87 years.

OBLIQUITIES

On Campus

This week, the Villanovan posed this question to the student body: "If there was a BYOB activity every Friday at Villanova, would you attend one of these parties? Do you think it will add to the social life at Villanova?"

By PETE DiPASCA

"Yes, especially tor underclassmen who can't get into Kelly's Happy Hours."
Mary Ellen Panaro
Senior,
Economics

"I would be there every Friday with two bottles. Of course, it would add to the social life because there is no real social life to V.U."
Tom Esposito
Junior,
Political Science

"I'm sure I'd be there with my concealable spirits drinking to a better social life."
Roberta Sankey
Junior,
Communication Arts

"Yes, it would probably make Villanova one of the sickest, craziest colleges on the East Coast."
Tim Larkin
Junior,
Accounting

"Yes, I would be there toasting the Administration."
Barbara Lucas
Junior,
Communication Arts

"I definitely think that one of these type of activities would add to the social life at Villanova. Presently students are discouraged by V.U.'s policies regarding activities. This may reaffirm their faith."
Clint Grimes
Senior,
Operations Management

"BYOB on Friday! Sure I'd be there. Anything would add to the social life."
Chris Esposito
Freshman,
Arts

"Yes, it would not add to the social life. It would be the social life."
Don Neubert
Junior,
Civil Engineering

"Yes, I would attend. It would enhance the social scene at Villanova University — which is so desperately needed — by keeping students on campus. It's a way for people to meet others."

Smokescreen Clouds Issues

Dear Father Driscoll:

As a way of introduction, if need be, I am a 1954 graduate who has written you previously about your abolition of the football program and have sent my annual $1,000 alumni gift by an unsigned check with the offer to sign it when football is restored.

I thought that the football question was the only void between the Administration and the alumni along with the student body, but my attendance at the 1983 Homecoming Weekend taught me otherwise. The recent University alcohol position leads me to believe that the Adminstration has its head in the proverbial sand. The Villanova students are no different than students at any universities or colleges across the country. They will drink beer and the solution to the problem is to control the drinking. It would be far easier to exercise that controlif the various student organizations were allowed to set up their functions on campus with the admonition that they must exercise the utmost discretion in controlling these functions.

the Villanovan has carried various articles about the Administration's claim that the Liquor Control Board governs the issue. The students must be 21 years old to drink any alcoholic beverage on campus. Such a position is a mere smokescreen excuse for the Administration to hide behind. In fact, the Liquor Control Board only has jurisdiction over the licensed dispensors of liquor for profit.

The smokescreen excuse is another example of how the Administration has and is treating the student body as if they were children instead of people of substance. A student's learning of responsibility in a university atmosphere is as important as anything else in a university curriculum.

The Administration has treated the Alumni Club and Wildcat Club Members with the same dictatorial attitude with regards to the football question.

You must understand the immensity of the void you have created between yourselves and the Alumni and student body. Father Driscoll must realize void by his brief presence at the Saturday afternoon homecoming facade. Father Driscoll must have received a message from the extremely small student and alumni turnout on Mendel Field and the airplane message to Restore Villanova Football.

I wondered if Father Driscoll felt lonely as he stood there as alumni and students passed him by without a smile or even a polite nod of the head. The air was heavy with antagonism instead of lightheartedness.

I felt rather sorry for the Homecoming Queen and her Court whose appearance before the sparse dispirited group must have been a tremendous letdown. The student body was across Lancaster Pike in the parking lots celebrating homecoming instead of being up near Mendel Field mainly because of the University's recent position forbidding the various university student organizations serving any alcoholic beverage (beer) on the campus.

The function of any administration, whether University, corporate or political, is to open itself to all lines of communication with those they are administrating and to solve problems and not create them. With saddened heart I feel my loyalty to Villanova which I have cherished these past years and my present ability to financially express my thankfulness is waning quickly. You must understand that the alcohol and football problems discussed here are only two situations which manifest the gulf between yourselves and the student body and the alumni. You must open yourselves to the desires of others and not sit as demagogues if this great University is to maintain its greatness.

I sincerely hope you accept this message with open minds in the spirit of constructive criticism with which it is given.

apples in every bunch. (I just ate one with the slimy worm in it.)

I've been informed that my mishap is also not an uncommon occurrence and if there is anything within your realm to aid me or this ongoing situation it would be greatly appreciated. Please do not take this as a threat, but continued action like this will hamper service to and from Villanova for students, as word is out in the taxi grapevine concerning "deadbeats" from Villanova. I myself am passive in nature, but should these vandals have crossed paths with a more aggressive driver, physical action could have resulted. Either that or they would have ended up in a destination far beyond the campus, in the opposite direction. As it helps, I have a vague description of only one passenger: a six foot, short-haired blond, who was cut from the hockey team. He claimed to have received hockey scholarships from four smaller colleges, one of them being Belmont College, if I heard right.

That night he was wearing a white Indian material jacket. Also mentioned, although I feel that was a decoy.

I appreciate you taking time to read this and I would appreciate it more if you printed it and were able to locate the culprits and my money.

No Volleyball

To the Editor:

Last Friday's edition of the Villanovan brought disappointment to the coaches and the players of the women's varsity volleyball team because we failed to receive recognition on what is, to date, a winning season.

As with all athletic teams we have had our share or losses and have faced up to them in the paper. However, we also like to enjoy publicity on our victories. As of late our team has experienced some very special victories that we feel should have received major attention in the Villanovan. These special victories to which we are referring occurred at the West Chester State and LaSalle Invitationals.

At West Chester our team went undefeated in a field of 8 teams with 5 wins in capturing the First Place trophy. This tournament victory is enough for a story in itself because it is the first time that the team has won a tournament since the program really began to excel in 1980 under the direction of former head coach Bob Covell.

What further warrants coverage, we believe, is that the following weekend our team witnessed similar success at the LaSalle Invitational. In a field of 16 teams we battled our way through 5 strong teams before playing against a tough Delaware squad in the tournament finals. In a down-to-the-wire finals match we were, unfortunately, defeated by Delaware, ending our 14 match win streak, but, nevertheless, proudly accepting the Second Place trophy.

This is, in a short synopsis, what should have been written in last week's Villanovan. This story was not told, however, because the article was not completed by the paper's deadline. Granted, there are other things, such as school work, that receive priority over outside activities. Nevertheless, when one chooses to pursue extracurricular activities that demand responsibility, such as writing for the Villanovan, those responsibilities should not be taken lightly, as we feel they have been.

It is at this time, therefore, that we would like to acknowledge our coaches, Dennis McGinnis and Dave McKeighan, for guiding us with the knowledge, and our teammates, for their talent and their "never-give-up" attitude, all of which was a constant presence throughout the tournaments at West Chester and LaSalle; two very special victories in our minds.

A Complaint

To the Editor:

Last week's edition showed prominantly (sic) the lack of sensitivity, morality and realization that the editors of this "newspaper" have. I was shocked to read the famed "Who Knows, Who Cares" column, as many concerned individuals on campus were slandered. For a newspaper that is supposed to be insightful, prestegious (sic) and litterary (sic), you have succumbed to your own maliciousness and given many people cause for anger. Campus newspapers are not for personal vendettas.

If you cannot write in a fashion that is professional, objective, and within the standards of the well-founded mission statement of the University, then (sic) you should not consider yourselves just, moral, or worthy of a future on any paper which believes itself to be more than a scandal sheet or member of the yellow press.

To all of the editors who's names appear after the column, you are morally responsible for it's (sic) content and for any harm or injury done by said column.

Fortunately, all of the editors will be thanklessly replaced by the end of this month. You have, in my mind, cast yourselves and the good name of the Villanovan into disrepute.

Thanks Huggers

To the Editor:

As I am finally putting away my Special Olympics folder and preparing an evaluation for my successor for next year's Special Olympics, I realize that there were many people whom I still have not had the opportunity to thank for their tremendous help in our tournament. You huggers and committee members out there deserve a great deal of appreciaton for the time given to our "special" athletes. You did an incredible job! Even though some time has passed, you should try to never forget how considerate you have been and how "you put a smile on someone's face."

Thank you again and always keep in mind that you too are "special."

To the Editor:

As a supporter of the American mission in Grenada, I was offended by Steven Jackson's comparison of the American effort to the Russian invasion of Afghanistan in his November 4 commentary.

In defending the U.S. presence in Grenada, I would cite two important reasons for our being there.

First, and of foremost concern was the safety of the approximately 1,000 Americans living in Grenada, 800 of whom were students and faculty members at St. George's University School of Mdicine. Mr. Jackson is quick to forget the 444 day nightmare ths country was made to endure when Americans were seized by a hostile Iranian regime. It is President Reagan's contention as well as mine, that the United States or its citizens should never again have to suffer through such a terrible ordeal. Given the "atmosphere of violent uncertainty" that existed in Grenada prior to the U.S. action, the supposition that Americans might be harmed was not without reason. If decisive military action is what it takes to demonstrate to the world that the U.S. will protect its citizens abroad, then so be it, and if the so-called "progressive" student has any evidence that Russian lives were in similar jeopardy in Afghanistan, then I challenge him to document it.

Second, the invasion was vital to the security of the Western Hemisphere, because it put an end to the Grenadian military buildup. It is now quite obvious that Russia along with Cuba planned to turn Grenada into a base for exporting terrorism throughout the Caribbean. As evidence, I would point to the large compound of warehouses in which U.S. troops discovered huge stockpiles of new Russian-made machine guns, rocket-propelled grenades, and antiaircraft guns - enough to supply thousands of terrorists. This is all topped off by a brand new 9000-foot Cuban built airfield on the island. This runway would have permittd Moscow to land long range bombers, and extend fighter operations over Central and South America.

I must also point out to Mr. Jackson some other striking dissimlarities between Afghanistan and Grenada. During the Russian invasion of Afghanistan, a U.S. ambassador was murdered. No such treatment was experienced by the Russian or Cuban counterparts in Grenada. The Russians have continually waged war against innocent Afghan citizens, often using chemicals to hasten their death. The U.S. has carried out no such operations against Grenadian citizens.

Finally, I would like to extend my thanks to all the brave Amerioans who risked their lives in Grenada. As an American, I am proud to have such fine men serving our country. For Steven Jackson to compare their heroic acts to the brutal Russian invasion of Afghanistan is an outrage.

Responses to "Invasion Questioned"

To the Editor:

I am writing in regard to the commentary by Steven Jackson, where he decries American involvement in Central America and jeers at the mythical communist threat. I request him to ask how "mythical" the communist threat is to the people of: Estonia, 1939; Latvia, 1939; Lithuania, 1939; Poland, 1939; East Germany, 1949; Rumania, 1944; Bulgaria, 1944; Hungary, 1956; Czechoslavakia, 1968; North Korea, 1949; Vietnam, 1976; Laos, 1976; Cambodia, 1979; Cuba, 1959; Angola, 1976; Ethiopia, 1977; Mozambique, 1977; Afghanistan, 1980; and Nicaragua, 1981. In addition, the "mythical" communist threat, in the guise of the Soviet Union, has also picked up an impressive array of client status: Finland, Yugoslavia, Mongolia, Tanzania, Iraq, Congo, Libya, South Yemen, and Syria, to name a few. Recent attempts of addition, namely El Salvador, Guatemaula, and Grenada, have been foiled by the United States.

I would also ask him to cease his criticisms of the United States government — a government which saved the world from Nazi domination during World War II, and now, in the later decades of the twentieth century, strives to save the world from Soviet totalitarianism. This is a fight the U.S. will not win, for the most vicious enemies of the United States do not lie abroad but here at home; people who delight in denouncing America's goals and who eat like cancer at the fabric of America's institutions and democracy. It is these people who shout "Stop American Imperialism!" the loudest and with their protests and demonstrations hinder the effectiveness of America's foreign policy. One thing Vietnam should have taught all of us is that half-hearted support of anything means failure; so while Americans quibble about 55 advisors in El Salvador and covert aid against Nicaragua, I ask them, "What effect will this feeble, faint-hearted attempt of halting communism in Central America have on countries like Nicaragua, which through Cuba, have accused to the unlimited resources of the Soviet Empire?"

Justin McGough

To the Editor:

This is a reply to last week's article, "U.S. and U.S.S.R. Exchange Roles", by Steven Jackson of the Progressive Student Coalition.

I must say that Mr. Jackson's view of his own country and world affairs is rather naive and careless for the most part. Despite his uncommon belief, communism is a threat in Central America as depicted in the bloody 1979 coups which saw conservative governments fall to the Marxist dictatorships in Nicaragua and Grenada.

The fact that Grenada is the size of West Philadelphia is irrelevant to Mr. Jackson's point and can, in fact, be used to support ours. For what reason would an island that size need a ten thousand foot runway? Why were there three warehouses full of ammunition near the site of the runway? Why were Cuban military men constructing the runway? Why were 49 Soviets, 24 North Koreans, 16 East Germans, 4 Bulgarians, and 3 Libyans, many being military advisors, there initially? Why were there found in Maurice Bishop's home, five military treaties between Grenada, the Soviet Union, Cuba, and North Korea? I fail to see why a nation in the Caribbean would need help from North Korea to defend itself. I suppose that North Korea was only doing its duty as a concerned communist state and to help keep out the evils of democracy.

What makes Steve Jackson think that the communist threat he and his fellow students will be forced to fight against is "mythical"? Anybody fairly well versed in communist doctrine will say that Marxism will not rest until the entire world is under its domination, for its goal is a worldwide workers' "utopia". Recent world history has shown that the Soviet Union is not content with communism in Russia alone.

If communism was not a threat, then why did so many neighboring island nations of Grenada request our help? Why did the citizens of Grenada fully support our aid? Why were the one hundred students being held hostage at their university so happy to have been rescued by our military? Mr. Jackson, would you have wanted your nation to intervene if you were a student there? What Mr. Jackson fails to communicate, is that we are not exchanging roles with the Soviet Union. By many areas, we were requested to help.

Mr. Jackson speaks of Vietnam and its military failures. Our involvement In Grenada has been a success. We have protected our interests in a vital area and most troops have already been withdrawn. Mr. Jackson, your trust in the Soviet Union is astounding, as well as your ignorance to the goals of the Soviets.

I hope that you, Mr. Jackson, and our fellow students, continue to march against the policies of your own nation until you have travelled through Moscow and every other communist country to see how alike we and they really are.

Brian T. Rynne, Class of '86
Bernard J. Michalkiewicz, Class of '87

Dear Comrade Jackson:

Just one Question - why are the most vocal critics of American foreign policy invariably the least vocal in denouncing Soviet foreign policy? According to you and your Regressive Student Coalition, both nations operate on the same set of nasty principles. Yet, I suspect that you would more readily attend a demonstration against American policy in Central America, rather than a march against Soviet genocide in Afghanistan.

To the Editor:

I wish to reply to the "Grenada Invasion Questioned" article, the Villanovan, November 4, 1983, pp 1 and 5.

I am convinced that none of the Political Science faculty members intended that his comments generate will-weakening with respect to future, potential responsibilities and leadership assertions on the part of the students of today.

Nevertheless, I wish to add some significant thoughts in rebuttal, as express by the eminent journalist, James J. Kilpatrick:

"This much is pure profit: The invasion has exposed to the world—and most especially to the nations of Central America and South America—the magnitude of the Soviet Union's plans for expanding its communist empire through its Cuban auxiliary. The capture of immense stores of military supplies was a stroke more of luck than of design, but those photographs of the Cuban arsenal spoke volumes."

None of the Political Science professors made reference to the sine qua non pre-condition for discussion in this matter, as I see it: the Soviets intend to place a ring of Communist-controlled Central America-West Indies countries/islands around our United States to the south, with Cuba, as of the present time, as the focal point.

To the Editor

In last week's front page story "Grenada Invasion Questioned", the Villanovan was as myopic in choosing four professors to comment on the Grenada situation as these professors were in their assessment of the circumstances surrounding the invasion.

The article's opening sentence "Political science professors at the University have agreed that the Reagan Administration has set a dangerous precedent in invading the leftist Caribbean nation of Grenada" is incorrect. This is because the opinions of only four members from the department's full time faculty staff of thirteen were cited. Professor Manley, one of those not questioned by the Villanovan, told me that "A careful reading of the United Nations charter, and previous precedents in similar types of action, show that the United States' action could be justified." Dr. Harry Strack noted that "The invasion was justified not only for the reasons the President gave, but also on the grounds of how a country must sometimes judiciously employ its military in order to maintain its overall strategic position."

I suggest that the four professors interviewed read an article, that appeared on page 11 of the same issue. In "V.U. Grad Operates Under Fire", a 1983 Villanova graduate who was studying at St. George's Medical School in Grenada gives an account of how he and his classmates met with the former hard line Marxist Grenadian leader, General Hudson Austin. Austin stated he could not guarantee that the students could safely leave the island. Let it not be forgotten that Austin seized power through the murder of men, women, and children and later held civilians hostage as American forces closed in on capturing him. This resembles Idi Amin's 1976 accomplice role in the kidnapping of Israeli citizens at Entebee Airport. Like the Israelis, our intervention was pre-emptive and defensive. If for only this reason alone, our action was fully justified.

It might also help these professors to know that the Director of the Medical School, after conferring with officials at the State Department also felt that the invasion was proper. And, let us not also forget the joy and gratitude with which the students met their rescuers.

Grenada, a country with 40% unemployment, had an airport runway strip being lengthened by armed Cubans. It would soon have been capable of servicing Soviet fighter jets. Bordering this runway was an enormous stockade of weapons, capable of being used to destabilize governments in the region. Grenada was indeed becoming an area under increasing Soviet and Cuban influence and thus of increasing strategic danger to America. In fact the Soviet ambassador to Grenada was four-star army general. Because Grenada's democratic neighbors recognized that they too were in a state of danger, they called upon the United States to assist them in dealing with this militaristic and barbarous government. Many of these same countries do not have any armed forces at all.

I am particularly distressed at Dr. Hahn's comments equating our invasion with the Soviet's brutal and ruthless subjugation of Afghanistan. He neglects to mention that the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States, comprised of six of Grenada's democratic neighbors, along with two other democracies, Jamaica and Barbados, petitioned and assisted in the United States' intervention. Afghanistan's neighbors have, to the contrary, been horrified at the Soviet invasion and have consequently strongly condemned the Soviet's aggression. Let Dr. Hahn also not forget that chemical warfare and civilian massacres have become an integral tactic of the long term Soviet occupation. On the other hand, the size of American forces on Grenada is steadily being reduced even in face of the Grenadian Governor General, Paul Scoon, who requested that they stay longer. The people of this small island country have also warmly welcomed American forces; they have written 'God Bless America' everywhere. Several American Congressmen, originally skeptical about the invasion, have discovered this on their fact finding tour of Grenada.

I hope that this letter will spur the professors the Villanovan quoted to refelect more seriously on the invasion and to recognize that it was necessary to protect our allies in the region. I also hope the Villanovan will in the future strive for a more balanced set of opinions when it seeks the faculty's analysis on particular subjects. Hopefully, they will also be more critical, probing, and discriminating as they go about these interviews.

To the Editor:

Some years ago, Paul Newman played the part of an escaped criminal who invaded a private home, took the family hostage, and proceeded to conduct a reign of terror. He was surrounded and desperate, hence the name of the play, "Desperate Hours." I had gone to see the play with some friends. Afterwards we met Paul backstage and then went to a restaurant on Broad Street. Later, when we parted, Paul, an advocate of method acting, was still unwinding from his intense performance as a terroist.

Recent events in Grenada, a tiny Caribbean island country only 100 miles north of Venezuela, a major oil producing state, and 500 miles southeast of Puerto Rico, recalled for me Newman and his play. In the place of a "free" election, Prime Minister Maurice Bishop was deposed and then shot to death by Grenadan troops. A number of Cubans, East Germans, and Russians have been reported on the island where they have been building an airfield and a port and assisting government operations. The Wall Street Journal (10/21/83) reports the murder of Bishop as a "Cuban-backed coup." Nothing was said of the hostage citizens who enjoy "free" elections.

How do civilized people react to such barbaric behavior? If you live on a street and some strangers enter a neighbor's home, terrorize the family, and commit murder, you call the police without delay. Closer to home, you may have noted how swiftly the instigators of violence at the recent 76ers-Celtics basketball game were charged and fined. Does anyone question that some individuals have to be dissuaded from acting in such ways that would lead to the ultimate destruction of the National Basketball Association?

As always, this world of ours is no better or worse than we care to make it. How shall we Americans employ the awesome power that we possess to shape the future? We can turn our backs on threatening situations, or we can invest our power in constructive and responsible efforts to strengthen and maintain the freedoms which make America great — freedoms which are as yet unknown to a great majority of the world's population. Freedom that is taken for granted, has the habit of quietly disappearing.

Dr. Cyrus J. Sharer

To the Editor:

Last week, after reading about the doubts of some of Villanova's political science professors regarding Grenada, as well as that rancid letter by Steven Jackson of the Progressive Student Coalition on that same issue, it became clear to me that the spirit of Mickey Mouse is alive and well.

Sororities RUSH

SORORITY RUSH — these are two words that can mean a lot for your future at Villanova. Registration for rush began on Nov. 1 and will extend until Dec. 1. Registration forms can be obtained in various places, including today's issue of the Villanovan. A fee of $4 must accompany your registration form. Forms may also be obtained in the Student Activities Office (Dougherty 214), or at the Registration table in the Connelly Center on Nov. 16 and 17 at various times during the day. All forms, except those from the Connelly Center, may be returned (with your fee) to the Student Activities Office. Any forms received on or after Dec. 2, will be considered "late" registration, and will require a fee of $6. Late registration will extend from Dec. 2 to Jan. 17, 1984.

Now that you know how to register for rush, you may be wondering just what "rushing" entails. Rushing is that time when you and sorority members have an opportunity to be acquainted. During this time, the sororities on the campus entertain rushees at a series of social functions. After paying the registration fee and submitting the form, you must attend a mandatory informational meeting for all rushes on Nov. 16 at 7:30 p.m. in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. At this event, the Villanova Panhellenic Rush System will be explained in full and questions will be answered. After you have registered and attended the Rush Orientation Meeting, the schedule calls for you to visit all of our sororities. Later parties are invitational and provide you with an opportunity to spend more time with those sororities in which you are most interested. At the end of the rushing period, invitations to membership (or "bids") are extended by the sororities and are matched with your listed preference of chapters. A mutual interest results in pledging.

While rushing, there are a few things that you should keep in mind. First, relax and be yourself. The friends you are making now will be your friends throughout college. Secondly, remember that each Greek organization has a personality of its own — choose the one that is right for you. Next, take into consideration all vital information such as costs, obligations and committments. Finally, throughout the period of rushing, take your time — keep an open mind and make the right choice.

Greeks Service Community

A major part of the Greek Life at Villanova is each sorority's and fraternity's participation in service to benefit the handicapped as well to enhance the community surrounding the University. Here are some of the service projects that have been done in the past or are going to be done in the coming year by the Villanova Greeks.

This year the Sigma Nu Fraternity will be working with Kidney Foundation They are tentatively working on a project for Balloon Day. Some of their previous project are: a meals on wheels service for the poor; participating in the C.R.O.P. walk and sponsoring the "Run for Hunger."

Pi Beta Delta Sorority's major service projects for the year are visits to St. Christophers Children's Heart Hospital at Christmas and Easter times. The sisters visit the children and perform skits to amuse them. In addition to this, they sponsor an orphan Indian child with their contributions throughout the year.

Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity recently dedicated its first P.U.S.H. unit (Play Unit for the Severely Handicapped) in the Philadelphia area. This specially designed equipment was installed in the Woodhaven Center for the Mentally Retarded in Northeast Philadelphia and allows handicapped children to play and enjoy free time in a safe environment. The money to finance this unit was raised through Pi Kap's annual P.U.S.H. softball marathon.

Kappa Kappa Gamma's service project for this semester will be a new one to them. They will be sponsoring a Thanksgiving party with Alpha Phi Omega at a local childrens home. Aside from their main service project, many of the sisters are also involved in tutoring inner-city children. They feel that their involvement in service projects is a necessary complement to their social activities and this is what makes them unique on campus.

Since their creation five years ago, Tau Kappa Omega has had a stern commitment to service activities. Some of their projects have been: Dance marathons for Muscular Dystrophy; weekly trips to Glencoe Presbyterian Childrens Village; and also trips to Fair Acres, a home for the elderly. This year, they continue their Special Olympics participation with amusical chairs booth. They also have CPR classes planned for Nov. 15 and 16.

Every Spring, Delta Delta Delta awards a local scholarship to an outstanding female undergraduate at Villanova. Any female is eligible to apply for scholarship. Last year the proceeds for the scholarship came from a spaghetti dinner held by the sisters.

Alpha Phi Omega is dedicated to the service of the surrounding community. Already this semester we have participated in a camping trip with the children from the St. Edmond's Home for the handicapped. Upcoming we are participating in National Service Day at Heart Boy Scout Reservation on Nov. 4-6 with other chapters of Alpha Phi Omega in the surrounding area. The big event which we have scheduled this semester is the Blood Drive on Nov. 9, 10 and 11. Our goal is 600 pints of blood this semester with about 700 man hours being spent on this exceptional project by the members of APO.

The Pi Pi Alumnae Chapter of Alpha Chi Omega and the Zeta Tau Chapter of Alpha Chi Omega held a joint meeting in Dougherty Hall at Villanova on Oct. 18, 1983. Approximately 85 alumnae, collegians and guests gathered together to address 5,000 envelopes for the American Heart Association Residential Fund Raising Campaign.

The evening was a wonderful way for the Alpha Chi Omega alumnae and collegians to get together and donate their time for a worthwhile cause.

In addition to individual sorority's and fraternity's service projects, the Greeks as a whole unit are involved in a project aimed at cleaning up the campus.

For the remainder of the semester, Villanova Greeks will be participating in "Poster Control." This new program is an effort to free the hallways, classrooms, and dorms of all those outdated, half-ripped posters, that accumulate around campus. Greek volunteers are assigned to buildings on campus.

Greeks feel that these projects are a very good way to spend their time. This gives them a feeling of accomplishment and unity within their individual chapters as well as the Greek Community on campus.

Developing Ethics Code

The Interfraternity Council and the Panhellenic Council have recently established a joint committee to develop a Greek community code of ethics for Villanova University. The code of ethics will be the official statement representing the values and the purpose of all Villanova fraternities and sororities.

Members from the IFC and Panhel met with the Student Life Subcommittee on the University's Board of Trustees last April to discuss Greek Life at Villanova. This subcomittee suggested that since Greeks are playing a more active role in the Villanova community, a Greek creed or statement of purpose be developed. The code of ethics will stress the unwritten ideals of brotherhood and sisterhood in their relation to Villanova. This document will relate to the Greek system in the same manner that the Mission Statement relates to the University.

At the beginning of the fall semester, the executive committees of the IFC and Panhel met and decided that a committee consisting of members from both local and national fraternities and sororities, along with faculty advisors, should be formed to develop the code of ethics. The following people are on the committees: Pete Gearhart (Tau Kappa Omega), David Chen (Beta Gamma Tau), Katie Walsh (Alpha Chi Omega), Susan Gunnery (Tau Kappa Delta), Dr. Olover Ludwig (Sigma Nu faculty advisor), and Betsy Sierk (Kappa Alpha Theta graduate counselor).

The committee will meet on a regular basis in order to produce a first draft of the "code" by the end of the first semester. It then plans to addres the primary aspects of Greek Life — academics, social, leadership, service, athletic and brotherhood/sisterhood in their relation with the Villanova community. In order that the code clearly defines the Greek motives, the first draft will be reviewed by all fraternity and sorority presidents. Additional input from the presidents and their organizations will be considered for the final draft.

Fraternities and sororities represent close to 20 percent of Villanova undergraduate students. Twelve fraternities and six sororities continue to prosper from an improved interest and recent growth rate in the Villanova Greek community. As a part of the increasing Greek strength, the code of ethics will help solidify the Greek position at Villanova.

Halloween Party

Hope you weren't alarmed at those little ghosts and goblins that invaded the campus on Halloween Weekend. They were area children who came to the campus to enjoy a fun filled Halloween costume party sponsored by the Interfraternity council and the Panhellenic Association.

As a service project, the fraternities and sororities invited children (eight years of age and under) of the faculty and staff, as well as from the neighboring schools, nurseries and day care centers to take part in this holiday event.

The festivities began Sunday at 2:00 p.m. The children paraded from the Main Chapel through the center of campus, around the Quad, and into the Villanova room in the Connelly Center. Upon arriving the children trick-or-treated at tables and booths decorated by each of the fraternities and sororities. There were also games, treats and special prizes for the children. Each fraternity and sorority also donated a prize for the winners in the various costume categories.

In the past the service projects sponsored by the IFC and Panhel have been very successful due to the cooperation of every fraternity and sorority and the support of the Villanova community. With that same cooperation and support for this event, the HSalloween costume party was surely a great success, as well as fun for all those who participated.

By JOSEPH MARUSAK

A person standing in a street in New York City along with 15,193 others might feel a good deal insignificant, if not a little lost.

But Villanova sophomore George Glum, finding himself in just that situation on October 23, says that he felt not a bit overwhelmed by the large crowd collected that day.

Glum was competing in the 14th annual New York City Marathon and wound up finishing the 26-mile course in a personal best of 2 hours, 48 minutes. That performance not only placed him in the top five percent of the competition there, but it also secured for him a spot in next April's Boston Marathon.

"I knew there would be over 15,000 others competing," Glum says, "but that's not what you think about when you're there. I knew what I had to do and just hoped that I could accomplish it."

For Glum, a member of Villanova's track team, the New York City event was only the third marathon of his young career. He first joined the 26-mile circuit back in high school, when he entered the Montreal International Marathon as a junior. A year later, he ran in the Marine Corps Marathon in Washington, D.C.

"Those two were just for fun," Glum recalls. "I wasn't actually competing. The New York Marathon was the first one that I was able to compete in. I ran in the other two just to finish."

As far as New York is concerned, Glum seems pleased with his results. "I was planning on going under 2:50 to qualify for Boston this spring, and I accomplished it. As soon as I finished the race, I turned to a guy right next to me and said, 'We're going to Boston.'"

George Glum.

Glum's road to New York actually began weeks before the race, when he started an intense, month-long training period. "At that time, I was thinking of New York, and only New York," he says.

During those four weeks, Glum would wake up each weekday at 5 a.m. and run 5 miles. In the afternoon, he would do "whatever the workout was for the day. It could involve anything from training on the track to running 10 miles on especially hilly terrain."

The weekends were an altogether different story as Glum normally logged runs of 18 miles or more. "Just to finish a marathon, which was my goal in Montreal and Washington, you could get by with, say, 40 miles a week. But if you're going to compete like I did in New York...that's totally different."

While he was training for New York, Glum says he tried not to think about the race itself too much. "As you get closer though, you cut down on your mileage, and then you have more time to think about it. And that's when you get more nervous."

His teammates and coaches here at Villanova supported him all along the way, Glum points out. "You have to work hard by yourself, but the team supports you a lot. I'll talk to my coaches and see how they feel and also how my teammates feel," he says.

Villanova Assistant Track Coach Jack Pyrah is one who feels pretty good about Glum's accomplishments thus far. "We were pleasantly surprised," he says. "For a first marathon, it was an outstanding time. The main thing with a marathon," Pyrah explains, "is simply to get your body accustomed to running those 2½ to 3 hours. In training, you have to run long distances once or twice a week. But when you're in college, you have to fit your runs around your classes and other activities. That makes it all the more difficult."

If his New York results are any indication, Glum seems to have overcome that difficulty and he hopes to keep it up as the Boston Marathon approaches.

"I'm pointing towards Boston," Glum notes. "And I have 20 training weeks to prepare. I'll try to run, when I can, some of the longer track events like the 5,000 or 10,000 meters to work on strength."

Glum feels that he has something else working on his side as the countdown to Boston begins. "Confidence is the big thing now; if you go into a race scared, you're lost. But my teammates and coaces now also have confidence in my running the marathon.

And if I stay healthy, there should be an improvement in my time. But I look at it this way: if I could never get better, that would be okay, because I know that I'll always try my best."

Course Reveals Real World

By CATHERINE GROODY

One of the special topics for spring semester in the communication arts department is a new course entitled Advertising and Public Relations.

The course will be taught by one of the department's new professors, Dr. Richard Welch. At the University of Denver, Welch taught similar courses in advertising and public relations on both the graduate and undergraduate level.

"With this course," he said, "we will attempt to give senior students a career overview in these fields."

"I want them to get a taste of the real world." By doing so, Welch intends to "supervise" the classroom of students who, when broken up into five groups, will be assigned to public relations and advertising responsibilities for an actual company. The groups will then compete against each other for the account.

"There's a lot of preparation in advertising prior to the actual advertisement," said Welch. Marketing needs along with detailed research, surveys and specific media coverage must be taken into account before a product is ready to be shown to the public, according to Welch.

One of the many problems facing the field of public relations is the need for clarification of what work is entailed in that occupation. Many students expresseing an interest in this area are not always clear of its function or too often consider advertising and public relations as the same profession. Although both are concerned with getting across a certain message, public relations functions more as a way of projecting a situation to the public while advertising is concerned with the "here and now" of a situation.

"Public relations," says Welch, "is a way of preparing the future for the arrival of the company."

"While advertising," he says, "is once you've arrived in the future, advertising is there to present your story."

Welch's special area of interest is the field of public relations. "I see it as the eyes and ears of an organization," he said. "The people in public relations are in the field of human relations. They are experienced communicators who are extrememly diverse in their special interests and well informed on current events, according to Welch.

The course in advertising and public relations will involve those strategies that go into the development of advertising and public relations. It is not a history course of promotional strategies nor a brief introduction of these particular fields. Rather, this course is a systematic attempt to expose communication arts majors to the fields of public relations and advertising.

Wiedinmyer Runs Women's Workshops

By CATHERINE GROODY

In 1962, if anyone were to tell V.U. Professor Patricia Wiedinmyer that twenty years down the road she'd still be surrounded by textbooks and college students, she probably wouldn't have believed them.

"I wasn't always sure what I wanted to do," she said. "But looking back, I noticed a thread throughout my experiences. So, in a way, I really knew all along."

Wiedinmyer is the director of Adult Services for University College at Villanova. She is interested in women and establishing them on both a professional and college level, as well as helping other individuals readjust to college life. But whether it be in her workshops, in her office or among her vast experiences, Wiedinmyer has become a welcome newcomer to Villanova's community.

After receiving her bachelor's degree in psychoogy in 1966 from the College of New Rochelle, Wiedinmyer started a brief career in marketing research. Immediately afterwards, she got a job working as a juvenile probation officer. At this time in the late '60s when the nation was going through dramatic cultural changes and political unrest, Wiedinmyer worked with young girls who had family and social problems. It was a time when drug abuse was rampant, so much that counselors were like law enforcers instead of companions for the students in the detention center. "I found it frustrating working with drug addicts at the time," she said. "Many times, the girls would run away. You also had to be careful of what you said. The laws were really strict." Wiedinmyer felt a big gap between the kids and the counselors separated the two, affording little progress.

After four years working at the detention center, Wiedinmyer married a physical therapist and later had her first child, Christine, now eleven years old. Two years later, she had her second child, David, now nine.

I was fortunate," she said, to have the luxury of staying home with my children. Today only about 7 percent of the families with two kids have one spouse working. Most women nowadays do not alway have the option of staying home.

While her son David was still young, Wiedinmyer worked as a volunteer in a womens' resource center. Then, in 1977, she decided to go back to college to earn her master's.

Wiedinmyer enrolled at Villanova where she spent three years getting a master's degree in counseling. Before graduating, she also worked at area colleges as an intern. At Eastern College, she worked along with Ethel Jensen on peace studies and womens' roles. She later worked as a counselor at Philadelphia Community College on the Displaced Homemakers Project. Here, she spent four months counseling women who were forced back into the working world after their husbands died or left them.

Patricia Wiedinmyer

In 1980, Wiedinmyer graduated from Villanova and later got a job at Chestnut Hill College as the director for continuing education. Finally, in 1983, she left Chestnut Hill and in August, took the job at Villanova as director of administrative services.

"I saw it as a good career move," she said.

Today Wiedinmyer is working to establish new workshops. Her new one, entitled "Creating a New Path", is designed for women who are considering returning to the job market or to school. She views her workshops a being a learning experience both for her students and for herself as well. "In the past," she said, "I've taught courses in Assertiveness Training. In the end, I've always learned something when I teach it, especially about myself."

This year the Consumer Protection Club has shed its previous image as an issue-oriented activist group and has changed its purpose to that of an informative land research oriented organization by initiating the Consumer Affairs Research Board in the area of consumer legislation.

The board plans to accomplish its objectives through a regular column in the Villanovan, that will highlight consumer affairs news that is of interest to the Villanova community. The information is provided in official documents to which the board has privileged access to show that we know and we care.

At present, the board consists of a close-knit group of dedicated students primarily from the College of Commerce and Finance who research and write for the column. The Consumer Affairs Research Board is currently looking to expand its membership to those interested in consumer affairs whether their area of study is law, engineering, communications, the medical profession, as well as business. Anyone interested in becoming a contributor to the Consumer Affairs Research Board is encouraged to attend a meeting on Nov. 16 at 3:30 in Bartley, room 11, at which time plans for the 1983-84 school year will be discussed. In the final analysis, we are all consumers, and should care about the things we buy. The Consumer Affairs Research Board can help you do just that! For further information call Dr. Butkys at 645-4374 or stop by his office in Bartley, room 331.

We have all read and heard of the Holocaust-Hitler's extermination of six million Jews during World War II. We teach the children of our schools about this horrible event, with the hope that something so horrid will never happen again. And yet, we are in the middle of an even greater holocaust; 30 million people will die from hunger within the next twelve months — this equates with five holocausts. Five holocausts in one year!

The situation in the world today is a grave one. We live in a difficult world, a troubled world, and a corrupt world. We live in a world where countries invade other countries, and where peace seems nonexistent. We live in a world where millions die from hunger every year. And we live in a world where violence is everywhere.

And I am angry.

I am angry because so many problems exist, and because so many people have remained apathetic. It bothers me that I, too, am often apathetic. I want to do well on my test tomorrow. I want to have fun next weekend. I, too, am concerned about the alcohol policy. These are my worries, and the hungry are far from my thoughts. But all this leaves me confused. What is important? And how should I live my life?

So often when we were young, we were asked, "What do you want to be when you grow up?" To me, this seems to be the wrong question. We should be asked, "How do you want to change society when you grow up?" Or, "How will you make this world a better place to live?" The very phrasing of the first of these three questions implies a selfish answer. "I want to be a doctor." "I want to be a lawyer." We should be replying, "I want to serve society by . . . "

Now that we are college students, we are reaching a point in our lives when we will have to decide what we will do for the rest of lives. We will soon be making career decisions which will define to a great extent what the rest of our lives will be like. We need to ask ourselves whether we want to serve society, or whether we want to get something from society. Will we ask ourselves, "What do I want to be when I graduate?" Or will we ask ourselves, "How will I serve others when I graduate?"

I feel that our beliefs are reflected in the most ultimate way in our careers — or at least they should be. In our society, we are defined by our careers, by what we "do for a living." Thus, the beliefs and values which define who we are should be reflected in our careers, but many times they are not. None of us want to have people starving to death. None of us want war. None of us want injustice, but will our careers reflect our concern?

As Christians, we are especially challenged to respond to the needs of the poor and the oppressed. And in today's world, these needs are great. Thirty million people may die from hunger in the next twelve months! How can we not be bothered by this fact?

There is much suffering in today's world; both physical and emotional, and there are thousands of things we can do. There are a lot of different careers which respond to the great variety of needs in today's world. The important thing is that our career reflects our love and concern for the suffering of the world.

Vasey Play Probes Sensitive Topic

By LARRY GOANOS

Frank Wedekind's "Spring's Awakening" opened on Wednesday night at Villanova's Vasey Theatre under the direction of James J. Christy. A work which raised quite a commotion when first produced in the 1890's, "Spring's Awakening" is still highly provocative, yet genuinely sensitive in dealing with the delicate problems of teenage sexuality.

The play centers around three main characters. The first, Melchior Gabor (Michael Curley), is an intelligent student whose blissful life is shattered by his compulsi to grapple over the questions of sex and religion and their relationship, if there is indeed one.

Wendla Bergmann (Eileen Trainor) is the object of Melchior's affection but she too is cloaked in ignorance about sex, a fact which leads to this 14-year old's eventual pregnancy and death, to notice.

Moritz Stiefel (Paul Guerin) is a poor student despite his close friendship with the bright Melchior. Perplexed by his lack of carnal knowledge and even more distressed by his slim chances for advancement in school, Moritz puts an end to his suffering by taking his own life.

The plot unfolds as Melchior, in an attempt to enlighten Moritz about the sexual questions which inexorably vex him, authors a 20-page explanation of the facts of life, replete with illustrations.

Spring's Awakening

Eventually the scholastic pressure overcomes Moritz and he puts a bullet in his own head. While searching through his son's personal effects, Moritz' father discovers Melchior's sex primer and turns it over to the school authorities. In an attempt to stem any incipient wave of suicides, the school administrators expell Melchior from their institution. He is then sent to a reformatory and subsequently he learns of Wendla's death caused by a fatal abortion attempt.

Despite its seemingly morose tone, the play does have an abundance of comic relief, and in fact, it runs the gamut from being very funny to extremely sad.

This production is, in a word, entertaining. Refreshingly so, in fact. If one were unaware that this work was originally written in the 1890's, it would be thought of as almost avant garde. At the time of its first production it must've been viewed with disbelief; it was undoubtedly light-years ahead of contemporary works.

The acting in "Spring's Awakening" is superior. Stealing the show is Guerin as Moritz. He plays the part with feeling and vigor. Both the exuberance of being promoted to the next grade and the despair of being on the threshold of suicide are shared by the audience. He is particularly adept at harnessing the zeal of an excited teen and bringing it to the stage for all to see. Guerin breathes life into the work's pivitol role, making it a treat to see it for his performance alone.

Not to be soon forgotten also are the performances put forth by Curley and Trainor. Despite the fact that Melchior and Wendla have intercourse, these two resist the temptation to make more of their attraction. They keep their distance and in the process preserve the adolescent air of bewilderment.

Curley is particularly adept at using inconspicuous mannerisms to convey the impressions of a 14-year old. In one scene, Melchior is forced to sit in silence while his mother and father debate the merits of sending him to a reformatory. Curley excels at using subtle motions and facial reactions to make the audience believe that his future really is at stake.

Trainor gives an inspired performance as Wendla. She manages to exude just the right blend of innocence and sincerity without going overboard. Give the theatre company an "A" for this casting choice.

Adding to the play's merit is the directing skill of James J. Christy. A difficult work to present in any era, Christy somehow manages to lift the play from its temporal origins, dust if off, and adapt it for consumption by a 1980's audience.

Also worthy of note is the ingenious stage design. A banked wooden floor strewn with leaves is easily transformed into various settings as the play calls for them. The stage truly enhances the script.

The production's only shortcoming seems to be the age difference between the 14-year old characters and the much older actors. When dealing with the years of adolescence, even a few years can make a significant difference. This obvious gap detracts from the work, but only slightly. With a little imagination the audience can overcome this fault.

Overall, Vasey's production of "Spring's Awakening" is an exhilarating spectacle to behold. Acting, directing and staging synthesize superbly to create a meaningful work of art. If you've been procrastinating about seeing a campus production, wait no longer — now is the time. "Spring's Awakening" may make you laugh, it may make you cry, but more importantly it will make you think. A work of art can do no more.

An Evening of Heavy Metal

By PETE DI PASCA

Just when you thought it was safe to go to the Spectrum for a concert — in came heavy metalists Black Sabbath and Quite Riot for a night of raunch-n-roll last Saturday. Simply stating that these two bands play loudly is an understatement. Overpowering better describes their styles of music. But then, that's what heavy metal is all about, and if metal is your type of music, then Saturday's show was the perfect concert to witness.

Quiet Riot belongs to the "second wave" of heavy metal bands to gain popularity in the music world. This Los Angeles-based quartet was formed in 1975 by lead singer Kevin DuBrow and guitarist extraordinaire Randy Rhoads. Carlos Cavaso stepped in to replace Rhoads when a fatal plane crash ended Rhoads' promising career. The current lineup, together since early 1982, also includes bassist Rudy Sarzo and drummer Frankie Banali.

Quiet Riot's performance on Saturday captured the true purpose of heavy metal's excessive sound: use the power and intensity of the music to overwhelm the senses and block out everything else — to let the music do the talking. This was evidenced in songs like "Metal Health" and "Cum On Feel the Noize."

The band did a fine job at keeping the crowd on their feet. DuBrow was an excellent frontman who illustrated good interaction with the audience, and Cavaso proved to be a talented musician, although his guitar solo was a few minutes too long. Quiet Riot's 45 minute set was solid proof as to why they are one of today's hottest bands.

This year's Black Sabbath tour is somewhat special because it marks the return of lead singer Ian Gillan to America. It has been over six years since Gillan last toured the U.S. when he fronted the legendary group Deep Purple. Gillan took over lead vocal duties when singer Ronnie James Dio departed earlier this year. Sabbath has another new member in their lineup: Bev Bevan, who was borrowed from the Electric Light Orchestra for touring purposes. The other two members in the band are founders Terry "Geezer" Butler (bass) and Tony Iommi (guitar).

Tony Iommi looks tough, doesn't he?

Although half of the group is new, the sound is still the same Black Sabbath. In fact, the sound is more similar to that of the Ozzy Osbourne era than when Dio was with the group. The music is generally gloomy and concerns topics such as death ("Children of the Grave") and the occult (Sabbath Bloody Sabbath"). This is what sets Sabbath apart from everyone else: they were the pioneering band in this type of music in the early '70's.

There seems to be two types of heavy metal bands nowadays — those like Quiet Riot and Def Leppard who use the energy in the music to create an emotion, and other groups like early Judas Priest and AC/DC who build their music around themes such as the devil and hell. Sabbath belongs to the latter classification. Unfortunately, that style of music is somewhat dated and inaccessible to today's music audience.

Nevertheless, nobody puts on a stage presentation like Black Sabbath. This year's stage was constructed to resemble Stonehenge, and the usual Sabbath effects added to the mystique: the smoke, the brightly-lit crosses above the stage, and the little "demons" dressed in red hooded robes. Musically, Sabbath did their usual classics "Iron Man'" and "Paranoid" as well as some new material, "Zero to Hero" and "Digital Bitch."

There were a few low points during their show, like the song "Black Sabbath," which threatens to induce sleep within a few minutes, and Bevan's unnecessary 5-minute drum solo. Gillans voice was fine throughout the night, and he sounded best during the encore when Sabbath ignited the crowd with a version of Deep Purple's "Smoke on the Water."

As stated before, heavy metal is not everyone's cup of tea, but if it your's, then Saturday night was for you. Both Quiet Riot and Black Sabbath did everything they could to make the crowd "feel the noize."

Motown Greats Perform at Valley Forge

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO and MICHAEL NOTARO

The Motown sound was back in town this past Saturday when the Temptations and Four Tops teamed up at the Valley Forge Music Fair.

In the wake of Motown's 25th anniversary celebration, these two great groups have enjoyed renewed popularity. (As a result of the recent TV special, the Tops rejoined Motown Records for the first time in 12 years.) But the sounds these two groups put down are as fresh now as they were in the sixties.

The Tempts.

The ninety-minute show opened with both groups on stage singing the Top's classic "Seven Rooms of Gloom." After the first of many standing ovations, the Tempts left the stage.

On their own, the Four Tops showed just how spectacular four voices in perfect harmony could sound, while reprising many of their biggest hits.

Lead singer Levi Stubbs made a big hit with the crowd with the new single, "I Just Can't Walk Away." This one was written by the trio responsible for many a Motown hit, Eddie Holland, Lamont Dozier, and Brian Holland.

The Tops also performed classics like "It's the Same Old Song," "Bernadette," and "Reach Out." But the best moment of the set came with the quartet's comeback hit of 1981, "When She Was My Girl." This one earned three encores. The Temptations rejoined the Tops for a medley of Sam Cooke and Otis Reading tunes, and then the stage was set for the Tempts solo segment.

If the Tops were known for their soulful sounds, The Temptations made their rep with intricately meshed vocals and dancing. No one was disappointed in their performance Saturday.

The dancing that accompanied songs like "My Girl" and "Papa was a Rolling Stone" thrilled the audience, as the Tempts whirled around the rotating stage in a dizzying wave of continuous motion. Too much.

Equally well received were "Ain't Too Proud to Beg," and "[illegible]

chard Street split lead vocals on all but one of the numbers, but one couldn't help but miss the presence of former Temptations lead David Ruffin.

But the highlight of the Tempts' set was their classic, "I Wish it Would Rain." Accompanied by a flashing blue strobe, the Tempts' dancing electrified the crowd.

The show concluded with the Tops and Tempts saluting Jackie Wilson in a medley. As an encore, the groups staged a mock battle over which was the better group. The musical battle ended in a standoff.

Although both groups were accompanied by a fantastic band, it was the voices and memories (he sold-out audience came for.

If one was to judge which was the best group by their clothing, the Temptations' black tuxedoes were topped by the Tops' white double breasted suits, black shirts and white shoes.

But as their "duel" at the finale proved, each group was equally fantastic. There was no clear winner but the audience.

Johnny Cleeg Discusses Juluka's Roots

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

Juluka is the African word for "sweat." It is a word that signifies what this South African band is all about. "Our lyrics try to use words poetically, and contain a span of meaning also. We try to mobilize feelings of being a human being," said lead singer Johnny Cleeg.

Juluka is not your ordinary band in that their mere existence is a triumph in itself. The band has caused an uproar in their homeland because thay are an inter-racial group that does not tolerate segregation. "I don't think we're a political band," Cleeg noted; "but rather a protest band. The difference is that political bands choose to write lyrics that will shock; it's all propaganda."

Juluka, who performed last night at the Ripley, has so far received critical acclaim here in the States. "America has been wonderful so far," Cleeg sighted. "We've received deep support from a lot of radio stations and from people at our shows. It's all quite moving."

JULUKA

One thing Cleeg did not care for is bands incorporating African rhythms in their music — such as the Talking Heads. "I find that bands who play our kind of music are just capitalizing on the popularity of something new. I find it all novel, really."

Has Juluka tried to use MTV as a launching pad, as many of today's bands have? "We've been on MTV. I don't know if it's all that good. It takes away the force of commitment. I think the West is going to change art in such a big way. If you notice, a weak song with weak lyrics usually makes for a strong video," Cleeg surmised.

"Scatterlings" is the fourth LP that Juluka has made, but only the first released in the States. "If this record does well, we will probably release the others also," stated Cleeg. "Scatterlings" took the group five months to complete. Is there any message Juluka tries to convey through their writing? "Yes. It's a matter of writing what we see, what we experience; it's a vision," Cleeg expressed.

One of the best songs on "Scatterlings" is "Spirit Is the Journey." "That song is very dear to me. I believe there is another level of a journey through life. One that is different than the physicality of travelling."

Cleeg has been playing guitar since the age of 14. "I learned how to play and was influenced by many; listening to street guitarists, a lot of African musicians and listening to folk music," Cleeg added. His American influences come mainly from Randy Newman and Jackson Browne. "They write very powerful songs that mean something," Cleeg said.

Does the group intend to cover another artist's song? "No, we just want to concentrate on our own brand of music. We'll just keep writing our own."

Juluka feels their message is one that needs to be heard, not only by foreigners but by the locals also. "Our goal is to gain commercial success at home," said Cleeg. "We want our own people to see that their experiences, (expressed through music), are just as important as anyone else's. We want to celebrate Africa artistically. This is what Juluka is all about."

What bothers Cleeg more than anything else is that in 1983 there is still racial disharmony. "It's all very alarming and quite frightening, at that. I think by the end of the century we'll either be in a good situation, or the Dark Ages," he said. "Scatterlings" is our message, "we're all on a journey to find our homes," he said.

A Message Worth Hearing

By JAYNE M. STUART

With the Police, the Talking Heads, and even Lionel Richie returning to reggae, here comes a band that plays African music in its purest form.

The album "Scatterlings" marks the American debut (although the band has four albums to its credit) of Juluka, a band which hails from South Africa. They offer a pleasant combination of strong lyrics and listenable music, which is a rare quality for a politically-oriented album; Juluka is sweeping America with its first tour.

The band is made up of an equal number of blacks and whites,(a symbol of the band's stance on apartheid), and being from South Africa, it is easy to imagine how political they can get.

The major motif of "Scatterlings" is searching. Many songs tell stories of searching for a home, an identity, for peace. These are problems that plague their homeland and haunt its people. Juluka is here to voice their opinions and bring these issues to their listener's attention.

It is music that makes an album though. Juluka plays a type of music called zulu, which is tribal music played on a guitar. It is the music that the founders of the band had in common, and it is what brought them together. Cleeg and Mchunu heard of each other through the "musician's grapevine" and wanted very much to hear each other play, as each thought himself the better musician. After they finally did meet, both were astounded at the other s proficiency and decided to form a band.

"Scatterlings" is both an easy album to listen to and has an infectious beat. It is really difficult to sit still while their music graces the airwaves. The tile cut, "Scatterlings of Africa," has received some airplay here in the states and it is obvious why. The song has a lively beat and raises the question "Who made me, here and why?" Using a perfect metaphor of South Africa, the band interspl ices African lyrics with English, but it seems very natural and balanced. Since zulu is an African type of music played on a (Western) electric guitar and Juluka has key boards in the background, it musically depicts the sharp contrasts present in the African nations today.

In the cut "Umbaqanga Music" (I defy you to pronounce that) the skills of Cleeg and Mchunu are clearly displayed. This song is about what these men love best: music. "That special music" has a way of penetrating your heart, for that is what this music appeals to.

Although Juluka does not like to be called political, it is easy to understand why they would be identified as such. "Seven seasoned soldiers have been summoned from Saigon/A craven walkie talkie puts their bloodshot armour on" packs a strong message directed toward war.

This music conveys a sort of hope despite all their war-oriented lyrics. Perhaps it is the music itself that captures the positive tone, but if one listens closely, the hope is there. "I will be with you forever/Till you reach the other side/So hold on" and "You'll never lose it — the rhythm is strong."

Throughout the whole album, the band is tight and balanced. They work well together and the music compliments the lyrics very nicely.

All the songs are simple tunes, with a consistent beat; this is what makes them so likable. It would be difficult to choose one song of special merit as they all are equally good. "Two Humans on the Run" is simply beautiful and if the lyrics are read without any music in the background, what is left is a charming love poem.

Don't miss "Scatterlings," it is a dynamite LP. With any luck, Juluka will keep playing their special music because "Umbanqanga music will move you along."

Paul McCartney Sprouts His Wings

By MIKE MATHIS

It is no news that Paul McCartney is a rock institution. Since his days with the Beatles, he has not only received acclaim as a successful bass player, but he has also become the most prominent songwriter in modern musical history.

McCartney's latest effort, "Pipes of Peace," is a continuation of the theme "Tug of War," introduced; yet is is a broader construction of what McCartney's ideas on peace and justice tend to be. McCartney also decided to hire established London musicians to play on the record with him, including guitarist Eric Stewart, Steve Gadd, Stanley Clark, and his longtime personal friends, Ringo Starr and Michael Jackson.

The first cut from the album, which is the title cut, greatly resembles "Dress Me Up a Robber" from "Tug of War," in both conceptual scope and musicianship. The song is upbeat and bright, yet it seems like a melodramatic love song. Both "The Other Me" and the instrumental "Hey Hey" contain a disco beat, adding a new, broader dimension to the boundaries of the love song.

McCartney, who has long been the innovator of the pop-love song, does not let the listener down. His compositions tell of life as we know it. The "Average Person," as McCartney paints him, is someone whose ambitions and dreams are those of you and I; the tone established is much like that of "Penny Lane," with its resonant, quick-moving piano melodies and horn section.

McCartney collaborates with Michael Jackson on two of the album's cuts. These cuts contribute a lot to the disco-upbeat theme of the album. "The Mann" opens with a terrific guitar solo, then gets laced in with the fast-moving approaches of Jackson's and McCartney's background harmonies.

The strongest composition on the album is "Say, Say, Say," the first single from the album. The song is a McCartney/Jackson duet that seems to parallel "Tug of War's" epic song "Ebony and Ivory." It has all the qualities of "Ebony and Ivory" ; McCartney and Jackson trade vocal punches line by line, the harmonies are strong, and the beat is fast and danceable. After only three weeks on the Billboard Chart at number six, it is sure to become a quick gold record.

Although it does not contain any remarkable musicianship, "Pipes of Peace" is an album full of fresh, spirited music. There are ballads, pop songs, and dance numbers that, together form a unique blending of both music and theme. The linear note inside the album cover reads, "In love, all of life's contradictions dissolve and disappear." McCartney successfully fulfills this concept, as one can be sure that his love for music and humanity have not dissipated after 20 years.

Captains Spark Icecat Win

By TOM COLON

This past weekend, the Villanova hockey team split a home and away series with Lehigh University.

On Saturday, the Icecats were on the road to battle a tough Lehigh club and returned home with a 4-2 win under their belts. Captain Frank Segreto opened the scoring in the first period as he picked up a loose puck in front and flipped it into the net. Segreto then proceeded to widen the lead with his second goal of the period. Taking a pass from Bob Giordano, he outskated a defenseman and shot the puck into the open corner.

Lehigh struck back in the second period with a score of its own to cut the lead to one. This was shortlived, however, as defenseman Paul Critchley dumped the puck into the Lehigh end for a change of lines, and their goalie misplayed it to give Nova a 3-1 lead.

In the final period, Mark LaFond gave the Icecats their fourth goal as he blasted the puck in off a Jeff Beck shot, and at the final tick, Villanova enjoyed a 4-2 victory.

Sunday, the Cats hosted Lehigh at the Skatium and engaged in another physical battle as they were dealt their first loss,3-2.

Lehigh drew first blood with a shot over the shoulder of goalie Geordie Borsari with just under two minutes left in the opening period.

The rest of the game remained scoreless until the third period when Lehigh opened up a two-goal lead. The Icecats quickly closed the gap, however, as senior assistant captain Mike Bufano blanked their goalie on a pass from Critchley. Just a minute and a half later, rookie Mike DeLude notched his first of the season, assisted by fellow freshman John Carlin.

The game remained deadlocked at two until Lehigh popped one in with under two minutes left to seal Nova's fate. Lehigh was also favored in the shots-on-goal department, 33-30.

After a hard day of skating, checking and passing well on Saturday, the Icecats certainly did not play up to their potential at home. Bufano pointed out that Nova really "only played 10 minutes of the third period and we lacked the manpower of our previous games." Segreto emphasized Borsari's efforts in the nets and said without him "we probably would have lost by ten goals on Sunday."

The Mailman Returneth

By LARRY GOANOS

A few weeks ago the mail in my box reached the overflow level and I was forced to finally answer all of those inquiries that I receive. Well, once again the mailman has made it so that my cup runneth over, so once again I will oblige by attempting to answer these probing questions which arouse the curiosity of sports fans the world over.

Dear Larry,

I just heard about a new expansion team in the USFL which is named the Houston Gamblers. Now I might not be the brightest guy in the world, but I can't understand naming a team in Houston the "Gamblers." I could make the connection if they were based in Las Vegas or Atlantic City. What do you thing about this?

R. KING TURFMASTER III

Dear R. King,

My research staff went off in pursuit of the answer to this puzzling situation and, as usual, they've come back with the solution. It seems that the new Houston franchise is owned by Philadelphia trucking king Leonard Tose, who also owns the Eagles. For his starting quarterback Tose has chosen a guy who's pretty good but out of work at the moment, you guessed it — Art Schlichter. The team sounds like it has a mediocre roster but it may make the playoffs as (what else?) a wild card.

Editor's Angle

Hey Larry

I just heard that Villanova is going to play Arkansas in hoop this year. Did you know that their nickname is the Razorbacks? What kind of name is that, are they being sponsored by Gillet te or something?

DURNIN CLEMSON JR.

Dear Durnin,

As a matter of fact, you are right. It's part of a new trend in collegiate sports whereby major U.S. corporations are defraying the costs of running sports programs at universities across the nation. In addition to Arkansas, a number of other big schools are receiving assistance. Some name changes which we can look forward to in the near future include the Nebraska Mazola Cornhuskers, the Penn Quaker Oats, the University of Texas Instruments and the Syracuse Sunkist Orangemen. If you think these are bad, I won't even tell you Southern Cal's new nickname.

Dear Larry,

With the WBC, the WBA, and the new USBA, boxing seems to be going downhill. There are two or three champions in almost every division and title unification seems to be only a faint possibility. Many analysts are saying that boxing is in a sad state of affairs, bordering on extinction. To top it all off, there is nothing to look forward to on the horizon aside from the Larry Holmes-Marvis Frazier fight in Las Vegas. What's your opinion Larry, what state do you think it's in?

ROBERT BUNGER

Dear Robert,

If my knowledge of geography doesn't fail me, it's in Nevada.

Dear Larry,

I recently returned from a long bus trip to Notre Dame where I saw the Fighting Irish lose a disappointing game to the Pitt Panthers. Many of the Notre Dame fans are losing their patience with Coach Jerry Faust and his losing ways. I was shocked by the many fans who have lost sight of sportsmanship and are now mounting a drive to "Oust Faust." What are your feelings about this?

MICHAEL NOITICLE

Dear Michael

I won't say that I totally condemn these fans' actions but I do think that they're carrying things a bit far. I've just learned from a friend at Notre Dame about a new group on campus formed by some alumni who are fighting mad. Their motto is a little extreme, they want to "Joust Faust."

Nova Field Hockey: The Season Reviewed

By BOB HELLER

Villanova's women's field hockey team has had its ups and downs all year long, but closed out its season on a winning note: a 5-0 victory against Widener. The Widener victory gave the Wildcats a final record of 5-7-4.

The Widener victory was the only road win for the Cats this year to go along with four home victories.

Scheduling played a role in the way the Wildcats' season turned out. Villanova played four of the top six teams in the country this year, tying games against C.W. Post and Bloomsburg, while losing close games to Kutztown and defending national champions Lock Haven. Three of these four teams made the semi-finals of the national tournament with Lock Haven and Bloomsburg playing for the national title.

Consistency also affected the Wildcats' win-loss record. "We would play great one game and mediocre the next," commented sophomore halfback Linda Norton.

Despite the 5-7-4 record and the many letdowns the team might have experienced this year, there have been many bright spots this season.

The Wildcats best asset this year has been their defense. Nova goaltenders Susan Ruff and Lisa Buschmann allowed only 19 goals this year, tying a Wildcat record for least goals allowed as a team. Consequently, both players broke Wildcat goaltending records. Ruff and Buschmann had given up just eight and 11 goals respectively, breaking the previous record of 16 set back in 1977. Both girls also bettered the standard for lowest goals against average in a season with Ruff allowing just 0.57 goals per game and Buschmann 1.00. Both players will return next year.

Offensively the Wildcats will have many talented players returning next year as well, as Coach Moyer has her entire offensive unit back. With just another senior graduating and the players Moyer hopes to bring in next year, the Wildcats hope to rewrite the record book and make the national tournament next year.

"Overall we had a very successful year, although our win-loss record does not reflect the way the team played," commented Mary Anne Steenrod, coordinator of women's athletics. "The team overall was better than last year due to the improvement of the upperclassmen and the addition of freshmen."

Intramural Flag Football

By CHRIS MEGAN

As the intramural football season draws to a close, the hope of a playoff bid becomes the main concern for those teams sporting a competitive record. In the men's league, 18 teams will advance to post-season play based on their conference records. The two teams with the best records in each of the six divisions in both the National and American Conferences will get a playoff bid. Along with these twelve teams, four wild cards will be selected from the remaining teams based solely on their record. The fraternity league will account for the last berths, rounding out the 18 team format of the men's league.

The latest statistics show that two-time defending champions, Moon Unit, have pretty much wrapped up the National Conference's Eastern Division with a 5-0 record. In the Central Division, the Athlete's Foot has stomped on everyone and now has a 7-0 record, which assures them of a post-season spot. In the National West the Stallions are riding high with a 5-0 record. Over in the American Conference, the Wallbangers have put together a perfect season with a 7-0 mark and the lead in the East Division. In the Central and Western Divisions, South Philly and The Killer Tomatoes have almost clinched the titles, respectively.

In the Fraternity Division, Pi Kappa Phi has a 6-0-1 record and is expected to be a strong playoff team. The other team to represent the fraternity division in the playoffs has yet to be determined but the present favorite is LTD.

In the women's intramural league, eight teams will be selected for the playoffs. The two teams with the best records in each of the four divisions will compete for the women's football championship. So far in the Manhattan Conference, the Beavers and the Football Team are the favorites in the Eastside Division, and the Mud Gang and Alpha Chi Omega appear to be the favorites of the Westside Division.

All playoff teams will be picked this weekend for the tournament which will begin on Monday.

Spikers Lose

By PAUL HEADOS

The women's volleyball team steamed into last weekend's tournament at George Washington with a sparkling 21-12 record, but unfortunately some strong teams managed to take the wind out of its sails as the team went 0-3 in Washington, D.C.

On Friday night the host Colonials pounded the Cats 6-15, 13-15, and 6-15. After a night's sleep, the Cats were back on the court to square off against the University of Rhode Island. After dropping the first game by a close 13-15 score, the spikers lost some momentum and went down to defeat in two straight games by identical 8-15 scores.

In their final match of the tournament, on Saturday also, the Villanova spikers fell to a powerful Duke squad 7-15, 3-15, and again 7-15.

The women are currently ranked fourth in the Big East, and with a good showing this weekend at Navy, they could advance to third place in the conference. The Big East Tournament will be held next weekend in Providence, RI.

Dwight Wilbur scored 26 points and Dwayne McClain added 23 in leading their Blue team to a 78-67 victory in Wednesday night's intra-squad Blue and White game at the Field House. Frank Dobbs, playing for the White, netted 28 to lead all scorers. Eddie Pinckney grabbed 12 rebounds for the same side. The two teams shot a combined 56.5% from the field and 65.6% from the line.

Women Booters Finish 3rd in E.C.A.C. Tournament

By MICHAEL F. IRONS

The Villanova women's soccer team finished its season last Saturday with a 2-0 victory over Colgate. The win gave the Wildcats third place in the E.C.A.C. Championship Tournament played here at Villanova. The team went into the tournament with an 11-5 record and they ended their very successful season at 12-6.

The Cats opened the tournament with a hard fought loss to powerful Vermont, 2-0. Villanova played well, with goaltender Sue Onnembo making four big saves to keep the game close. Other good games were played by seniors Cathy Ford and Katie Graney.

Aggressive play such as this enabled the women's soccer team to stay close with most opponents despite a difficult schedule.

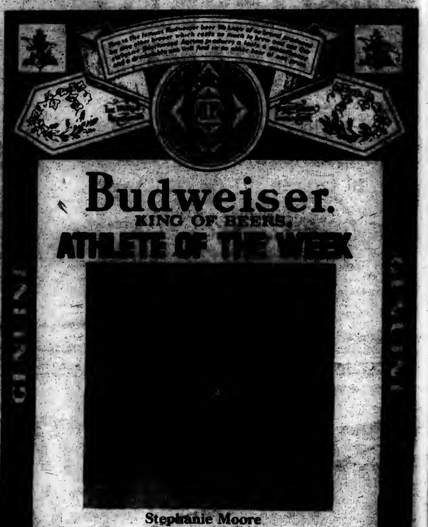
Villanova came back the next day to beat Colgate and take third place, with excellent efforts from Onnembo, Ford, Lisa Morgan and Sue Stavros. Onnembo had a sensational game, making 12 saves in preserving the shutout. It was her seventh shutout of the season, and she finished with a 1.77 goals against average. Onnembo allowed only 32 goals while making 155 saves in 18 games.

Ford, against Colgate, assisted on both of the goals. Ford finished the season as the Wildcat's high scorer with 44 points (17 goals, 10 assists). She will be missed next season because she scored at least one point in every Villanova win.

The two goals were scored by Morgan and Stavros. Morgan's goal was her first of the season as she finished with five points (1 goal, 3 assists). Stavros, 10 points (5 goals), was nicely setup by Ford for her goal, which secured the third place finish for the Wildcats.

The season was one of the best in Villanova history. Sparked by the leadership and excellent play of Ford, Onnembo and freshman sensation Ann Brennan, Villanova played well all season. With the likes of Brennan, Onnembo, and Kathy Kolon returning more good seasons are ahead.

The women's soccer team closed out its season with a 2-0 win over Colgate on Saturday. The victory raised the women's final record to 12-6.



Stephanie Moore

During her four years at Villanova University, Stephanie Moore has been a mainstay on the women's volleyball team. Stephanie has more than lived up to her expectations since she was a freshman, when she was the recipient of the first scholarship given for volleyball at Villanova. In 1982, she was a candidate for the Wheelan and Wheelan Top Volleyball Player in the Philadelphia Area Award, and is sure to be in the running for it again this year. For the past two seasons, Stephanie has also been captain of the volleyball team.

This season, Stephanie has led Villanova to a 21-15 record, which has included a 14 match winning streak, a first place finish in a tournament held at West Chester, and a second place finish at a LaSalle tournament. Currently, the volleyball team is in fourth place in the Big East. Before moving to the position of power hitter prior to the West Chester Tournament, Stephanie played setter and averaged approximately 20 assists per game. As a power hitter, she has an excellent 75% kill rate. "I'm playing the best I've ever played in my four years at Villanova, mainly due to my three years' experience on the college level. Mentally, I have a much better knowledge of the game."

During the off season, Stephanie plays in the United States Volleyball Association in order to maintain her volleyball prowess. In this league, teams represent colleges unofficially on the club level.

In her spare time, Stephanie also coaches the women's volleyball team at Archbishop Carroll High School and hopes to continue coaching after she graduates. During her four years at Villanova, she has seen the volleyball team improve and become highly regarded by opponents. "Our volleyball team has become recognized by the school and the athletic association at Villanova, and other teams have realized that we are a team to be reckoned with. I've been very happy to be a part of the program and to be able to contribute to its success."

Cammarota Scores Lone Goal

Cats Bow to No. 6 Penn State

By MARY AGNES MATYSZEWSKI

Last Friday night while many Villanovans snuggled before warm fires or snifted brandy to ward off the cold, one group of Wildcat men braved the frosty weather under the lights of the stadium. The men's soccer team hosted Penn State. Despite a valiant effort put forth by the Cats, the nationally ranked Nittany Lions walked away with the victory. Scoring Nova's lone goal in the second half was sophomore Mark Cammarota, to end the game with a score of 5-1.

While thawing out, Assistant Coach Clint Grimes made these remarks: "Our major problem in the first half was that they were playing a 2-4-4 game. That's two up front, four mid-fielders, and four in back. Their two would go side by side and we would mark the player and in doing so we left the position open and one of their men would shoot through the now empty space and score. They managed to get three goals in three minutes because of this. In the second half we were playing catch-up. But, we were also fighting tiredness, coldness and the field conditions — there was frost on the field and it was extremely easy to fall each time you made a cut.

"It's been a very rewarding year. We lost seven starters so it's been hard, but the spirit is there."

Coach Howard Graff

Coach Howard Graff

"We are a fine team. We have to work a bit on containing on defense but you can't forget that Penn State is nationally ranked — they are a good team. But, they didn't deserve to beat us by that score. In the second half we were down in their end for 15-20 minutes and they only came down in our end twice, but managed to score both times."

Head Coach Howard Graff also added his thoughts: "It's been a very rewarding year. We lost seven starters so it's been hard, but the spirit is there. Our defeats have been close games. Tonight's game was not that close, but we played our hearts out. I feel very confident about the coming season. We have good talent and once they start to age we will have an excellent squad. I feel very optimistic."

"One of our outstanding players was freshman goalie Brendan Quinn. Ian Hart also played super. And Mark Cammarota has a lot of potential — this was his second game of the season and his second season. It's Kevin Kilfeather's first year and he is doing very well. He has a lot of potential and is a good hustler. Alex Maibach has played very well and is coming along nicely. Also, this year we are only going to lose a few seniors so that shouldn't make a big difference next year."

Ford Pays Campus Informal Visit

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

Former President Gerald R. Ford spent a "delightful, stimulating and enjoyable" two days as a distinguished guest at Villanova University last Tuesday and Wednesday. "I welcome this high honor and very great privilege to be returning for my third visit to Villanova University," commented the former chief executive.

The climax of the 38th president's day on campus came as Ford addressed the general assembly of 450 students and faculty of Villanova in "A Conversation With Gerald Ford."

Ford's two-day visit ran according to schedule beginning Tuesday evening at the Trustee Associates honorary black-tie dinner for Ford. Wednesday morning, Ford began addressing students in small informal groups, to be able to interact and talk with the students on a more individualistic basis. After addressing a seminar group at 9 a.m., Ford spoke to a class on the U.S. Economy, then proceeded to a luncheon of approximately 50 student representatives and faculty members. Prior, Ford made his only address to the public community at a ten-minute press conference.

Ford addressed the student body on a light note to initiate an informal atmosphere for the students and guests alike.

President Driscoll welcomes former U.S. President Ford.

"Ford spoke of his recent visit in California and jokingly stated he was jealous of the introductions he received there, unlike at Villanova, where he was introduced as the husband of Betty Ford and father of Steve Ford, soap opera star of "The Young and the Restless," and Jack Ford, television commentator.

The former chief executive then fielded questions students had for

Ford stressed throughout the day what he felt unique difference in the United States and U.S.S.R. was, especially obvious with the recent elections held simultaneously in each country. "A year ago, we had an election here in the United States . . . free elections, in the privacy of a secret ballot, a privilege we have in this country of totally free elections for the selection of our officers of government.

"On the contrary, when Mr. Brezhnev died, in a very mysterious, behind-the-scene way, a small band of king-makers selected Mr. Brezhnev's successor. No one had a single thing to say in that decision. This," Ford stated, "is the fundamental difference in our government from theirs."

Ford also took a firm stand on the current Lebanon issue stating "I do not believe the marines should stay unless Lebanese politicians make a viable attempt to reorganize their government and unless progress is made in Middle East negotiations.

The 38th president said that he would want his presidential term to be remembered by the premise that when "I came into office, the country was disillusioned about the government and politicians; and we had just gone through the Viet Nam war, families were torn apart, and other domestic problems existed, but the achievement my administration made resulted in the healing of those differences to raise the morale and let people once again feel good about the country, government and its policies. Maybe we did not solve the problems but we healed them."

When questioned, during the general address, why Ford had not accepted Reagan's offer to consider a vice presidential nomination in 1980, Ford firmly stated that he had "no desire to. My wife and I lived in that political circle for 28 years and that was enough. We are enjoying our life as it is now."

The former president did strongly urge college students to get involved in the political circle, if interested, "as it is a challenging and stimulating job with many rewards."

Driscoll Addresses Senate

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, delivered his "State of the University" address at the University Senate meeting held Nov. 11, with a "sound, positive and optimistic statement about the University, one which we can take satisfaction and pride in."

In Driscoll's overview of what has taken place in the past few years, the "happy, positive and permissive report was indicated," he stated, "by the highest enrollment in Villanova's history, which the administration does not plan to increase, but maintain."

Driscoll voiced "a great deal of satisfaction in viewing the progress of the University, especially in the elaborate University Improvement Program, with the results being the vitality and strengthening of our academic areas."

The president complimented the University's staff as "we continue to retain and attract faculty members of high caliber and are able to offer them salaries more than competitive with comparable institutions."

Driscoll sought, throughout his address, to make clear his point that Villanova is "academically in a sound position."

Driscoll cited in his address that the expenditure of the capital budget of $26 million over the next three to five years, will be methodical and each dollar spent will be toward areas of the highest priority.

The "massive capital fund drive, the largest in the history of the University," Driscoll feels is necessary to garner money to repay the borrowed money now being spent.

With regard to the Covenant II Bond, Driscoll again stated the considerable amount of time spent in making initial contact with potential donors is underway, to attain the success of 90 percent needed to obtain the goal.

To reallocate the existing resources for the maximum usage, Driscoll promised to initiate a Program Review phase in the Planning Process for academic and functional areas.

Driscoll stated final dates for the current construction on the dorms as "on target in the fall of 1984, but due to some setbacks," the athletic facility is now anticipated to be completed for use in the fall 1985 semester, in time for the 1985-1986 basketball season.

Concluding his presidential address, Driscoll gave the attention to the "business of the alcohol policy as an ongoing problem the University is keenly aware of."

Driscoll emphasized the tremendous need for this social facet and gave assurance that the administration has been and will continue to look into the alcohol policy.

Leahy Proposes Alcohol Policy Revision on Campus

By JAMES H. DeLORENZO

A proposal for "bring your own bottle" parties on campus, submitted to Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for student life, "has been welcomed and is under consideration," according to Villanova student body president Patrick Leahy.

In an address to approximately 450 students Monday afternoon, Leahy announced "It is proposed that the current alcohol policy be amended to allow organization sponsored "BYOB's," open to any student currently enrolled as an undergraduate at Villanova."

Pennsylvania's Liquor Code, paraphrased in Villanova's code of student conduct, prohibits the sale, possession, use or distribution of alcoholic beverages to anyone under 21 years of age.

In addition, Villanova's Blue Book stated, "under no condition are beer kegs of any type permitted in residence halls . . . an automatic fine of $75 will be assessed for the first offense."

Neville noted in a letter to parents of students dated Aug. 25 "the necessity for the University to observe the Pennsylvania Liquor Code . . . we can no longer be out of compliance with these laws."

Leahy's address was part of a presentation in the Villanova room of the Connelly Center, sponsored by the "Student Government ad hoc Comittee to Restore Social Life," an outgrowth of the student group which organized last week's alcohol policy protest. Members of the group, who called themselves the "Committee to Restore a Better Social Life at Villanova," are now a part of the student government group.

According to Mark Rupert, coordinator of the ad hoc committee, "In the last few weeks, there has been a growing concern at Villan-

Ford's Day at Villanova

Trustees Honor Ford at Union League

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The Former President Gerald R. Ford initiated his visit to Villanova Tuesday night at an honorary Trustees Associates dinner at the Union League of Philadelphia. Approximately 250 Trustee Associates and special guests attended the black tie affair where Ford welcomed the opportunity to make his third visit to Villanova University.

Ford made a brief yet cordial appearance during the cocktail hour, making introductions and shaking hands to various guests, before being escorted to the dining room by Secret Service men and University hosts.

The Rev. George R. Riley, O.S.A., vice president for University Relations, gave a general introduction to the dinner sitting and Assistant to the President the Rev. George Burnell, O.S.A., provided an invocation.

The dinner atmosphere was informal as all attending were invited to talk with the distinguished guests. In the wake of dinner, the University President, the Rev. John M. Driscoll, introduced the 38th president, addressing him with a warm welcome and as an honor to have him for the two-day visit.

Ford kept his speech informal as he spoke on a personal level. Ford referred to his recent trip in California with his wife, Betty, and close friends.

Ford did address the principle of education and stressed its importance in citing that as "Villanova is the 114th college or university I have attended in the past six years, during which time I have answered 6,000 questions and taught 600 classes, I have developed great faith in the students of today." (Ford then questioned Driscoll on his eligibility for tenure with those requirements behind him.)

Continuing on his more serious note, the former chief executive said to the Villanova Alumni that he felt "Villanova is a good investment and I encourage all to continue to support the University as it is a place of education for the generation which I hold optimism in their potential to manage the future of our world."

Ford added as a final note to his speech that the urgency he feels for everyone to work toward world peace and the ability for all nations to work together.

Entertainment throughout the evening was played by the Villanova Blues and following dinner, the Villanova Singers performed the school alma-mater and a special arrangement for the Former President.

Ford was escorted from the affair by Secret Service men and University hosts and traveled to St. David's Inn to retire for the night.

Ford Views U.S. Economy

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The 38th President Gerald R. Ford began his second academic address to the student body on the topic of the U.S. Economy in the Connelly Center Cinema with a classroom atmosphere, presenting Villanovans with the "rare opportunity to have the privilege to hear the president discuss the economic conditions, and listen to someone who, at one time," Alvin Clay, Dean of Commerce and Finance, noted "was concerned with the economic health of our nation."

Former U.S. President Ford speaks to Villanova students.

Ford began relating that among the number of problems he faced in 1974, when taking over as president, economics was a very serious one, with inflation at an all time post-war high of 12.5 percent and unemployment at five to five and a half percent and anticipated to go up.

On the break of a post-war recession, with the oil embargo, and other economic problems, the former chief executive claimed that the achievement of his administration, through a tough recession period in 1975, made headway and put the United States well on the road to a change for the better.

Questions, stemming from Ford's introduction, concerned topics on the stabilizing of the economy, deregulation, inflation and interest rates and the middle east situation with respect to its effect on the domestic economy.

As a battle to fight inflation, Ford anticipated that the United States needs to decrease dependence on foreign aid by increasing utilization of coal and research of exotic fuel, improving conservation programs and initiating domestic programs to stimulate domestic production of crude oil in the United States. "The tremendous price increase has forced us as a nation to do things beneficial to our independence," said Ford.

The former president cited the progress of the economy in the last 12 months "has been spectacular," and that "although we have not reached the ultimate goal, we are well on our way to a solid economic recovery."

"Ford continued observing that the real problem in the economy is not the deficit of fiscal 1983, but of the sustainability of our economic prosperity in the out-year-deficit."

Ford suggested that the Congress and the White House should act now "to come up with some non-partisan answers," through the establishment of a Commission who could start on making a decision soon, prior to elections.

The only "viable solution" according to the former chief executive, "to meet the out-year-deficits, will require a combination of expenditure limitations and tax increases." The former president warned that the economic prosperity we have will be seriously jeopardized if action is not taken soon.

Referring to the state of American business experiencing a high profit margin, Ford commented that as a member of the board of directors for eight corporations, he has seen that in the 1981-82 recession "American business as a whole tightened its belt and is now the beneficiary of that better management."

The current profitability of business Ford also cited is due in part to the productivity of the employees across the board."

Ford pointed out that the high interest rate today is because the people with the money to loan are cautious, and will remain cautious until convinced that the success in inflation is real.

This problem is compounded, according to Ford "as the federal government is borrowing at such a high magnitude that the private sectors in the market are facing competition with the federal government's spending."

Ford emphasized that what worries those who are loaning money is that the federal government in fiscal 1983 spent $800 billion for all programs, while the government only derived in revenue $600 billion. And next year, continued Ford, "Uncle Sam is proposing to spend about $848 billion. The government will again have to borrow 20 to 22 percent of every dollar it spends."

Ford reminisced on his college days in responding to a question about banks' dilemma of forcing oil companies to pay back loans or to go bankrupt themselves. Ford remembered the time, "As house manager of my fraternity at the University of Michigan, I faced 45 hungry fraternity brothers with no money to purchase food as the United States president declared, overnight, a bank holiday. Luckily," Ford continued, "there was a frat brother whose parents were able to take care of us." Ford did not foresee any serious danger for banks and cited alternatives in the cooperation with the federal government to help some banks.

Former President Lunches with Students, Meets Press

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

Gerald R. Ford's midday schedule Wednesday at Villanova consisted of a noontime press conference and an hour-long luncheon in which he addressed faculty and students invited to the affair.

At the press conference, attended by many of the local media, Ford fielded questions concerning the presidency of Ronald Reagan, the possibility of a woman president or vice president in 1984 and the United States' current military actions in Central America.

Ford told those in attendance that he fully supported Reagan's actions in foreign diplomacy but said he would not comment on what his own actions would be if he were president, citing that it would be hard to predict what he would do if he were in the Oval Office.

Following an introduction by University President, the Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A., acknowledging the impact of Ford's visit upon the campus, the former President, heavily guarded by the Secret Service, answered approximately one dozen inquiries concerning his Presidency, as well as those about his private life as an elder statesman.

At the luncheon, somewhat behind schedule due to the former President's wish to meet with and shake the hands of as many students and others as possible, Ford was introduced by Student Body President Patrick Leahy who issued a toast to the former president. Approximately 100 people attended the luncheon, two-thirds of whom were students, faculty members and administrators.

Ford interrupted desert to address the audience and answer questions. The former President told the diners to continue with their meals because after so much time in the House of Representatives, the Senate and the Presidency, he was "used to people not paying attention during my speeches . . . they would read newspapers and fall asleep.

Responding to the question whether or not the United States was practicing "gunboat diplomacy," Ford said no. "I don't think we're using gunboat diplomacy. I happen to believe we were right to put our Marines into Lebanon in the first place but I also believe that they shouldn't be left there ad infinitum," Ford emphasized. "Unless we see developments happening in Lebanon that would justify continuation, just to leave there and have no change in policy or developments in Lebanon or the Middle East would be wrong.

"To justify our existence for an interim period of time, they have to establish a government," Ford said. "I happen to believe that those Marines in Lebanon should stay there and if they're going to argue in Geneva and start all their own factionalism, fights, and feuds . . . the hell with them. Pull up and get out. It's just that cold blooded."

Asked what he would like to be most remembered for by the historians, the nation's 38th President said that he would like to think that he had helped "heal the nation."

"The way I look at it, when I became President, we were very well torn apart domestically. Between Vietnam, Watergate and all the other problems we had, there was a great deal of disillusionment and unhappiness with government. Families were torn apart, cities were having riots, etc.

"So we tried to heal these wounds," Ford stated. "We didn't expect everyone to agree but we sought to lower voices and get everybody to listen to one another and get a reestablishment of peace, whether they agreed or not. The healing of the disagreements and the disillusionment is what I would probably want historians to remember."

Ford denied that he had ever been considered for a role as a special envoy to the Middle East. "I don't know where those stories emanated from," said Ford, which illicited laughter from the luncheon crowd. "Nobody ever contacted me. I was surprised to read them myself, maybe more so."

The former President also responded to questions about nuclear disarmament and his role in the SALT II negotiations, the restructuring of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and the possibility of the United Nations "with character and some strength" being used to "avoid or to end some of these conflicts."

Ford also posed with members of the student government, the student population in attendance

Secret Service Doing Their Job

By MARY CLAIRE LEAHY

The Philadelphia U.S. Secret Service Department, in conjunction with Former President Ford's personal Secret Service men, and the local security and police department provided the necessary guidance and protection Ford required throughout his two-day visit to Villanova.

Approximately 18 Secret Service Personnel guided Ford through during his visit at the University, although an exact count cannot be revealed. "We do not discuss in numbers," commented Kevin Tucker, head of the Philadelphia Secret Service department, "but we discuss in terms of how we can best utilize the manpower we assign to its fullest potential."

"In sound reasoning," Tucker explained, "the inability to reveal numbers and putting out similar information is because then someone can figure the number we have, add one to that, and be able to outnumber our protection personnel."

Referring also to Ford's visit, "every security plan is based on common sense and hard work, to achieve our ultimate goal to minimize and reduce risk," said Tucker.

To reach this goal, "total planning is the key." Prior to a visit, routes and hostels are determined for the case "when and where an emergency could arise. We plan for all emergencies," said Tucker. "Agents look at a way to get in and a way to get out of any given situation."

The former president has an ascribed number of Secret Service men, by law, and as he entered Philadelphia, was supplemented by the district's Secret Service personnel, one a Villanova alumnae, to make up that ascribed number of escorts.

The Secret Service personnel are interchangable in assignment and, therefore, all receive the same training to begin with.

The fundamental qualifications to acquire a Secret Service position, are a college degree, "good physical condition, and 20/40 eyesight correctable to 20/20. Assets beyond the basic requirements, cited by Tucker, include an ability to speak a foreign language, an accounting background and computer literacy.

"We cover for foreign heads of state and travel overseas, so any language is an asset to a Secret Service member," said Tucker.

Tucker pointed out that since the service they provide also handles investigations, for the research involved an accounting or computer background is beneficial.

Stressing that the Secret Service does not discriminate, Tucker did comment that several years of work experience, although it is not necessary, does give us the opportunity to see how the individual interacts with and handles other people.

"On the Secret Service, you deal with presidents and vice presidents and on the other hand with counterfeiters and criminals. How one deals with each spectrum of people determines how successfully we complete our job."

Taking Care of Some Unfinished Business

The following editorial is written by 1982-83 Editor-in-Chief Leonard J. La Barth. The opinions, thoughts and claims made in this editorial are those of the Editor-in-Chief and do not reflect the views of the Editorial Board.

. . . Boy, oh, boy . . . just when things were starting to heat up, it's my turn to leave the kitchen . . . just look around you campers . . . see all these committees springing up . . . see all these protests . . . see all these supposed "actions" by the student body . . . or was the word "inaction?" . . . there are smokescreens surrounding the issues at Villanova. But there are those clever enough to see through the covering up of these issues and they realize that "something's goin' wrong around here . . . around here" . . .

It's true . . . The next committee to be formed at Villanova should be The Committee to End the Formation of Committees At Villanova . . . better yet . . . get rid of those supposed "action-oriented" committees whose goals are set on selfishness (let's have fun) and establish committees dedicated to the more important issues and aspects that confront and should interest the Villanova student . . . after all, isn't it true that we can make a difference? . . . oh, you want to make the difference? . . . well, dammit . . . make that difference . . . now . . . oh, you want to wait until after Dec. 13 . . . we're not that blind . . . throw all the attention onto your so-called "social life" situation at Villanova and ignore football . . . but football is a part, or at least was a part of the University social life . . . and it can be again . . . but there are those outside the administration (perhaps even inside . . . right?) who don't want to see it again . . . actions do speak louder than words . . .

People are wondering what the exact situation is concerning student involvement with football . . . and what do we tell them? . . . that the best course according to our esteemed student representatives is to sit back, be good little boys and girls (no protesting this issue!) and wait for the Board of Trustees to make a decision in 25 days without any recent input gauging student sentiment . . . oh, cut a vein there? . . . it's clever political strategy . . . create one diversive issue to draw attention away from another . . . whenever possible . . . send the man to Washington, eh? . . .

Again, why all these committees? . . . Get some real ones . . . for example: "The Committee To Examine Minority Enrollment at Vanillanova" . . . The Committee To Establish Good Community Relations" . . . "The Committee To Recommend Better Traffic Safety Rules At Villanova" . . . "The Committee To Explore . . . Villanova" . . . These are the committees needed here. These are the committees that could generate some real input over volatile issues. These committees could protest the "real life," . . . oh, sure, there are committees that periodically look into these matters but none dedicated to the issues . . .

"Money makes the world go around, the world go around" . . . Let's see . . . The Covenant Campaign II has raised something like a little over $3 million bucks . . . wow . . . three and a half years left to raise the other needed $17 million . . . time for the V.U. garage sale . . . and what skeletons will the University be putting on the block . . .

The University will continue long after these pages of print have turned yellow, been crumpled and dissolved into dust . . . the school has been here 141 years . . . it's not going anywhere . . . but will we be back? . . . when the current enrolled classes graduate and the title of "alumni" is bestowed upon everyone . . . how many will remember Villanova, perhaps the four most important years of our lives? . . . will we be able to look back with pride and say what's my alma mater? . . . the answer should be yes . . . because we have known and we have cared . . .

"Indebted" to Unselfish Rescuers

To the Editor:

It's in the aftermath of an event of a fire such as the one at Corr this past Friday morning, that one might be compelled to lecture the community on fire safety; proper respect for extinguishers, alarms, the dangers of overloaded electrical sockets, candles, cigarettes, and the rest. Even so, I will forego what may be my obligation for the moment.

A tragedy on this campus was avoided because people such as Gus Hoban and Pete Gearhart exercised excellent judgment. These two, with Barbara McGraw, our own Security Officers with excellent assistance from members of Radnor Police, Fire and Rescue Departments, risked their own personal safety to assist others, to protect the well-being of residents and that of the institution. To them, and other nameless staff and students who responded unselfishly in this emergency, we are deeply indebted.

Wrong Protest

To the Editor:

Following two recent incidents concerning Villanova University, I now realize why Villanova is not taken very seriously by the academic community in the United States.

The first incident concerns the "booze" demonstration on campus last Wednesday night, Nov. 9. As the Villanovan reports, nearly 1000 students turned out to rail against the University administration for not allowing alcohol to be served at campus parties. Threats were made to conduct demonstrations and sit-ins in order to force the school to rescind its present alcohol policy. This comes in spite of the fact that the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania specifically prohibits the serving of alcohol to anyone under the age of 21. For Villanova then, to allow alcohol to be served at campus parties where minors will be present, would put the school in violation of the law.

While all this protest and general dissatisfaction was being expressed about the alcohol policy at Villanova, innocent civilians were being killed in Nicaragua by the U.S. supported thugs that are try-

Student Gov't Responds to Issues

To the Editor:

The 11/11/83 issue of the Villanovan featured an editorial titled "Student Gov't: Football is Dead," by James H. DeLorenzo. By virtue of the fact that he writes for the official campus newspaper, Mr. DeLorenzo is afforded some degree of credibility, it is indeed unfortunate, however, that Mr. DeLorenzo chose to ignore the responsibility that comes with such a privilege, and in so doing, has cast doubt on not only his own credibility, but on editor Len LaBarth's as well, who has final say on the content on the Villanovan.

The editorial urges, "the Student Government to take a firm stand, pro or con, on the football issue." We would simply ask "Where have you been, Jim?" Your own organization (the Villanovan) published a full page ad on Student Government's position on football, where we unanimously stated: "From the student Body President, to the appointed Vice-Presidents, to the elected Senators, and voting Secretary, we unanimously support the restoration of football." Two weeks later, a letter appeared from Student Body President, Patrick J. Leahy, to Frank Rodgers, President of the General Alumni Association, where it was again stated that Student Government supports the return of football to Villanova's campus. We have taken a stand, and there can be no doubt as to our sincerity.

It is true that we decided against having a rally concerning football. As the "elected representatives" of the student body, and after having spoken informally with many students, it was agreed upon that a rally was both unnecessary and possibly detrimental to the football issue, insofar as it would only result in a re-hashing of angry emotions, and be a continuance of generating unnecessary bad publicity for Villanova University.

When Mr. DeLorenzo comments that "together we can't make any difference if we don't act," he certainly does have a point . . . it's a shame, though, that he fails to hear his own message. When Student Government uses the word "together," it is not meant as only the nine persons elected to serve on the University Senate, but rather as all students within the Villanova community working through their elected representatives. The present Student Government administration has already shown that we can work together and we can make a difference. But Mr. DeLorenzo and Mr. LaBarth have chosen to ignore the facts. It was through the concerted efforts of students and their Student Government that a week long Fall Break has been instituted; similarly, it was through this combination that minuses were kept out of our grading system. The removal of all automobiles from the parking lot between Sheehan and Sullivan Halls is another fine example of what we can do when we work together.

We are only two months into the school year, and though the semester is quickly drawing to a close, Student Government is proud of its accomplishments and believes that although Mr. DeLorenzo and Mr. LaBarth may not be behind us, or wish to include themselves among the "TOGETHER" that sees a bright future for Villanova, we do believe that the student body is behind us.

Shortly, the editorship of the Villanovan will change hands. We hold none of the "cautious optimism" that was expressed towards the incoming Leahy administration shortly after the Spring elections. We have, instead, great enthusiasm and trust in Joe Marusak, the Villanovan's new editor, that the highest principles of journalism will be adhered to at all times and in all cases.

In closing, we would like to personally invite every member of the Villanova community to come by the Student Government office and let us know what you think or what you'd like to see done about these or any other issues of concern.

On Campus

By JOHN WALSH

In anticipation of former President Gerald Ford's visit earlier in the week, the Villanovan asked students: "Are you going to the general assembly? What is your reaction to the visit?"

"No. I couldn't get a ticket. I think it's great that our campus is getting some positive exposure for a change."

Robert Wimer
Sophomore, Finance

"No. I didn't know until just now. But I'm going to watch him walk by."

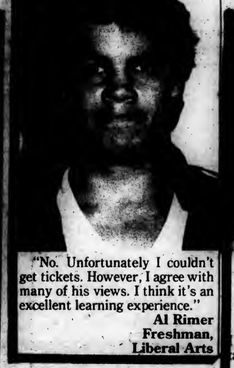
Maureen Stevens
Sophomore,
Liberal Arts

"Yes. I'm glad to see events like this coming to campus."

Donald J. Detweiler
Sophomore, Economics

"Yes, I think that it will be great being able to ask questions and listen to a former president speak. I also feel flattered that he chose Villanova as a school to speak at.

Caroline Milligan
Junior, Accounting



"No. Unfortunately I couldn't get tickets. However, I agree with many of his views. I think it's an excellent learning experience."

Al Rimer
Freshman,
Liberal Arts

"No. I wasn't able to get tickets. I think it's really great that he's taking the time to visit Villanova.

Karen Trosset
Freshman, Liberal Arts

"Yes. It's good to see someone of this importance come to Villanova. We should have someone like that here every year."

Kevin Scott
Junior, Accounting

"Yes. I think it's great that the University is providing the students the opportunity to meet such an influential person."

Christopher Hayes
Junior, Economics

"No, I have a test. But I think it's great to see important figures on campus. It's good to see something is going on on-campus."

ing to take over the popular Sandanista government. While Villanova students complained about campus parties not being "fun" because there was no liquor with which to get stone drunk, people were being butchered by the right wing goon squads the Reagan administration supports in El Salvador.

Despite the horrible events presently occurring in Central America, Villanova could only muster up 18 people (mostly grad and law students) to attend the mass demonstration in Washington, D.C. on Nov. 12 to demand an end to this carnage. Bryn Mawr and Haverford Colleges, which together have less than a third of the total Villanovan student body, sent down three busloads of people. Swarthmore College, which also has less than a third of the Villanova student body, sent down 6 busloads. Other than the 18, where was the rest of the Villanova student body on November 12? Presumably out planning their next scheme of attack for getting the University to break the law, or some other equally inane, "all important," engrossing task.

Flaw

To the Editor:

Villanova's so-called "in-loco parentis" social policy has one principal flaw. It is a stricter and less reasonable set of rules than those which the parents of many Villanovans enforce.

Villanova students do not want Villanova to treat them as children. That is what the protestors are saying. They are adults, and are treated as such at home, complete with the responsibility for their own actions which is part of adulthood. Why, then, does their University have the atmosphere of a boarding school for pubescents? Adults can deal with visitation and the problems it may pose for a roommate and adults are responsible to the LCB for themselves. Why does Villanova continue to classify its students as children? By doing so, it gives them no incentive to act as adults and this becomes the school's justification for continuing its growth-stifling policies.

If Villanova is serious about acting "in-loco parentis," then perhaps the administration should find out what parental action for Villanovans consist of. Do the parents of Villanovans really object to their children having a beer or watching late-night TV with a friend of the opposite sex. Rules and regulations about such activities should be legislated in view of the real parental treatment of Villanovans, or the farce of calling the policy "in-loco parentis" should be discontinued.

Words, Pat

To the Editor:

Many Villanovans are tired of hearing about the football issue. But I would much rather have to listen to issues than have no issue at all! As a junior at Villanova, I have never seen a Villanova football game, but I have seen a lot of support to get it back. Paul Tufano, along with numerous volunteers, worked very hard last year to enlighten the administration. They found that 96 percent of the students would support it financially. In addition, the alumni has continued to show support both financially and verbally to its restoration.

While Pat Leahy has voiced his support for football, he has taken no action to back up his words. Support is great, but actions speak louder than words. I think it is Mr. Leahy's obligation to represent those who elected him. This matter requires more than just his statements in the Villanovan. I think he should realize, after the Board of Trustees votes in December, it may be too late. I think a lot of people do care. It is not a dead issue; however, without action, it may be soon.

'82-'83 Student President Assails Leahy's Shirking

To the Editor:

After reading last week's editorial, "Student Government: Football is Dead," my immediate reactions were those of anger, frustration, and disappointment. As last year's Student Body President, I was quite vocal on the issue of football. This year, as a first year Villanova Law School student I have been silent. However, the inaction of the current Student Government has forced me to break this silence and send the following message to the student body: Football is not a dead issue!

When my term as Student Body President expired last May, I realized that as I turned over my duties and responsibilities to the new leadership, they would not necessarily be used in the same way. Changes of leadership usually mean changes of methods, techniques, and approaches. This is only natural, and is, in fact, vital to the overall goal of an ever-improving government. This is why I, like other past leaders, remain silent after leaving office. However, though leaders may change, the responsibility to the students remains the same. I feel that Pat Leahy and the current Student Government have shirked their duty of representing the student interest on this very important issue.

Next month, on Dec. 13, the Board of Trustees will decide whether to reinstate a football program at Villanova. This decision comes as the culmination of 2½ years of efforts by students and alumni. The student role in the movement to reinstate football has been quite influential. The results of the football survey conducted by my administration last year, were a key factor in the formation of a Trustee committee on football. In this survey, 96 percent of the 4,309 students surveyed said they would support football by paying $35 a year in exchange for home game tickets. The Trustee committee, of which I was a member, studied the options open to Villanova in terms of a football program. We presented our recommendations for a 1-AA program to the Board this past June, and now await their decision next month.

In light of substantial progress made on this controversial issue, as well as the profound and continued student commitment over the last 2½ years, it is baffling to find that the current Student Government does not want to get involved. With only a month left before the decision, the Student Government voted down a student rally, citing student apathy as a controlling reason. The only apathy that exists is on the part of Mr. Leahy and his colleagues. In last year's survey, the highest percentages in favor of football were the current Sophomore, Junior, and Senior classes (in that order). What documentation does the Student Government have that shows the students have lost interest? Conversations or polling among friends are not persuasive facts.

It is not my place to speculate on the motives and reasons behind the Student Government's unfounded position. But as one who has been closely involved with this issue since April 14, 1981, the day football was dropped, it is my place to tell you that the issue is very much alive. The facts in the report we presented to the Board last June speak for themselves, despite the Administration's groundless rebuttal, What is needed now is for the students to let the Board know that the interest in football's return has not dissipated, but is just as strong as ever. This can be done through letters to the editor, letters to the Trustees (listed in your Blue Book) and through the extensive network of student organizations on campus.

I wholeheartedly thank the students for their support in the efforts to reinstate football. I join with them in hoping for and working towards a successful day in December.

Interaction

To the Editor:

Congratulations, Villanova.

Another V.U. goal has been successfully reached. Several years ago, Villanova ranked among the top ten party schools in Playboy's Party Poll. When I was about to come to V.U., my father said, "I think you are going to like Villanova. If I remember correctly, it was pretty much of a party school." Since then, Villanova has been making a concerted effort to "do away" with college social life on campus. Well, after many hard years at work, the administration has finally done it!

After all, the University is definitely an institution for learning. Because social functions "take away" both valuable money and "study time", the administration simply decided, "We'll have no more of this." We are entering an age when people will not have to work with one another, they will be working with machines. In their tremendous foresight, the administration bought two new computers so the students can get socially involved with machines.

I personally, and all of us here at DeLurey, would like to congratulate as well as thank Villanova for putting so much thought into seeing that we students get a "modern", well-rounded education, including the "new" social obligations we will have out in the job world. Thank you, V.U.

LCB Victim

To the Editor:

LCB. What do these three letters mean to you? Do they make you fearful to enter the Main Line saloons? Well, if you happen to be under the age of 21, the thought could possibly ruin one of your evenings out. I know. Beware of gentlemen in brown polyester suits who are at least over the age of 30. These fateful men who lurk around the Main Line during the evening hours are on the prowl. They are looking for you, the innocent college student who happens to be in the wrong place at the wrong time. Their sole pleasure in life seems to be derived by saying the words, "Please step outside, because you are under arrest." Venom seems to shoot from their mouths while your legs start to wobble and become weak. As you work your way through the crowd to the awaiting police as every eye in the vicinity is staring at your beet red face and downcast eyes. One would think that someone would learn a distinct lesson from the whole experience. Still, doing the Main Line crawl far outweighs the consequences. Doesn't it?

Elephants Dancing

To the Editor:

Last week's "To the Editor" section ran a series of letters expressing great disappointment in the "negative" coverage by this paper of the Grenada invasion. I draw particular attention to the letter by Mr. Steidler, political science honors. Mr. Steidler's criticism is written on two levels; one is an overall criticism of the article in question ("Grenada Invasion Questioned"), the other level is an attack on those professors who were quoted. By these methods Mr. Steidler seeks to discredit the article.

Mr. Steidler's first point is well taken; in no way do the similar opinions of four professors in a single department form a consensus within that department. However, the differing opinion of two other professors does not dissuade one from the belief that there is some serious trepidation among the scholars in the political science department about the invasion of Grenada. To take Mr. Steidler's point one step further; we now know the opinions of six (6) sixteen (16) full and part-time scholars of political science at Villanova. Perhaps Mr. Steidler should have been a bit more "probing" in his attempt to find out what the general consensus is within the political science department on the issue of the Grenada invasion.

My second criticism deals with Mr. Steidler's attempts to discredit the opinions of all four of the originally quoted professors by singling out and attacking only one. With this attack Mr. Steidler loses all credibility. He seeks to criticize the analogy of Afghanistan and yet makes the weaker analogy of the Israeli raid on Entebe. If I recall the Israelis did not use six thousand troops to rescue their hostages, there was a real hostage situation, and the Israeli force left immediately following the rescue. The very basis of his argument in favor of U.S. action in Grenada as "preemptive and defensive" leaves me fearful of the

A Potential Danger Every Friday at 2 a.m.

By DIRK ZIFF

Dirk Ziff is a sophomore at the University of Pennsylvania and a staff member of the Daily Pennsylvanian.

Last Thursday night I was strolling down 40th Street on my way back to Superblock when I decided to count the parked cars brandishing Villanova stickers. It wasn't long before I realized that cars with bare rear windows were badly outnumbered by those bearing emblems of Wildcat pride. In the distance, the sounds of intoxicated college students grew louder as the mob outside Smokey Joe's swelled with party-hungry Wildcats evicted from their cozy den by Philadelphia's 2 a.m. curfew.

Something was deeply wrong here, and it didn't take me long to figure out what: This inebriated army now had no choice but to file into its battalion of automobiles, and launch a concentrated assault on the innocent human beings traveling on both the Schuylkill Expressway and Lancaster Avenue.

If you were to ask a typical Penn student (if such a thing exists) to give you a quick summary of his perception of the typical Villanova student, the response would probably run somewhere along the lines of "Oh, maybe a big, dark-haired, unshaven guy with a passion for nightly consumption of Budweiser in vats." This unjust stereotype is almost certainly the result of what limited exposure students here have to the ways of Villanovans — a weekly mass invasion of our once venerable Pennstitution, seemingly for the sole purpose of getting as drunk as humanly possible.

A friend of mine from high school enrolled as a freshman at Villanova this semester. When I spoke with him on the phone about a month ago, he told me something which I found very interesting. He said he is not allowed to drink alcohol at Villanova, and that the rule is tightly enforced. (Can you imagine the uproar if such a restriction were to be implemented here?) My friend also said there are no drinking establishments (read: bars) in the vicinity of campus that do not require proof of age. His message was this: when in a mood to party, Villanovans are stuck, they are forced to invade our turf and imbibe at Smokey Joe's.

Smokey Joe's is unique among campus bars (read: drinking establishments) in that it has been years since the police have raided it in search of underage celebrators. While other establishments have been scoured on a steady basis — the most recent occurence being a multi-bar bust last semester — Smoke's has stood alone, untouched. While Penn students worry that they may now be carded at these other bars, everyone — especially our friends at Villanova — knows that any old college I.D. is good for a beer or eleven at Smoke's.

There is one problem. In admitting a swarming, writhing horde of Villanova students on Thursday and Friday nights, the management of Smokey Joe's is either unaware of or brazenly ignoring one stark fact: the only reasonable way to travel from Villanova to Smokey Joe's (and back) is by car. Is the management of our fabled watering hole really naive enough to believe that one person out of every carload of invaders will remain sober and in safe driving condition while his friends get blasted and have a great time? Or are they willing to disregard the safety of others by unleashing this undeniably dangerous crowd onto our roads, all in the name of a few extra profit dollars?

Either way, the situation represents a serious and potentially deadly problem. But it is not our colleagues at Villanova that we should be concerned for; to drink and then drive is a choice that they make. It is the family man, the delivery man, the woman with three children in the back seat returning from a visit to the aunt — it is for them that we should fear.

To have innocent lives snuffed out by a rowdy carload of Villanovans late one Thursday night would be a tragic shame.

The preceding commentary appeared on the editorial pages of The Daily Pennsylvanian, the University of Pennsylvania newspaper, and is being reprinted with the author's permission.

further implications of such an orthodox attitude towards the resolution of international crisis.

The invasion of Grenada was clearly the act of a nation interfering in the sovereign affairs of another nation during a time of crisis. Something similar to the elephant dancing among the chickens to get a peanut.

Aware of WKVU?

To the Editor:

Most of you are aware, through the Villanovan article of Nov. 4, that WKVU was driven to a shutdown of its activities. But how many are aware that the station has gone back on the air? My guess is that only a few know that the station has resumed broadcast, and only a handful of those have actually tuned in. After its ten-day shutdown, WKVU has come back on the air only to face the same problem, the inability to broadcast, which forced the shutdown — and I ask — WHY?

The phenomenon of college radio stretched back to the 1950s when the FCC set aside a certain portion of the band (from 88.1 to 92.1) for educational and public channels. Since then, every major university (except Villanova) in the Philadelphia are. including the University of Pennsylvania, Temple, Drexel, Widener, and Swarthmore, along with two high schools — Haverford and Ridley — have acquired FM broadcast licences. Why are these schools able to do what Villanova has proven itself (like in so many other areas) unable to do? I blame not the students running the station (many of this dedicated group puts in over 40 hours a week at the station), but, rather I feel that the lack of administrative support is at the root of the station's failure.

During my four years of involvement with WKVU, the overwhelming administrative view toward the station has ranged from apathy to outright hostility. The University, rather than take the responsibility for the station, as other schools with successful radio stations have done, has instead used the students as scapegoats for its own inadequacies. This problem, common to most campus organizations, is felt acutely by WKVU due to the technical complexities involved with the operation of a full-scale radio station.

As the administration in general has ignored the plight of WKVU, it is clear that the Communications Arts Dept. in particular has blatantly refused to support the station. Our former moderator, Dr. Raymond Wilke (a communications professor), never once graced 210 Dougherty with his presence during the three years prior to his replacement. This department, which offers to its prospective students a chance to get involved with "Villanova's Student Radio Station" (Blue Book p. 88), is by the most lenient definition, guilty of fraud — for it offers students an entity which does not exist.

So it is clear to me, after four years of frustration, that the future of WKVU lies not in a dedicated membership (for it has had that all along), but rather in an administration which will take an active role in the station's renaissance. The only means by which the most basic and essential goal of WKVU to broadcast on the air on the FM band can be reached, is through University action and University initiative. Without this commitment, WKVU will continue to struggle along, as it has for over thirty years, as yet another bruise on the broken spirits of the Villanova community.

La Barth La Man

As Billy Joel once said: "Life is a series of hellos and goodbyes, and it's time to say goodbye again . . ." This issue of the Villanovan is the last for the senior editors. Congratulations to Joseph Marusak, who is the new Editor-In-Chief, and special thanks to Leonard LaBarth, who for the past year maintained and upgraded the standard of excellence of our newspaper.

Besides reading his editorials or articles Leonard J. LaBarth is probably a mystery to most readers of the Villanovan. Well, he remains a mystery no longer. Born July 20, 1962 in Philadelphia, to Irene and the late Joseph LaBarth, Len even as an infant was a reporter. His investigative expose on child care in hospitals "Cribs and Bibs" won him the prestigious Animal Cracker Award. This launched an impressive journalistic career, which includes Editor-In-Chief of his high-school paper, The Mar News, and also news editor for the Villanovan.

La Barth, a communications major, also has been Assistant Manager at the General Nutrition Center in Graniteville for the past four years. In his spare time, Len likes listening to Springsteen, playing the saxophone and doing anything with his wife of four months, Cathy. Len also enjoys hanging out with Student Government whenever he can.

During his term as Editor-In-Chief, LaBarth proved to be a tireless worker who always took the time out to make sure things were going smoothly. His virtues were always patience and most of all fairness.

So after all is said and done, in the words of Carol Burnett, we're so glad we had this time together: Len, it's been a pleasure working for you, and you're a great guy. But, we have one last request, pleeeeese . . . Shave that cheesey mustache!!

Leahy Proposes Policy Revision

ova regarding the social life. This concern reaches from the students all the way up to the administration."

"Many of you feel that the Committee (to Restore a Better Social Life at Villanova) has sold out or has been co-opted by the administration," Rupert said. "I can assure you that we have not compromised our views on any issue.

"What Patrick has done is to expedite a process which could have been long and with uncertain ends. He has given us a direct voice in the decision making process at Villanova," added Rupert.

Leahy claimed that beginning in September, "I began seeking a solution to the problem of social life on campus. The problem has been compounded by the lowest student morale I have ever seen at Villanova.

"The lack of social life on campus stems from the administration's adherence to the state law concerning the consumption of alcoholic beverages by minors," Leahy said. "This is the same policy that existed before, but this year there are no exceptions made as in years past."

Noting that high school students were served alcoholic beverages at campus parties held last year, Leahy claimed that "this gave the LCB an open invitation to harass Villanova."

Leahy explained that an advisory council to the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, was formed in September, "consisting of the presidents of the Association of Commuting Students, the Resident Student Association, the Panhellenic Council and Inter-Fraternity Councils and myself.

"After several different meetings, we agreed that the major concern facing the Villanova student was the lack of social life on campus," Leahy continued.

"With this problem in mind, we met with Dr. Neville on Oct. 19 and with the University's legal counsel, Ray Cullen."

At the meeting, it was determined "that criminal liability could be negated as well as civil liability minimized by allowing students with proper ID's to bring their own bottles to parties on campus, rather than have the University provide alcohol for students."

The ad hoc committee's "BYOB" proposal was submitted Nov. 9, the same day as the student demonstration.

"It was a credit to Villanova University and the students," Leahy said of the demonstration. "Student concerns were clearly stated and heard."

Neville "expressed reservations concerning our proposal, but they are not irreconcilable," added Leahy.

In his speech, Leahy outlined guidelines for a "BYOB" party, including a proposal that any planned party should demonstrate "that the major focus of the event is not alcohol but some form of entertainment."

Also, non-alcoholic beverages and food should be provided, and alcohol should be carried in an unidentifiable container "such as a brown paper bag," Leahy said. A student group sponsoring any event would be responsible for policing the event as well.

"As proof of a willingness on the part of the administration to benefit the most important component of Villanova, the students," Leahy revealed Villanova Union plans for an undergraduate semi-formal with "BYOB" provisions. The Union plan has been approved by Neville's office.

"It's not a solution, but it is a beginning," concluded Leahy.

Fire Damages Corr Hall

By GARY R. DYER

A fire broke out in a dormitory room in Corr Hall early Friday morning, destroying the occupant's possessions and raising questions about the ease of access to the fire extinguisher there.

Corr resident Joseph Mancuso said he was asleep at about 3 a.m. in his room, 320, when he knocked over a candle on his desk which a friend had lit earlier in the evening. His roommate, Andrew Salmon, was away at the time. Mancuso awoke to find his blankets on fire. Unharmed, he ran to the room of the resident assistant, who pulled the fire alarm.

When Robert Marshall, a resident of the hall, attempted to get the fire extinguisher from its locked metal case six feet from the door of Room 320, he found that the front was made of plexiglass, a plastic which is almost impossible to break. "The firemen couldn't get it open, either." Marshall said. An extinguisher approximately 120 feet down the hall had to be used.

"It shouldn't have been (plexiglass)," Thomas Trucks, director of maintenance, said. "I think it was an employee who is out on long-term disability now who changed those for some reason on his own, even though we have glass replacements in stock and all ready to be used. I can't explain it." The front of the cabinet should have been simple plate glass so it could be broken easily.

After the Corr fire, maintenance checked all fire extinguishers and discovered two more in Corr covered by plexiglass. During the fire the extinguisher was used, but only after the metal had been forced open. The extinguisher cabinets are kept locked to discourage vandalism, and keys are kept by maintenance to allow servicing.

Trucks said it might cost the University as much as $8,000 to repair the damage, and the work would take about a month. Mancuso is unsure of the dollar value of his loss; his refrigerator, radio, television, contact lenses and glasses, blankets and all of his books and notes were destroyed in the blaze.

The Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., dean of students points out that the Blue Book state (p. 42): "No student shall engage in any activity which shall endanger the health, safety, well-being, or property of another student or member of the University community," which includes "improper use or storage of flammable materials, open flames, candles or other heat-producing material, and devices."

Stack said, "The reason for it was the irresponsibility of the student who lit a candle and fell asleep."

Senate Discusses Budget

Also during the Senate meeting, Senator Alvin Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance, and chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, reported he received a letter from the student government requesting that, "considering the anticipated four percent inflation rate, a five percent tuition increase should be considered in planning the students' 1984-1985 tuition."

The University 1984-1985 Priorities Report, compiled by the University Planning and Priority Committee, passed unanimously after an additional amendment proposed by Senator Justin Greene was voted in, concerning a competitive faculty pay check and insurance clause to be placed among the "highest priorities as a way to maintain and/or raise the quality of the faculty here at Villanova," stated Greene.

The Priorities Budget passed with the Bond Issue Debt Service; Computing Improvement for Faculty, Staff and Students; Covenant Campaign Support; Financial Aid; and the Faculty pay under the "highest priorities," to be considered in planning the next year's budget.

Under the "priorities" list, again in alphabetical order, the committee placed the Academic Development Program; Campus Development and Renovation; Deferred Maintenance; Energy Conservation Program; Safety, Security and Traffic; and Student Costs.

A motion from the social Action Committee, presented by science Senator Clare Stoebenau, passed unanimously, stating "That the University Senate seek from the Administration the reaffirmation of its commitment to an increased effort in recruiting and retaining minority students (US 7980-6-7); and that the Administration take appropriate and measurable action to carry out this policy."

A suggestion to accompany the motion, to be passed on to the Board of Trustees, concerned the idea to warrant qualified personnel from the Social Action Office to the admissions' office.

The motion re-surfaced as a result of concern for the stagnant three percent minority enrollment at Villanova in the past three years.

It was noted, however, that the Social Action Committee has made various attempts to increase minority students.

Students Support Hunger Awareness Week at V.U.

By DIANA SUGG

This past week Campus Ministry sponsored Hunger Awareness Week, an annual event to give students a better understanding of the hunger that exists in today's society.

A wide range of activities, including seminars, Fast Day, the Hunger Banquet and a dance marathon, gave many students the chance to participate. Events were planned for each day, from Nov. 13 to Nov. 20.

Chairperson Paul Sminkey said that this year's emphasis was placed on "challenging" the students. It was felt that not only should people be informed about the issue, but also respond to it in some concrete way.

Interested students were able to sign up to work in an inner-city soup kitchen and see the problem firsthand. Also, presentations by five different volunteer groups such as Maryknoll and the Jesuit Volunteer Corps, were given Monday Night in the North Lounge.

The representatives spoke about their groups and distributed information to those students considering them as prospective careers.

The biggest fund-raiser of the week was expected to be Fast Day, which took place yesterday at lunch. Sminkey commented that usually over a thousand resident students participate by skipping lunch for one day. The money that would have been used for this meal is then donated to the Campus Ministry's Hunger Awareness fund.

Other fund-raisers were the LXA Kidnap for Hunger and the Run for Hunger on Monday; the Third World Craft Sale on Wednesday and Thursday; and the dance marathon on Friday night.

The proceeds generated by these events will go to two places, based upon the decision of the Campus Ministry staff. Some will go to Nicaragua through Oxfam America, an organization which supports self-help development projects in poor areas of the world. A certain amount will also be given to the Augustinian missions in Peru, which work with the same self-help principle. The Villanova Committee for the Homeless, which has been collecting food and clothing, will give its proceeds to the needy in inner-city Philadelphia.

The planning stages of Hunger Awareness Week started in early September. Since then, Sminkey, along with assistant chairperson Ann Grasso and other committee members, has been working on all aspects of the program. The first general meeting did not elicit a very strong response; however, they did recruit more people after speaking about the project at the University Sunday masses. Faculty members were also asked to support the week by informing their classes, lecturing on related hunger issues, and participating in the events themselves.

Sminkey believes one of the strongest aspects of the program is the seminars. He urged students to attend any that they could, especially the Peace and Justice one last night, given by Robert Hodernv.

Who's Who Announced

The Rev. Lawrence Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for academic affairs, and Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for student life, have announced the names of the students who have been selected for inclusion in Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges for 1983-84.

Those named are: Rita S. Adam (A&S); Paula M. Aigner (A&S); Thomas J. Belmont (A&S); Mary Beth Bogan (A&S); Jeanne A. Bohmert (C&F); Marisa J. Bolinski (A&S); John C. Bramley (EGR.); Anne B. Breslin (A&S); William M. Brown (EGR); Paul A. Campanelli (C&F); Patrick J. Canavan (A&S); Daniel B. Carroll (EGR); Marianne Clark (A&S); Lorrainne S. Cole (C&F); Patrick D. Connell (A&S); Nicholas P. Corrado (A&S); Carolyn J. Crawford (A&S); Jeanne M. Cribben (C&F); Marie Crossan (A&S).

Also, Carolyn B. DiGiovanni (A&S); Julie Ann Dougherty (A&S); Mary L. Duff (A&S); Regina M. Dunleavy (NUR); Thomas P. Dunn (C&F); Frank J. Falco (EGR); Sue Ellen Golden (A&S); Michael J. Gormley (A&S); David Guro (EGR); Michael J. Healey (A&S); Richard Horrow (C&F); Janet L. Jones (C&F); Robert G. Kelly (C&F); Kathleen Kirk (C&F); Joseph G. Korikowski (EGR); Edward J. Lis (A&S).

Additionally, Barbara Ann Mayer (NUR); Thomas W. Monaco (C&F); Karen Montrella (NUR); Catherine A. Murphy (A&S); Thomas Murphy (C&F); Christine M. Obeta (A&S); Robert J. O'Connor (C&F); Nancy Ann Phillips (A&S); John J. Poserina, III (EGR); Mary Alice Rice (NUR); Lucille A Riegl (C&F); Lauren E. Roache (A&S); Lucia A. Rosica (C&F); David B. Schneider (EGR); Catherine A. Sheils (A&S); Christine Shionos (A&S); Wendy A Stottmeister (NUR); Michael E. Tacelosky (EGR); Michele M. Testen (C&F); Jane M. Tirrell (C&F).

Editors Travel to Washington, D.C.

A contingent of Villanovan editors will travel to Washington, D.C., this weekend to attend the annual "Investigative Reporting and Editors Conference" sponsored by NBC television.

Accompanied by June Lytel, newspaper advisor, the group of eight editors will attend seminars given by the top journalists and editors in the country. Seminar topics include "Where to Find Information;" "Investigative Reporting with Sight and Sound;" "Investigating Local Governments;" "Libel, Sources, Open Records . . . What You Need to Know;" and "How Far To Go in the Name of Public Good."

Jack Anderson will be the guest speaker at the noon luncheon.

Nine Pulitizer Prize winners will be in attendance to conduct the seminars. Newspapers represented will include The Philadelphia Inquirer, The Washington Post, The New York Times, The L.A. Times, and USA Today. Additionally, several television journalists, a libel lawyer and a syndicated columnist will be in attendance.

NROTC Women Train With Men

By CHARLENE PARDOE

Most N R O T C s (Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corp's) have more men than women. In Villanova's N.R.O.T.C., however, there are significantly less women. In fact, there are only 12 compared with 263 men.

But this does not mean they are treated differently. According to the three senior women in the program, both are treated similarly and must go through the same requirements.

During their first two years, anyone in N R O T C is noncommittal. There is no penalty if they decide not to stay. But if they sign a contract at the beginning of their junior year, they must stay until they graduate, and then serve for four years after graduation, said Rita Adam, a senior majoring in science with a concentration in biochemistry.

This applies to men, also. With training there are only slight differences. "In physical fitness training, which everyone is tested on once a semester, the women do flexed arm-hang whereas the men do pull-ups" said Julie Dougherty, a senior majoring in math with a concentration in computer science. "In running, the women run two miles while the men run three," she added.

But the academic and summer cruise requirements for both are the same, Dougherty said. They are required to take 19 Naval Science credits plus calculus and physics. Up until last year, one history and one political science was required, too. Another requirement is drill practice each Tuesday from 3 to 5 p.m. on Mendel field. But "when it becomes too cold, drill practice is stopped and lectures are held inside," noted Wendy Haniman, a senior majoring in psychology.

If they join the N.R.O.T.C in their freshman year, they must travel on three cruises over the summer, each of which could last from four to six weeks. The difference is in what ships the women are allowed on, noted Haniman. "Although we have to learn about them in class, we cannot go on combatant ships," she noted. "They don't want women on combatants. It is illegal by an act of Congress," she added.

"They don't want women on combatants. It is illegal by an act of Congress," she added.

Last year, however, they let women on them for training purposes. Adam was assigned to Cuba on such a ship.

"We were outnumbered," she said. "On the cruise there were two girls with 430 men."

"The Navy is geared toward men," she noted. "There are not as many career opportunities for women to advance."

After graduation, there are a limited number of ships women can go on, Dougherty noted. "Women are assigned to either auxiliary ships or submarine tenders. Some of these are assigned in different parts of the world."

There are benefits, however. "It is definitely a good experience," noted Dougherty. "This summer I high-lined (went on a rope) from one ship to another," said Dougherty. "We have also been through fire fighting — such as oil, electrical and chemical fires — simulated attack training and flood training. You don't have to go through job interviews either," she noted.

Tracing Ireland's Authors

By SUE FRENCH

A nine day trip to Ireland will be the focal point of an Irish literature course to be taught next semester by Dr. James J. Murphy.

Dr. James Murphy.

"For a very small country, some of the greatest writers in the English language have been Irishmen who have taken an inherited language and become masters at it," Murphy commented. He noted that lesser known Irish writers wrote in the Irish language before the time of Christ.

"Travel Study in Ireland — Imagination and the Sense of Place" (Eng. 2460) will take students through the countryside of William Butler Yeats, John Millington Synge, James Joyce and other major Irish writers. The natural beauty of the land, the folk legends, the history and the politics all have contributed to the inspiration of Irish writers, Murphy explained.

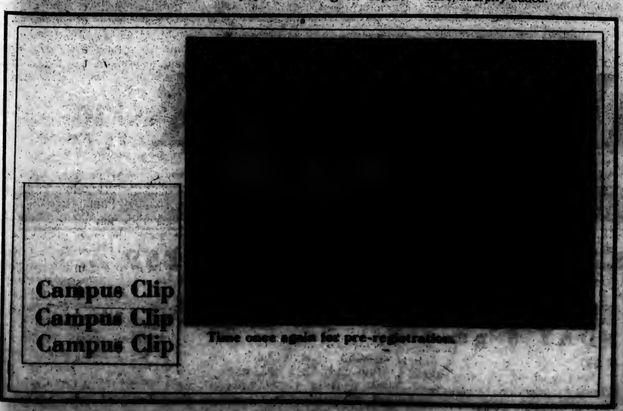
"The importance of language to the Irish is great. Especially when you consider that their greatest work of art is not a colosseum or a temple but the Book of Kells . . . the centerpiece of Irish art is a book," Murphy emphasized. The Book of Kells is an 8th century illumination of the New Testament.

Those interested in signing up for the course may contact Dr. Murphy in the English department. The cost is $779, airfare, hotel, bus tours and one meal a day included. Anyone taking the course must take the trip, Murphy said. A series of lectures will be given before the trip to orient students with Irish literature; readings are also required.

"If a student can afford it, it's a great opportunity to combine the world of the classroom with the world of literary origin," Murphy said.

The trip begins in Tralee, with overnight stops in Galway, Sligo, and Dublin. "We concentrate on the west of Ireland — County Kerry, Galway, County Sligo to get more of a sense of the rural traditions of the country, then we go on to Dublin," Murphy said. Yates and Synge lived in this area, Murphy explained, and local people and tradition are interspersed throughout their writings.

The class is limited to thirty students, Murphy said. A $100 deposit is required by Christmas. Anyone not taking the course for credit may take the trip for pleasure, Murphy added.



Better Dead Than "Go Big Red"

Editors' note: The following article was written by one of the more demented members of the Villanova community. It was not intended to be insulting or denigrating although many people may find it to be so. This is purely a satire and is not intended to be an attempt at objective journalism.

By MICHAEL HEALEY

Did you ever wonder why a certain bus line has a Greyhound splashed across the side of all its coaches? Well, about a fortnight ago, I found the answer — travelling by bus is for the dogs.

I'll make no bones about it, I'll pull no punches; travelling by bus is the lowest form of transportation available to humankind. My repugnance for this mode of transport is consummate, my abhorrence absolute.

Now, before I am deluged with threatening letters from the respective chairmen of the Greyhound and Trailways (the company at which this verbal scathing will be directed) Bus Lines, and slapped with potentially debilitating slander suits, perhaps I should focus my vituperation not on the industry per se, but on those associated with it. And in the warped way I see it, this includes only two groups: the travellers themselves, and that special kind of vermin that at least ostensibly reside in bus terminals, a class I will categorize in Linnaean spirit as depot creepos.

What, you may wonder, makes me so qualified to disparage Trailways in particular, and the busing industry in general? Well, my random observations of the busing business were gleaned from a recent sojourn from Philadelphia to South Bend, IN, a voyage spanning roughly 900 miles and consuming virtually 17 hours of my precious time, as well as most of my sanity. Believe me, then, when I submit to you that those 17 painfully prolonged hours were an utter facsimile of earthly hell.

I boarded my South Bend-bound bus at 12:30 on a dank, chilly Friday morning from the Philadelphia Trailways terminal. As fortune would have it, when I entered, the bus was already packed with poor schmucks like myself and I was forced to sit in the extreme rear of the bus, smack next to the restroom (not exactly sleep-conducive).

Trailways' version of a restroom; incidentally, was nothing more than a glorified litter box, replete with that Thursday's edition of the Daily News spread out on the floor.

The slob I had to sit next to was a poor excuse for a human being. His hair was a greasy, matted mess that deserved a good raking and his odor was unbearable. (My attention to detail far superseded this man's merit.) Not being in an engaging mood, I stymied his attempts at conversation by feigning that I was asleep.

Our author displaying his displeasure of his 17-hour journey and his sentiments of Trailways Bus Lines.

In that position, there were only so many preventative measures that I could take to preserve my sanity. I closed my eyes so I wouldn't have to look at the man. I curled up in my seat so, God forbid, I wouldn't have to touch him. I cranked my Walkman so I wouldn't be subjected to his banal bids at conversing.

But just as there is no defense against speed in the game of football, in an extremely finite space, there's no "D" versus the stink of an unbathed human being. By Harrisburg, I was engulfed in its pervasive effects. The malodorous smell's acridity caused my eyes to tear. And just for a coup de grace, the restroom's toilet became backed up long about Pittsburgh. Cleveland was never so beautiful as that morning when I bounded off the infernal bus for a half-hour stop-over.

Cartoon Exhibit to Open

For many years, original animation cel paintings of famous characters like Bugs Bunny, Daffy Duck, Wile E. Coyote and Mickey Mouse have been avidly collected and lovingly displayed by cartoon fans. Today, those fans are more willing than ever to put their money where their mouse is.

If you are interested in what their excitement is all about, you can find out at a new Exhibit/Sale of animation art to be held at Villanova on November 28 and 29 from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. in the North Lounge, Dougherty Hall. Part of the proceeds will go to the Villanova Union, the sponsor. The public is invited.

Animation cel paintings, called "cels," are the paintings actually filmed in making animated cartoons. Each character is painted by hand on a clear sheet of acetate, usually 11 x14 or larger. The cel is then placed against a background painting and photographed, one frame at a time, to create the illusion of the cartoon character in motion. Cels are the culmination of the artistic process — the final image that is photographed by the motion picture camera.

The current exhibit was authenticated by Gallery Lainzberg of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, specialists in original animation art work. A representative of Gallery Lainizberg will be on hand to answer questions.

The Exhibit/Sale will feature an exceptionally broad spectrum of animation art. Included will be such popular characters as Bugs Bunny, Daffy Duck, Wile E Coyote and the Roadrunner, Yosemite Sam, Tweety and Sylvester, to name a few. Some of these paintings have been signed by Academy Award-winning animators, Chuck Jones and Friz Freleng.

The Exhibit gathers together art work from many Disney animated films including "The Fox and the Hound," "Jungle Book," and the recently-released "Winnie the Pooh" film featuring Winnie, Tigger, Piglet and Rabbit.

There will also be a fine selection of art work from "The Secret of NIMH," "Watership Down," "Heavy Metal," "Gnomes," plus art work from Bil Keane's "Family Circus" animated TV Specials featuring Dolly, Billy, Jeffy, and P.J.

Of special interest to collectors will be original pencil animation drawings from Max Fleischer Studios films of the 1930's and 1940's. In addition, there are a number of vintage Disney animation drawings from that era, including Donald Duck and Mickey Mouse.

Interest in original animation art as a collectible has been frequently noticed by the press. A major article on collecting animation art appeared in the L.A. Times (6/29/82). It pointed out that "... within the last several years, animation art has become recognized as a true collectible — and a rapidly appreciating one."

One reason for the appreciation is the growing public recognition of the cultural importance of animation art. According to Decor Magazine (12/82) in a cover story on the subject, "Cartoon collecting is a rediscovery and an awakening of cartoon art's place in American culture. It is a native American art form, like jazz."

A second reason is rarity. The L.A. Times explains, that "...because drawings and cels were carelessly discarded or destroyed for decades, animation art is relatively rare."

Gallery Lainzberg Director Edith Rudman observes that while many animation cels have enjoyed substantial appreciation in recent years, much of the art work is still popularly priced. "Our Exhibition offers a large selection of original animation art work in the $25 to $75 price range," she noted.

In addition to the growing number of private collectors, institutions have accumulated impressive collections of animation art for public display and study. Important collections can be found at N.Y.'s Metropolitan Museum of Art and the Museum of Modern Art. Special exhibits were recently held at the Library of Congress, New York's Whitney Museum and the Montreal Museum of Art. Many colleges and universities including Princeton, Vassar, Syracuse, and Johns Hopkins have begun to build cel collections.

Campus Ministry PERSPECTIVES

In considering the American holiday of Thanksgiving, I am always a little puzzled. If Thanksgiving means to "give-thanks," I often wonder just who we are giving thanks to, and what we are giving thanks for. I find modern Americans often not having anyone to be thankful to but themselves. As if the comforts of the modern American day and even life itself were somehow owed to them. Along with this I see little that they are thankful for. Frustrated instead of satisfied by our feverish consumerism. Insecure in the knowledge of the power of our "security" forces. Cynical at the corruption they see in many American lives and institutions. While never admitting corruption within themselves.

What is helpful to me is to compare our modern day American with these early Americans who gave thanks. It is most surprising to recognize people giving thanks who seemed to have so many reasons not to. They gave thanks for life in the midst of a life much more precarious than our own. Hunger, disease and violence were realities not far from that First Thanksgiving table. There were strangers present who they understood little and probably feared much. It is along with them that they gave thanks.

They celebrated the bountifulness of nature while well aware of its deadly power. Yet in the midst of all this they gave thanks. Thanks to a God even though their very faith in Him caused much persecution and suffering. They still gave Him thanks! Somehow aware that all was gift, and they had someone to thank for it. It seems that the power and freedom of giving thanks makes all the

PARIS AND THE LOIRE VALLEY

France Through The Ages

A team-taught three credit course offered by Profs. Cummings (History) and Mongeau (Modern Languages), France Through the Ages will feature a trip to Paris and the Loire Valley during mid-semester break. The course will integrate what is studied in class with what is to be seen in France.

Topics selected for class discussion will range from Medieval and Renaissance France to contemporary period. Dr. Cummings will concentrate on connecting the history of France with what will be seen during the visit there, while Prof. Mongeau will emphasize the language and culture. The sites to be visited will be examined as expressions of the life of the French people through the ages: Montmartre, Versailles, Notre Dame, Chartres, the Louvre, the boulevards, cafes, and subways of Paris, the chateaux of the Loire, etc.

The cost will be approximately $850.00 (New York to Paris) plus some meals. Those interested should contact by mid-November Dr. Cummings (Vasey 104) or Dr. Mongeau (St. Thomas 212), both of whom will accompany the students on the tour. Students may sign up for the tour without taking the course. Enrollment is limited. Faculty and friends are invited to participate.

Although shopping by telephone is quick and easy, consumers are not protected by the FTC mail order rule which covers all purchases made by mail. This rule requires companies to ship your order within the time promised in the advertisement, and if no time period is specified, it must be shipped within 30 days of the date that they received the order. If there is a shipment delay, you must be sent an "option notice" where you have the option of consenting to the delay or cancelling the order and receiving a refund. If you have a problem or would like a free brochure regarding this write: FTC, 6th and Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C., 20580.

You may be able to get a discount from a store or merchant by paying with cash. Merchants have to pay a fee to the credit card companies for purchases made on their cards. If you pay with cash the merchant doesn't have to pay the fee, and you benefit from a lower price and don't have to face bills at the end of the month.

The debate over the future of the product liability law is now on Capitol Hill. The key controversy in the legislation revolves around the changes it imposes on the law of product design and warning. These are the lawsuits in which injured victims assert that a product was either designed in a way making it unreasonably dangerous or that they failed to contain a warning or instruction to remove that danger. Currently the law concentrates only on whether the manufacturers product design, or their failure to warn, produced a dangerous defect. The proponents of the Kasten Bill (product liability) want to shift the issue to the manufacturers conduct. The bill would insulate manufacturers from liability unless plaintiffs proved negligence. Thus, wrongful conduct becomes the touchstone of liability rather than dangerous conduct.

You have the right to request the file of your credit ratings. Also, if an application is denied, you can obtain this information for free by contacting the Consumer Reporting Agency. But what if a credit card has been lost or stolen? . . . report the loss immediately to card issuers. The most you will have to pay for unauthorized charges prior to notification is $50 on each card even if someone runs up several hundred dollars worth of charges.

A "cooling off period" rule requires door-to-door salespersons who sell goods costing $25 or more to give buyers information telling of their rights to cancel within three business days and to give buyers a full downpayment refund upon cancellation. Sellers must give buyers a complete receipt or contract copy along with cancellation rights information. This rule allows consumers time to think about the purchases, to comparison shop, and to check accuracy of all sales promises.

Commuting Crazes

By CATHERINE GROODY

One of the unique characteristics of Villanova is the art of Main Line commuting. Although it is incomparable to commuting to Philadelphia, approximately 50 percent of Villanova students travel here every morning.

Some may take the Norristown Speedline while others rely on the Paoli Local for their means of transportation. Of course, there are athletes who ride bicycles or faithfully walk to campus. But most seem to prefer driving, whether it be a '69 Mustang or '84 Camaro; the convenience of having a car in college seems to make the art of commuting a little easier.

Commuting for most Villanova students consists of a fifteen minute, five mile drive down Montgomery or Lancaster Avenue. Monotonous as it may seem, with an adequate car stereo and a 12-ounce cup of 7-Eleven coffee, in a matter of minutes, you filter into Villanova's main parking lot along with everyone else.

This year, the parking lot has gone under several changes, along with the color-coded parking slots and new tar pavement, there's a parking attendant who stands at the entrance to greet you. His purpose lies deeper than a warm gesture or friendly hello. Without him, those who have not yet purchased the invaluable $35 sticker would have been able to use the main lot. Now, they're usually found making spaces out of Bartley field or using the yellow-lined, spots for a four-door oldsmobile.

What about the weather? Have you ever noticed that the dark, rainy days seem to become a legitimate excuse for arriving to Death and Dying at 8:40 when the class begins at 8:30 a.m. But that's ok because chances are, the professor will ignore your entrance and continue his lecture even though all eyes are on you.

In the early morning, once you've made a parking spot, you can rest assured that the Buick Regal which Dad has so willingly lent you (while Mom takes the bus to work) will be safe throughout the day, except for the recurring dents that develop from swinging doors in close spots.

Early commuters that fight the morning rush are usually the one's found wondering aimlessly around the parking lot in search of where they last placed their blue Toyota.

All in all, commuting to Villanova is in itself all part of the education process. After a brief course in popular mechanics and the art of running yellow lights, when traveling by car, you'll discover there's a lot more to commuting than just arriving at your destination.

No sooner had I entered scenic Cleveland's terminal when I was accosted by one of the aforementioned infamous depot creepos. "Got some good smoke, man," said the honest working dude, showing me his wares. "No thanks, man," I replied, condescending to his primitive grammatical style of guttural grunts and groans. I hastened my way back to the refuge of the bus, whereupon I transferred myself and my belongings to an open seat towards the front.

I must admit that I was more than slightly startled when a woman (at least I thought she was a woman) plopped herself in the seat next to mine. She was completely shrouded in black, I guess because of her religion. To my plebian eyes, however, it appeared that she was garbed in an L.L. Bean mountain pup tent, equipped with a screened panel so she could see out, or I supposed, so mosquitoes couldn't get in.

It would be an understatement to say that she was merely a big woman. I conservatively estimated her heft to be in the 600-pound range. I could only assume that she had more chins than a Chinese phonebook. I fervently prayed that she did not possess a bomb beneath her tarp-dress and that she was not a religious zealot terrorist.

Glancing around, I spotted a sign at the front of the bus which read "Liquid intoxicants of any kind prohibited." Ignoring it wholeheartedly, I indulged in a libation, several libations actually, and before I knew it, I was in a sanity-saving beer-induced slumber.

When I awoke it was seven o'clock Friday evening, and the bus was just pulling into South Bend's Trailways terminal. I staggered out and was greeted by my friend, a student at Notre Dame. I am certain that I looked much like the wrath of God, and the only way I was able to be revived was an hour and a half shower and an intravenous feeding of Michelob.

My senses sharpened, I reflected on my 17-hour journey. Never again, I vowed, would I take the bus, if at all humanly possible. And if you have a modicum of sensibility, neither would you. A word to the wise should be sufficient.

I like taking the bus, but then again I enjoy the dry-heaves. I relish watching paint dry. So let the traveller beware: go by dromedary camel, go by hot air balloon, or go by the stagecoach, but above all, bag the bus!

Editors' Note: Our author bagged the bus on his return trip and instead, skateboarded back to Philadelphia.

Clark Changes Pace in 'Amityville'

By DEAN C. BALSAMINI

Candy Clark, whose credits include "The Man Who Fell To Earth" and "American Graffiti" will soon be starring in "Amityville 3-D," the third film about the supposed haunted house in New York. Miss Clark recently took time out to talk to the Villanovan about her new film, and life in general.

Villanovan: What does your character in the movie do?

Clark: "I play this photographer who works with Tony Roberts, who plays a writer. We're doing this expose for a magazine. We're investigating some strange goings on in this house."

Villanovan: Have you any experience in photography?

Clark: "My photographic work was limited to snapshots. I had never even been in a darkroom before this film, so I took some lessons. They handed me an expensive 35mm camera with a flash and said to go to work."

Villanovan: How did you become involved with "Amityville 3-D?"

Clark: "I like 3-D. I've seen a few films done this way and I enjoyed them. Plus, I wanted to do horror movies. What's ironic is that originally another actress had the part, but backed out."

Villanovan: Do you have any particular horror movie favorites?

Clark: "The Exorcist is definitely my favorite; I loved it. I like Hitchcock's 'The Birds' and also read a lot of Stephen King; he's great."

Villanovan: Did anything strange happen on the set while filming the movie?

Clark: "No, not really. Although, to tell the truth, I wish something did. It probably would help the movie."

Villanovan: How does 'Amityville 3-D' tie in with the two previous films?

Clark: "It doesn't. In fact, I really don't know too much background about the house other than reading the book. The film wasn't even shot on location this time but rather on a soundstage in Mexico. That was a lot of fun because I had never been to Mexico before, plus I love to travel."

A scene from Clark's new film "Amityville — 3D."

Villanovan: Is the making of a 3-D movie take much more preparation and work than a conventional film?

Clark: "No, not at all. It's funny that you ask that because I thought there would be. I had expected all these technical gadgets, but there wasn't any. The only differenc you have is that instead of one lens on the camera, there is two."

Villanovan: You were originally a model. How did you get into acting?

Clark: "I was a model, but I tried out for a few bit parts and they liked what they saw; and here I am."

Villanovan: Did you enjoy working with David Bowie ("The Man Who Fell to Earth")?

Clark: "Yes, I enjoyed working with him immensely. He is a real professional and quite intelligent. He has a certain genius quality about him. On the set we would help each other out and run our lines back and forth past one another; David's great."

Villanovan: Would you like to venture other areas of entertainment?

Clark: "I would love to do a television series; I have already done several TV movies. This is really a goal; I want to be able to get into a routine and work steady. I would really like to get up in the morning and go to the same place each day."

Villanovan: You were nominated for an Academy Award, weren't you?

Clark: "Yes, I was. It was for 'American Grafitti,' which was a film that I had a thoroughly enjoyable time doing. I liked the fact that the film was shot at night, because it makes you feel less vulneble in front of all the cameras."

Villanovan: What do you do in your spare time?

Candy Clark

Clark: "I go to the gym and work out; I also love to fish and garden. I am also connected with a modeling group in Dallas that does corporate work. But a typical day of mind would probably consist of going to the gym, shopping, cooking dinner and then reading a book before going to sleep. Exciting, isn't it?"

Pryor Returns to Form

By FRANK DUNNE

The fact that Richard Pryor is one of the most gifted comedians of the past decade is hard to dispute. Although at times considered shocking and controversial, Pryor always displayed a relentless effort to amuse and entertain his audiences. Having appeared in several previous film projects, it is only just recently that he has attempted stand-up comedy on film. After a series of personal tragedies including broken marriages, drug addiction, drinking and a near-fatal car accident, Richard Pryor returns to the screen in his third and latest concert film, "Here And Now."

The tone of "Here And Now" differs dramatically from that of its two predecessors. Pryor tries to maintain the high level of comical material in his routine, only this time adding an occasional serious overtone. Because of his several close brushes with death, Pryor vows that he is filled with a rejuvenated spirit and attempts to reflect that into his routine. His philosophical approach to comedy, however, is not terribly successful, but only makes the audience all the more sympathetic towards Pryor's past misfortunes.

The opening of the film is somewhat introspective allowing us to see Richard Pryor the entertainer, the director and the person. Pryor (cleverly disguised in two-tone sunglasses), piles out of his chauffered limousine with his usual entourage of bodyguards and is greeted by hundreds of screaming fans. A series of short interviews with Pryor and praises sung by commentaries by several members of the audience and the concert is finally under way.

In terms of his material, Pryor is as outrageous as ever. Devout Pryor fans will thrive on his newly refined, raunchy humor. He discusses the same old topics of sex, drugs and race, only this time [illegible] a new light on things. We've all heard him talk about [illegible] before, but the [illegible] seems to improve each time. One humorous sequence in the film consists of a hilarious routine about being drunk (nothing new really). He describes the feeling of being pulled over by a police officer when completely inebriated: "your mind might want to say one thing to the officer, but your mouth wants to say another."

In previous concert films, Pryor has established an intimate rapport with his audience and this film is certainly no exception. Pryor criticizes unsuspecting members of the audience for coming in late and "ever so politely" asks them to quickly find a seat.

Pryor starring in "Bustin' Loose."

One audience member is bold enough to approach Pryor with a tiny crab, with which Pryor playfully tosses. He places the small creature on his stool and jokingly interviews the tiny crab, sending the audience into hysterics.

The film is quite entertaining but not without its flaws. In one segment, Pryor goes into a five minute portrayal of a heroin addict. The topic is not altogether a funny matter in the first place, but Pryor insists on showing us what it's like. Despite attempting to relate his personal experiences with drugs on a humorous note, Pryor slips away from the audience as he occasionally does throughout the film.

The humor is primarily aimed towards a predominantly young, Black audience. Although part of the Pryor tradition, some people may find his material somewhat distasteful. I'm not for one minute suggesting that "Here and Now" offers something for everybody, like "Bambi In The Wilderness." If Pryor's foul-mouthed wit appeals to you, then "Here and Now" is a smashing success. Unfortunately, it might not agree with those who are not ardent Pryor admirers.

"Here and Now" is the best directed of his concert films as a result of Pryor's careful planning. The lighting is considerably more illuminating, the renowned Bourbon Street settings adds an appropriate touch and there are more camera angles.

But it's not the directing that makes the film work. It's a combination of outrageous humor and the characteristic Pryor sophistication. Given any time and any situation, Pryor is the perfect anecdote for the serious social concerns of our day. After all this, one thing is for certain: the next best thing to live Richard Pryor is here and now.

The Rolling Stones Are Not Over The Hill

By JOSEPH SCHMIDT

The Rolling Stones are a group of musicians forever changing musical directions. Although their musical style has changed over the last 20 years, they still continue to produce hard-driving rock 'n' roll music.

The late 1970s and early 1980s precipitated a new era for the Stone's music. The "Some Girls" album contained typically blues lyrics that only enhanced the Stones' image from the 1960s as "The Bad Boys of Rock 'n' Roll." "Tattoo You" is another collection of characteristic commotions recorded during this period.

It is with this in mind that the new Stones album, "Undercover," is released. An album which is perhaps the best Stones release since "Some Girls." "Undercover" is a work involving highly suggestive songs that only add to their "tough" reputation.

The current hit from the album "Undercover (of the Night)" is a hurried song, quite similar to music; the first Stones album to do so since the late 1960s. "She Was Hot" probes rockabilly with Richard's first-rate guitar solo during the transition. "Feel on Baby," with its short guitar licks and Jagger's haunting vocals is a replica of reggae influence. "Too Much Blood" explores disco and is the only song on the album whose lyrics are senseless and repetitive. There is an access of jazz influence in "Pretty Beat Up," a frantic horn section chases up the background and makes for a well-rounded, thoughtful tune.

"Undercover" is many different breeds of music in one package. Its suggestive choices may drive many listeners away, but for the faithful rock 'n' roll fan, this is what you've been waiting for.

On Nov. 20, the Villanova Cultural Film Series will present a discussion entitled "The Making of Sophie's Choice" following the 7 p.m. showing of the film. Speaking at the discussion will be William Gerrity, noted film maker and associate producer for "Sophie's Choice," and a Villanova graduate.

William Gerrity has had a long and distinguished career in the film and television industry. He has worked on such films as "Klute," "Starting Over," and "Trading Places," with such noted directors as Herbert Ross, William Friedkin and Alan Pakula. Gerrity has recently received the coveted Frank Capra Award for his distinguished achievements in the film industry.

"Sophie's Choice" will be shown on Nov. 19 at 7 p.m. and Nov. 20 at 3:30 p.m. and 7 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema on the Villanova campus. Admission for the film is $1.50 for students and $3 for adults.

The discussion will immediately follow the film. For more information call (215) 645-7262.

Pretty Lady on 42nd Street

[redacted] emotions and [redacted] the true spirit of putting together a Broadway show; back in the days when the seats only cost $3.50.

Peggy comes to New York to break into show business and impresses the other chorus girls and their "mom," Maggie Jones with her [redacted] beautiful

[redacted]

Throughout the show, [redacted] ple in the production experience failure, disappointment, joy and success. On its first run in Philadelphia "Pretty Lady's" cast survives a tragedy that almost stops the show. (But, I don't want to let the cat out of the bag.)

Basically, "42nd Street" is a celebration of song and dance, but most of all, it is fun. The whole cast is syncopated and moves with incredible agility and energy throughout all of the numbers. An admirable job is done by choreographer Gower Champion and director Lucia Victor.

The most memorable dance is the "42nd Street" dance. The whole ensemble is on stage and Billy and Peggy lead them in an incredible series of moves. The stage is alive with activity and the costumes are fascinating as there are "discrete" women of the '80s, prom ladies of the '50s, cops and robbers, gangsters and servicemen frolicing about the stage. This dance exhibits the talent that all the performers really possess.

A fabulous and commendable performance is credited to Bibi Osterwald as Maggie Jones, the songwriter. She is the "mom" for the chorus girls, Adrian Marsh's side-kick and the one who holds [redacted] she shows together. Osterwald does this in the performance by both shows as she chirps advice to the slave Peggy, "Musicians are kept in the pit for a reason." She sings us a song very out of tune but somehow all the more charming, and dances a step that, although her body isn't young and supple like the other's, it has a unique flair to it. She is witty and charming, honest and blunt and consequently Osterwald manages to steal the show.

This is not to belie the other characters, as all turned in fine performances. Jim Walton as Billy Lawlor is superb. He has a great voice and is a very talented dancer. He sweeps Peggy Sawyer,

"Basically, "42nd Street" is a celebration of song and dance, but most of all, it is fun."

played by Claire Leach, off her feet, literally and figuratively. Leach does a nice job of portraying Peggy's naivete and bewilderment, and she depicts the change from innocent new-comer to experienced star quite realistically. She is particularly poignant when she asks, "Am I really a star, Billy?"

"42nd Street" leaves the audience with a feeling of energy and exhilaration. The story line is rather predictable, but that is not the real reason to go to the show. The dancing and singing in "42nd Street" will not disappoint you. It is an enjoyable show for people of all ages.

Jo Boxer's Knockout Album

By STEPHEN FALLON

"Like Gangbusters," the American debut of the London-based JoBoxers, is a vibrant album which provides a breath of fresh air to a rapidly stagnating music scene.

JoBoxers pack a funky punch, and the album has an infectious beat which defies the listener not to get caught up in the positive tempo.

The album's finest moment is a sprightly melody, "Just Got Lucky." The most polished of the album's ten cuts, the song is receiving modest FM airplay and a humorous video is running regularly on MTV. "Just Got Lucky" captures the cocky swagger of a man in love and JoBoxers translate that euphoria to vinyl with astounding emotional accuracy.

Who has not felt, at least temporarily, the joyful optimism that Dig Wayne feels when he sings: "I feel a quiver everytime we kiss, the sky's the limit with a love like this . . ."

The album's first cut, "Boxerbeat," is JoBoxer's declaration of musical style, a style which could best be described as rock 'n' soul. Dave Collard's piano is the pervading sound on the album. Collard flies over the keys, giving each cut the danceable sound of raucous barroom swing music. Collard's piano is backed up with a very tight rhythm section framed by Sean McLusky's drums and Chris Bostock on bass. The prominent bass line and quick, neat drums provide a sound reminiscent of Motown. Within this outline, each song is filled in by the soulful vocals of Dig Wayne.

Robert Marche on guitar is the final member of the quintet.

The musical roots of JoBoxers include pop-rock and soul, but go deeper to r&b and jazz. The songs have an "oldies" flavor but unlike the hackneyed rockabilly craze, JoBoxers is fresh and avoids being anachronistic. JoBoxers borrows from the past but doesn't tediously repeat it.

Cockiness is the image the JoBoxers strike and the album cover depicts the five musicians in a pose of cruel indifference. But the music is anything but indifferent. "Not My Night," "Fully Booked" and "She's Got Sex" are songs that involve the listener in music that is just plain fun. The sound is clean, the beat strong, and the appeal universal.

"Like Gangbusters" is a fine introduction of a promising group, and with it, England's JoBoxers score a definite knockout.

Stock Book Pays Tribute to Oscar and Felix

By BILL SANTOS

"On Nov. 13, Felix Unger was asked to remove himself from his place of residence. That request came from his wife. Deep down he knew she was right. But he also knew that someday he would return to her. With nowhere else to go, he appeared at the home of his friend, Oscar Madison. Sometime earlier, Madison's wife had thrown him out, requesting that he never return. Can two divorced men share an apartment without driving each other crazy? Da da da da da . . ."

Odd Couple Mania is a book containing "all you ever wanted to know about Felix and Oscar – and one of the great TV shows of all time." Author Rip Stock has compiled an all-encompassing look at the sitcom that became a legacy.

Stock has not forgotten anything about our beloved twosome. He starts off with a viewing of the play and movie, which leads into the main focus of the book, the television series. Interviews with the main characters and staff give us a background vital to the understanding of the program as a whole.

Stock then paints a portrait of the mis-matched pair, from child to adulthood, including such topics as profiles, the boys at work, the wives, remember when . . . , poker night, the girlfriends and The Odd Couple after hours. The chapters provide us with a foundation and a better understanding of our characters so that we can delve into the 114 episodes that Stock summarizes.

From the first episode on Sept. 24, 1970, to its final broadcast on July 4, 1975, we experience an intimate glimpse of the lives of Felix and Oscar that touched our hearts so many times in the past, and will continue to do so in the future. Stock then gives us his ten personal choices for ten top episodes (in no particular order).

A quiz, game and advanced trivia section follows with multiple choice, true-false, fill-ins, complete the quotes, advanced trivia and, of course, answers.

A listing of related "odd" material includes records, sources (with addresses) and spinoffs such as "The Oddball Couple," a cartoon version of our heroes starring Fleabag the Dog (a slob) and Spiffy, a perfectionist cat, and "The New Odd Couple," a Black version which was cancelled after one season.

Other sections throughout the book are A Visit to the Shrine, in which there are Stock journeys to Apartment 1102, 1049 Park Ave., New York City, "The Oscar Madison Fast Food Sampler" (including venison on an onion roll with mayo, and creamed chipped beef with raisins on a donut), and Felix's allergies: aspirin, cats, cologne, dust, flamingos, fog, mayonnaise, nature, olives, paint, perfume, raspberry soda, stuffed animals, sour cream and wool.

Stock has compiled a book that will enlighten you as much as the series has. Odd Couple Mania is a witty, in-depth, fan's-eye-view of the whole story of Felix and Oscar and everyone involved in this great show. So now if you want to know Oscar's shoe size or the color of Felix's sinus pills, you know where to look. And besides, "...now you have something to do in those bleak hours when there isn't an Odd Couple rerun on TV. Read and enjoy Odd Couple Mania."

Incidentally, the answers to the questions are 11D and blue.

Young Squad Faces Tough Slate

By JOE BAGLEY

Villanova basketball has been hit by a missile called the NBA draft. High scorer John Pinone, assist leader Stewart Granger and key reserve Mike Mulquin were all drafted within the first eight rounds last spring.

The loss of these players, combined with the great expectations that pre-season polls choired last year (Basketball Times picked Villanova number one in the country, Sports Illustrated number three), has led to a conservatism in the estimation of this year's team by the media and the conference itself.

The 1983 Big East Pre-Season Coaches Poll, for instance, picks the Wildcats third in the conference, and Basketball Magazine chooses them fourth behind Georgetown, Boston College and Pittsburgh. The general consensus appears to place Georgetown, which has last year's starting lineup back, in the nation's Final Four.

Villanova, in fact, faces stiff competition this year. Last season, Basketball Times rated the Cats' schedule as the eighth toughest in the nation, and this season's will be no easier. Big East Conference games will be typically heart stopping, the Big Five teams have all improved and nationally televised contests against Arkansas and Notre Dame will be pressure cookers.

"When you lose three players of this caliber you lose a great deal of leadership, and again, this is something we will have to get from our other players," Head Coach Rollie Massimino stated.

Among the players counted on to take up the slack, Massimino will look to returning starters Eddie Pinckney, Dwayne McClain and Harold Pressley.

Any preview of this season's squad has to begin with Pinckney. An All-American Honorable Mention last year and a member of the U.S. gold medal winning team at the Pan American Games, Pinckney is a leading candidate for the wire service All-American Teams this year. He led Villanova last season in rebounding (9.7 rpg), blocked shots (65), steals (45) and field goal accuracy (56.8%).

The Cats' third leading scorer in his sophomore year, Pinckney is exactly the experienced person needed to take over inside where Pinone left off.

"I have to be more of a leader," Pinckney commented. "I must play a more consistent role on the court."

"Ed Pinckney is obviously going to be an outstanding player for us this year . . . He has gotten stronger and has played a great deal this summer representing the United States in the World Games and the Pan American Games," Massimino said. "So he really should be able to play."

Playing at Pinckney's side along the baseline will be 6'6" Dwayne McClain, also in his junior year. Nova's leading returning scorer behind E-Z Ed, McClain averaged 10.6 points per game. He started slowly last year but finished well as he scored in double figures in 13 of the last 17 games.

"We rely on Dwayne for scoring to pick up our team against zone defenses," Massimino related.

Filling out the front court will be sophomore Harold Pressley. Generally criticized in his first year as a disappointment as a scoring threat, Pressley was steadily ignored for his superb defensive skills (143 rebounds, 22 steals) before his selection as Villanova's Outstanding Defensive Player.

Another junior, Gary McLain, returns to bolster the Cat attack After studying for two years under Granger, McLain is expected to play an even larger role in the back court. McLain, who played in all 32 games last year mainly as the key reserve guard, seldom loses the ball. In 643 minutes of play last season, he committed only 54 turnovers, or one every 11.9 minutes. He proved his ability to excel under pressure last year in Villanova's wins over Georgetown at the Palestra and at Chapel Hill versus North Carolina, where he scored 10 points and committed no turnovers against the powerful Tar Heels.

Senior Frank "Happy" Dobbs and sophomore Dwight Wilbur can also expect much playing time at guard. The 6'1" Wilbur started twice last year and averaged 2.8 ppg. Dobbs added the same and totaled 12 assists. Of the 6'4½" Dobbs, Massimino said that he "has played many, many roles and he's right now playing very,very well".

Two freshmen, 6'4" Harold Jensen and 6'7½" Connally Brown, are expected to contribute to Nova's performance this season.

Jensen follows on the tails of Pinone and Pressley as Villanova continues to drain the state of Connecticut of its best talent. Jensen was a Fourth Team Parade Magazine All-American and a two-time All-Stater.

According to the Eastern Basketball magazine, Jensen is "an exceptional passer who sees open men on the court. He plays defense and is an outstanding shooter".

Brown's forte, on the other hand, is speed. A Texas All-State second team member, he led his high school's regional finals team in scoring and rebounding, averaging 18 ppg and 12 rpg.

"Connally Brown, right now, is getting ready to learn the material a little bit better," Massimino said, "trying to act instead of just react. He's a very good athlete and it's going to take some time for him to adjust."

With all these players, Villanova hopes to reconstruct from the loss of the Pinone-Granger-Mulquin trio. A Pressley-Pinckney-McClain front line will be characterized by great speed and strong rebounding.

"Our one strength is our quickness," Massimino noted. "We're as quick as we've ever been."

McClain may find a home in the corner with a steady forward position, drilling his trademark jumpers over the crowd inside. Gary McLain has the experience to coordinate an offense as well as anyone. In the unlikely event that neither Dobbs nor Wilbur works out, Jensen may be able to step into the role of shooting guard.

Sophomore redwoods Wyatt Maker and Chuck Everson are sure to get more playing time this year. Their continued development will remove some of the pressure from the frontcourt troops.

The key to Villanova's season may very well be Harold Pressley. A drastic improvement in the forward's shooting, both field goal (36.5% last year) and free throw (45.6%) wise, could make Villanova a serious threat against the best of its opponents like Georgetown and Arkansas. A steady-scoring Pressley would allow the Cats to put a multi-dimensional speed machine on the court game after game.

One thing to remember: this is a transitional team that will more or less remain intact for next year. St. John's had one of these "Two-Season Reasons" last year when it won the Big East Post-Season Tournament, and Georgetown has one this year. If this season does turn into one long learning experience, remember to keep in mind how many points that experience will be transformed into next year with a senior/junior dominated team.

Coach Rollie Massimino.

Women Favored To Win Big East

By [illegible]

Villanova's women's basketball team begins the 1983-84 season as the pre-season favorite in Big East coaches to win the league.

But according to Head Coach Harry Perretta, "My philosophy has always been that you don't win games on paper. Only playing can determine your success."

The Wildcats enter the season with greater depth than they could boast of last year, especially at the guard and center spots, although "the young people at center need time, but we don't have the time to give them," Perretta said. "They have to improve very quickly."

Last season, Villanova posted a 14-15 record, the first sub-.500 season in Perretta's five-year career (102-38 overall). "I knew we were in danger of not being over .555, but when we had the injuries we were in trouble. We had more in one season than in my five years," claimed Perretta.

Perretta's Wildcat women face what is probably their toughest schedule ever, and according to assistant coach Andy McGovern, "We will be tested. We have a choice, to play a light schedule or get prepared for the Big East Tournament and play tough teams. Our ultimate goal is to reach the NCAA playoffs. We don't want the season to end in the Big East Tournament."

Big East Conference foes St. John's and Providence will be toughest on the Cats. Both made it to the NCAA tournament last year, and have the experience. Pittsburgh had a good recruiting year, "and you can't look past them," McGovern said. Boston College and Syracuse will also give Villanova a run for its money.

In 1982-83, Villanova compiled a 5-5 conference record, its first in Big East competition. "The league is more competitive this year," McGovern stated. "We're improving as the league's improving."

Also on the '83-84 schedule are national powerhouses such as Mississippi, Penn State, Rutgers and Cheyney State.

Perretta will seek immediate contributions from one of his freshman recruits, Shelley Pennefather. One of the most sought after women players in the nation last year, Pennefather's credentials include first team Parade, Street and Smith's and USA Today All America honors as a forward. This season, the Big East coaches chose her pre-season Rookie of the Year and a member of the all-rookie team.

"Shelley can come in and give us strength in the front court with her rebounding and scoring," Perretta added. McGovern added, "I think Shelley has played well in practice. At this point she has earned a shot at starting."

Among the other probable members of the starting line-up, Perretta can boast of a potential All-America in fourth-year guard Nancy Bernhardt, unanimous selection by the Big East coaches to the pre-season All-Conference

Coach Harry Perretta.

"We're looking for a year from Nancy like her sophomore year, when she scored 16.5 points per game and dished out 141 assists," Perretta said. Bernhardt's sophomore year was the Cat's best ever, a mark that was 23-4 and got to the final four of the now-defunct AIAW, where they came in third, losing to eventual national champ Rutgers.

Last year, Bernhardt led the Cats with 18.4 points per game, but her assist total dropped to 92, although she still managed to lead the club in that category. "She was a big reason we went to the final four that year," said Perretta.

Completing the back court is senior Andrea Burton, who dished off 90 assists last season and hit 79.4 percent of her free throws. "We're looking for what she always does, running the offense," Perretta noted. "You can't score if you don't get the ball upcourt."

Joining Pennefather in the front court will most likely be sophomore Katrina Messenger. "She'll have a very good year because we finally have her in the position she should be, small forward," Perretta said. Filling the gap at center last season, Messenger started all 29 games, collecting 3.7 rebounds per game.

At center, three-year veterans Sandra Williams and Kathy Razler will be joined by sophomore Kym Goodnight. Williams and Razler were injured through most of last season. "They are the keys," Perretta claimed. "They need to be healthy or we'll rely on the freshmen."

One of the first off the bench in Perretta's substitute rotation will be senior guard Mimi Coleman. "She can play wherever we need help, at both guards or forward. She'll have the same role as always," said Perretta.

"We have the players, I'm just unsure of the combinations," Perretta admitted. "Everyone is mentally prepared for this season. You can't play for me and not be mentally prepared. My players are ready for anything, including a nuclear attack."

"We're going to use pressing, multiple defenses," Perretta said. "There will be constant pressure on our opponents." Look for the Wildcat guards to trap the ball at half-court.

On offense, Villanova will run the fast break, "but you can't run without rebounding, which we didn't have last year," explained Perretta. "We're going back to the pass motion, where everyone gets involved. When we were most successful, we averaged four players in double figures a game. With this offense, you can stop one or two players, but not all five."

McGovern concluded, "Harry is a perfectionist, very demanding, and there are no short cuts to perfection."

Weekend of Defeat Icecats Lose Twice

By JUDY ROGERS

The Villanova ice hockey team came off a disappointing weekend of play, losing to Delaware and Princeton to bring their record to 2-3.

On Nov. 11 at Delaware, the icecats lost by the score of 9-1. The lone goal was a power play score by freshman Glenn Smith.

assisted by John Pepe and Critchley.

Team captain Segreto commented that "it was definitely not our best effort. We have a lot of work to do this week in preparation for our game against St. John's on Saturday." Expressing the team's bewilderment at the losses, he said, "Nobody knows

"We were really dragging."

— Frank Segreto

what went wrong; we were really dragging."

The Division III Cats are looking to make the playoffs this year in the ECAC. "We have to beat some pretty good teams, including St. John's," Segreto said.

Besides Saturday's game at St. John's, Nova will play Scranton at home on Nov. 20 at the Skatium.

Crew Into Final Weeks

By STEVEN E. McCHESNEY

As the 1985 Fall season becomes history, most of us are looking to the winter sports and Big Five basketball. But the season for the Villanova Rowing Club has one more weekend left before tackling the boats for the winter. Though the raw weather indicates a time for indoor activity, the Villanova crew is roughing the rain, sleet and cold to prepare for the annual pre-Thanksgiving regattas.

Villanova crew is roughing the rain, sleet and cold to prepare for the annual pre-Thanksgiving regattas.

The Frostbite and Bridgton regattas are big annual events in Philadelphia and the Eastern seaboard rowing circles. The weekend is a last hurrah for rowers at all ages before they go into a grueling winter training schedule. For the Wildcat oarsmen, the weekend concludes a demanding and progressive fall season, leaving them anxious for the spring intercollegiate races.

The fall program, under the direction of Tully Vaughn, focused on the Head of Schuylkill regatta. This was an event including hundreds of entries in different categories racing over a challenging three mile course. The United States Naval Academy and the University of Pennsylvania were the dominating teams as expected. The Wildcats placed very well in their own respect, considering the size and the club status of the program. Both the men and the women proved to themselves and their coaches that the hard work and dedication was worthwhile, leaving a lot of hope for the spring when they compete against crew and the whole rowing scene.

This weekend, the Villanova Rowing Club will compete in scenic Fairmount Park, Philadelphia. The Frostbite Regatta will take place on Sunday. Starting time for both days is approximately 11:00 a.m. and races continue through the afternoon.

Waterpolo Takes Fifth in E.C.A.C.

By MICHELE NAPOLI

Due to the loss of six out of seven starters, Villanova's waterpolo team has experienced a tough season. Recently they competed at the Eastern Championship, finishing fifth with three losses and one victory.

Nova suffered losses against Kenyon, Indiana of Pa. and Johns Hopkins. Against Kenyon, the Cats scored 13 points, those coming from Michael Duch with nine, William Beck with two and Martin McMahon with two. The Wildcats fared well against this defending championship team. Indiana put Nova back with a score of 6-16. Scorers again were Duch with three, Beck with two, and McMahon with one. The Nova team then lost to Johns Hopkins, 13-16. Despite the very close match, Nova's opponent jumped ahead for good in the third quarter. Scorers in this match were Duch with five, Beck with three, Steven St. Louis with two, William Rowlard with two, and Kevin Powers with one.

ship, fell to the Cats, 16-13. Although Nova was ahead the whole game, Queens managed to catch up in time to tie the Wildcats. This led to two overtimes which the Villanova team successfully claimed. Led by seniors Powers, Beck and St. Louis, the Wildcats were able to come home with the one victory. Scorers were Powers with four, Duch with four, Beck with three, St. Louis with two, McMahon with two, and Michael Riley with one. The team played a well fought battle and deserved its victory against the Queens waterpolo team, especially after suffering three losses in a row.

Finally, Villanova experienced a well-earned victory.

Intramurals

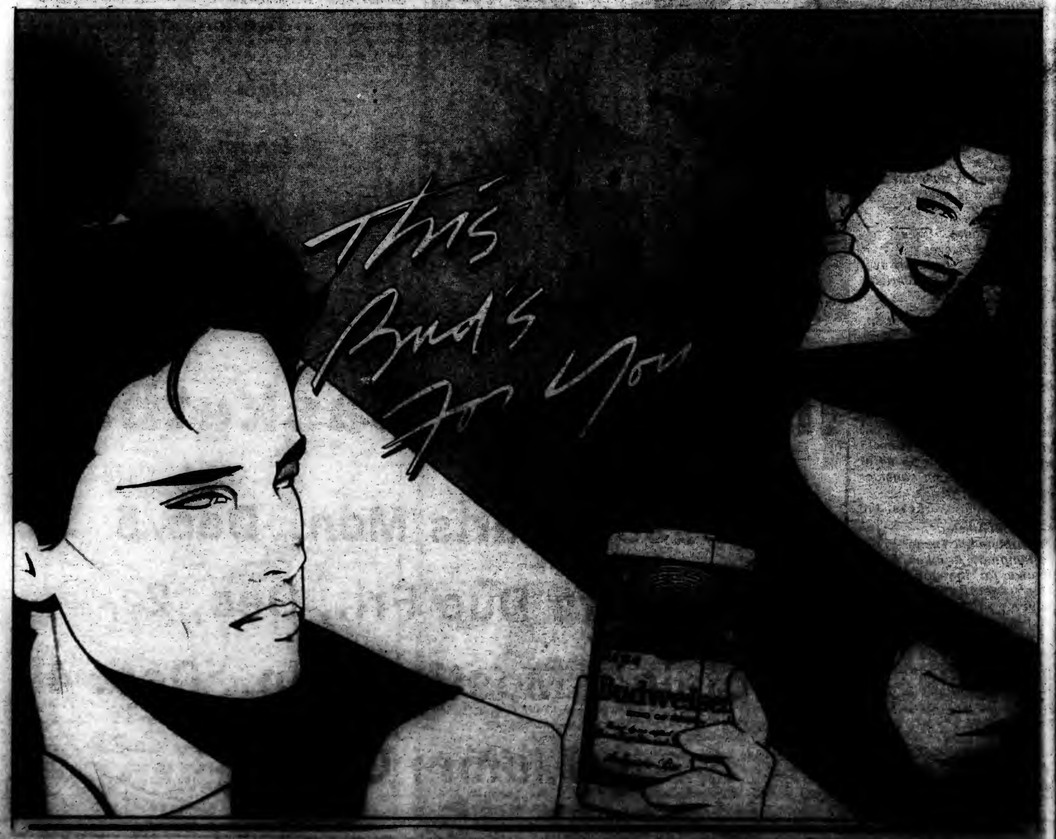
By KEN McELYNN

The regular season of the Intramural Football League ended last week and the following teams made the playoffs: Moon Unit, Poisson's Ratio, The Football Team, Gladiators, Orlando Woolige and Co., Athlete's Foot, Stallions, Lucky Charms, Wallbangers, The Low Riders, Legal Eagles, South Philly, SMF, The Killer Tomatoes, Them, PKO, LTD and DKE.

Recent playoff results include a DKE victory over the Football Team, a win for the Killer Tomatoes over Orlando Woolligе and Co., a defeat for the Lucky Charms at the hands of Athlete's Foot and a triumph for the Gladiators over Them. The semi-finals will take place today at 3:15 and 4:15 in the Stadium. The finals are scheduled (weather permitting) for Sunday, Nov. 20, in the Stadium, at 1:30 p.m.

This past weekend, the Intramural Soccer League, in its initial year, held its playoff rounds. Four teams are set to play in the semi-finals. The champion of the league will be decided this week. The Intramural staff was pleased with the great amount of interest in this league.

The Banshees lost to the Legal Eagles, 7-0, due to the absence of Mario, Jimbo, Billy and Fitzy.



Hoopsters Rout Swedes in Exhibition Contest

By JOE MARUSAK

In Villanova's exhibition game against the Swedish National Team Wednesday night, the leading exhibit was Harold Pressley.

The 6'7" forward scored 16 points and collected 16 rebounds in pacing the Cats to an 85-69 triumph over the Big East-touring Swedes.

"Harold played very well tonight," Head Coach Rollie Massimino said after the contest. "He's got to be around the basket for us."

"The coach is looking for leaders, and Frank Dobbs and Ed Pinckney fill the roles," said Pressley. "I am just looking to give them some help."

One of those leaders, Pinckney, did not appear in Wednesday's pre-season contest at the Field House. The junior All-American candidate injured his left foot in practice earlier this week, but is expected to return soon to action.

"It's a day-to-day process," Massimino commented. I hope it'll only be another three or four days."

With Pinckney out, it was all Pressley inside and the sophomore responded. In the first half alone he grabbed 11 boards and scored ten. On the night, he also blocked two shots and came up with four steals in helping the Cats to sink the Swedes.

In those first twenty minutes, neither side took complete control. Sweden shot out to a 7-1 advantage, but the Cats cooled that by eventually evening things at twenty.

Former Wildcat basketball standouts gathered for the annual Old-Timer's Game before Villanova's contest against the Swedes on Wednesday.

After that, the lead never went above four points. Chuck Everson's driving lay-up with three minutes remaining in the half put Nova up by 37-33. But Sweden, thanks in part to forward Glenn Jacobson's two free throws and lay-up, knotted it at 41 by the end.

"In the first half we had a lot of new guys playing for the first time, and we made a lot of substitutions," said junior Gary McLain. "We weren't executing properly when we had the ball."

McLain, along with Dwight Wilbur, Harold Jensen and Frank Dobbs, saw action at guard for Villanova against the Swedes.

"We're going with four guards right now," said Massimino, who indicated that he will stick with that plan on Nov. 30 against St. Joe's at the Palestra.

For Jensen, the Sweden match was his first as a Wildcat. "Going into the game, I tried to feel as relaxed and comfortable as possible," said the highly-touted freshman who contributed four points and four assists to the victory. "I knew I would play better if I stayed calm, and I felt really good out there."

Jensen kept his cool and Nova got red hot during the final half. With 14 minutes left and the game still close, McLain popped a 20 footer and Dwayne McClain slammed one home to lift the Cats to a 57-47 lead.

Later, with seven minutes remaining, Villanova ran off eight straight to take a 72-55 advantage. Sweden, which had previously beaten Seton Hall but had lost to Providence and Boston College, never came close after that Wildcat surge.

McLain, who scored eight and dished out five assists, said more work is needed as opening night approaches. "Before St. Joe's we've really got to work on better execution on offense and be aggressive on defense. If we do, we'll play much better."

Pressley added, "We have a few things left to work on. We've got to do a better job defensively. It's just that it was the first game; I'm sure that it will all come together."

REBOUNDS: Recruiting wise, things are already coming together for Villanova. Prior to the Sweden game, VU Sports Information Director Craig Miller announced the signing of two high school seniors by the coaching staff.

Mark Plansky, a 6'6" Massachusetts All-State forward, has verbally committed to Villanova and will sign a national letter of intent by next week. Regarded as one of the top shooters in the East this year, Plansky chose Nova over Maryland, Georgia Tech and B.C., among others.

Last year, De Paul's Ray Meyer reached over Villanova to land Philly star Dallas Comegys. The tables have turned this year as VU has successfully recruited 6'1" Chicago-area point guard Veltra Dawson. A Street & Smith's honorable mention All-America, Dawson has signed a national letter of intent to attend Villanova.

Spikers Place Second at Navy

By BOB HELLER

Last weekend Villanova women's volleyball team traveled to Annapolis, Md. to participate in the Navy Tournament.

The Wildcats' first opponent on Friday was Howard University. Howard proved to be no match for the Cats as Villanova's spikers won in two games 15-9, 15-12.

The Wildcats then faced Loyola College. They won this match in three games, 15-8, 7-15, and 15-7.

The next day the Wildcats had two [illegible] against Notre Dame and Navy, respectively.

Neither team caused any problems for the Cats as Notre Dame went down to defeat by 15-3, and 15-3, and Navy was shut-out 15-0, 15-0.

By winning all four matches in their pool, the Wildcats advanced to the semi-final match against Navy.

Navy won the opening game of the match, 15-12, but Villanova rebounded to trounce Navy in the next two games 15-1, 15-2, to advance to the final match against Juniata College.

The Wildcats won the opening game of the match 16-14, but dropped the next two games by scores of 15-10 and 15-6 to lose the match two games to one.

The Wildcats' performance earned them second place in the tournament. They will be in Providence this weekend to participate in the Big East Conference Tournament.

The Angle Packs It In

By LARRY GOANOS

First and goal. This is it, that exhilarating feeling that you get when you've put a lot of work into something and it's almost over. In case you missed that little paragraph blurb on the front page next to the masthead, this is the last issue of The Villanovan under the present editors. After two years of marriage to the sports section of this paper, I'm a free man. It feels great; I half expect to be issued a new suit and a $20 bill upon leaving the printer's shop for the last time.

Of course it hasn't been all bad. Like any other long term venture, being an editor of The Villanovan has its good points and its bad. It just seems like the bad stay in one's memory much more clearly than the good.

I could probably write a whole book about my experiences here but the perfect title has already been taken: The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly.

For those of you who are unfamiliar with what goes on behind the scenes of this paper, here's a little synopsis. On every Tuesday night all the editors gather in the office on the second floor of Dougherty Hall at about 4 p.m. where we begin to copy read the many wondrous articles that our writers submit. I carefully chose the word "wondrous" because that's exactly what they are — wonders.

Editor's Angle

Unfortunately for the readers, the most amusing parts of most stories never see the light of day thanks to people like me who possess at least the smallest amount of journalistic discretion. Unbelievable as it may seem, I've received stories with such classic lines as "The referee then made a gutless call which cost Villanova the game," and "One player commented, 'It was a ----ing great game.' " Freedom of the press only extends so far.

A weekly staple in the submissions is the old written-by-a-member-of-the-team article. Not realizing that we assign articles in a structured manner, these people feel that they should submit something haphazardly in an attempt at some publicity. These babies are usually handwritten (not typed as they should be) and include a litany of all the players on the team so as not to offend anybody. A typical sentence goes like this: All of the players put forth tremendous efforts including Joe Smith, John Doe, John Q. Public . . . and trainer Joe Schmoe." Invariably the conclusion to such articles is something like, "The team's next home game will be in the stadium against an always tough Haverford High J.V. team. Come out on Saturday and support the team and have a good time." Uuugh!

But actually, that's the amusing part. The not-so-amusing part is being hounded by people from minor sports who refuse to realize that varsity water skiing doesn't deserve as much coverage as men's basketball. And it always seems as if the captains of these teams are in my classes. Just luck, I guess.

Of course, all of the above only happens when the writers do in fact submit their articles. Often I find myself on the phone at 9:30 on a Tuesday night trying to get through to Sheehan or Stanford to locate a missing story. Usually this is to no avail, as the writer will come up with an excuse that shows more originality than any of his or her articles.

Another frustrating part is the actual laying out of the stories on the pages at the printer's shop. This tortuous exercise occurs every Thursday afternoon at R.K. Graphics in Bryn Mawr. It always seems as if that 550 word story which was supposed to be 15.2 inches on the page has shrunk to 11 inches. A remedy for this can be found by frantically searching through old issues for something appropriate to fill-in the blank space. This is where the Big East symbol comes in handy; it's a multi-purpose filler. If we were an independent in basketball I'd be up a creek.

Of course, there were some advantages to being a sports editor. I was given press passes to all of the basketball games at the Palestra where I could hob-nob with the big-wigs of Philadelphia sports journalism in the press room. The guys from the Inquirer and Daily News never acknowledge the presence of a collegiate writer, however, a fact which leads them to interrupt any and every question posed by their lesser counterparts.

My final column wouldn't be complete without mentioning Villanova's Sports Information Office. There, I've mentioned it. No, but seriously, Craig Miller, Dave Coskey and Annie Guida have made my job inestimably easier. Often they have come up with a picture or statistic that I've needed in the clutch. Undoubtedly they provide Villanova with one of the finest sports information offices anywhere. If you don't believe me, just look at all of the awards that Craig inconspicuously displays on his office walls.

In conclusion, I'd like to turn the tables on a few of my writers by saying that it has been a great year and tremendous efforts were put forth by Len LaBarth, Ilona Gawin, Mike Healey, Joanne Dellymore, Mary Claire Leahy, Jim DeLorenzo, Nancy Alberici, John Walsh, Dean Balsamini, Jayne Stuart, Claudia Simonetti, Julie Mangan, Joe Marusak, John Lynch, Pete Berkery, Francisco Martinez, Hank Halter, and last but not least — June Lytel. The paper's next recruitment meeting will be sometime early next semester so come out and have a good time.

Well that's it. As they say, "All good things must come to pass." Even on first and goal.

Men Harriers Win District II...

By PAUL MACCHIA

Last Saturday, the Villanova men's cross country team competed at Lehigh University in the combined IC4A/NCAA District II meet. The weather was very cold and windy on the Saucon Valley Fields 10,000 meter course.

The race was run as one race (301 competitors finished) with 43 IC4A/NCAA District II teams competing. The final scores were broken down and sorted out to determine the placings and standings in both divisions.

The Wildcats took first place in the IC4A division with 142 points to beat the surprise runner-up team of Dartmouth's 149 points. Georgetown (186 points), West Virginia (181 points), and Providence (186 points) rounded out the top five teams. The heavily favored team, Fairleigh Dickinson, wound up finishing a distant sixth as their runners ran a subpar performance.

In the NCAA District II division, the Wildcats took first with a score of 97 points, beating Georgetown (123 points), West Virginia (124 points), and Fairleigh Dickinson (130). The top three teams in District II qualify for the NCAA Championship meet.

The Wildcats were led by freshman sensation Gerry O'Reilly who posted a time of 30:28. O'Reilly went out with the leaders and stayed with them until the end. The overall race was won by Richard O'Flynn of Providence in a time of 30:06. O'Flynn had a 1000-yard lead on the field at the three-mile mark.

Coach Jack Pyrah was pleased with his ace freshman's performance. Gerry finished second overall and first in the NCAA District division.

Marcus O'Sullivan was the second Wildcat across the line, finishing in the NCAA with a time of 30:39. Throughout the race, O'Sullivan was hindered by a sore knee, yet pulled through with a good finish. O'Sullivan possibly could have won the race, if he did not run injuried, as he had previously beaten the five runners ahead of him.

The third Wildcat across the line was Brian O'Keefe, who was timed at 31:09 and finished 16th in the NCAA. O'Keefe, a strong competitor, ran a tough, determined race despite being plagued by sore thighs a week prior to the race.

Sophomore Anthony O'Reilly finished in 31:30 and placed 35th in the NCAA race. Coach Pyrah stated O'Reilly ran a good strong race and scored key points.

Freshman Sean O'Neill ran 31:40 for a 43rd NCAA placing, as he was the fifth Villanova runner to cross the line. O'Neill, who has a limited cross country background, was the decisive factor to gain both team championships.

Coaches Pyrah and Jenkins were extremely pleased with the team's effort, as everybody ran a strong, hard, race.

This has been the Wildcats' tenth IC4A crown since 1962 and its first since 1979. The team finished runner-up last year to Providence. Coach Pyrah remarked, "This has been a great season. We won the Philadelphia Big Five, Big East, IC4A's and NCAA meets. This is one of the best cross country teams I can recall ever having. We went into this meet with the idea of a chance and we were determined to qualify for the NCAA Championships. I didn't think we would win the meet by 26 points, though."

On Monday, Nov. 21, the Cats will be at Lehigh to compete in the NCAA Championships. The goal, as stated by Pyrah, is "to finish as high as possible." Wisconsin (last year's team champion) is the odds-on favorite. Wisconsin, like Providence, is a cross country-oriented team, which is not outstanding on the track.

The other top teams are UTEP, Arkansas, Washington State, and East Tennessee. The Cats hope to do well and perform with determination.

Gerry O'Reilly

After an outstanding weekend at the IC4A Championships and the NCAA District 2 Regional Championships, freshman cross country runner Gerry O'Reilly captures this week's Bud Athlete title.

The men's cross country team traveled to Lehigh last weekend for the dual championship meet held on Nov. 12. Despite the windy, cold weather and the heavily favored presence of Fairleigh Dickinson, the Wildcats ran their way to a 10,000-meter victory, capturing the IC4A Championship crown. While the entire team ran exceptionally well, Gerry O'Reilly produced an especially outstanding performance.

In a mark time of 30:28, O'Reilly ran the 10,000 meter race to place 2nd in the IC4A out of 301 runners, while capturing the first place title in the District 2 Regional Championships. As first runner for District 2, he has helped the Wildcats to qualify for the NCAA Championships, which will be held this Monday at Lehigh.

One of five Irish runners on the Villanova team, O'Reilly is from Dunboyne, Ireland. Thus far, he has had an impressive season. In the Big 5 Championships, O'Reilly helped Villanova to capture the championship titles of both meets. According to head coach Charles Jenkins, his runner has performed "tremendously."

Although the cross country season will end with the NCAA Championships, training for the indoor track season will begin shortly. During indoor track, O'Reilly will most likely run the 1500-meters and the 3000-meters. Both Coach Jenkins and assistant coach Jack Pyrah anticipate a good season for O'Reilly, who has thus far proved to be a great asset to the Wildcat runners.

...Women Capture Second

McGowan Paces Cats

Freezing temperatures and blustery winds might not sound like perfect conditions to most, but for Villanova's women's cross-country team, they provided the perfect setting for the Wildcats' national qualifying performance. By taking second place in the Region II meet at Lehigh University in Bethlehem, Pa., on Saturday, the women qualified to run in the NCAA Championships Nov. 21 on the same 500-meter course.

Junior Mary Ellen McGowan led the team, as she has all season, with her second-place finish in 17:14. She was followed by strong performances from freshmen Lauren Searby (14th in 18:16) and Melissa Grubb (16th in 18:20), and junior Jane Ashton (19th in 18:27). Frosh Katie Redden rounded out the team score of 76 points with her 30th place finish (18:45).

While Villanova has been considered a strong contender in Region II all season, its performance was nonetheless impressive because this is only its second year in Division I competition. They lost to perennial powerhouse Penn State by only 18 points and finished 28 points ahead of third place Cornell.

Mary Ellen McGowan.

Coach Bob Shoudt discounted any notions of his team being a novice among the other Division I schools: "We were certainly capable of doing this based on our performances throughout the season. Last year we only missed out on qualifying by six points. Hopefully, now we'll be able to start a tradition for the future."

Shoudt was especially pleased with his team's preparedness for the meet: "Everyone, from the first person to the last, went there with a purpose. The girls were not only physically but mentally ready to run a race."

The women also felt that they had fulfilled personal goals with their success. McGowan remarked, "My time was 20 seconds faster than last year, so I'm very happy about that. Everything paid off after a full season of hard work." Searby said, "For our first regional meet we were very pleased." Grubb added that "all the running we're doing now is so much more than in high school, but it's really exciting and rewarding."

For junior Jane Ashton, being a member of this squad is no different than being a member of the entire team: "I think that the whole squad realizes that without the hard work and encouragement of everyone on the team, whether they ran today or not, we never could have accomplished what we did. We all pushed each other to try harder and to make Villanova a team to be reckoned with."

The cross-country season now has only the nationals left to run. Shoudt feels that the team has a legitimate chance to do well in the sixteen team field. "We're going to go out there, Monday and do the best we can, just as we have all year."

Democrats Stress Awareness

By LEONARD J. La BARTH

Fresh from engineering the victory of Philadelphia mayor-elect W. Wilson Goode in the November primary, political science professor Mary Ellen Balchunis has undertaken the role of moderator to the Villanova College Democrats, an organization attempting to increase political awareness in Democratic politics among Villanova students.

Balchunis, who teaches an introductory political science course at Villanova, as well as several political science courses at Temple University, has taken over as moderator from fellow political science faculty member Dr. Jeffrey Hahn. In addition to her teaching loads, Balchunis, who received her master's degree in public administration from Temple and is finishing her doctoral dissertation, is currently serving on Goode's advance team, where as a member of the Women's Division, she is responsible for [illegible] Women.

Mary Ellen Balchunis

The objective of the College Democrats, according to the new moderator, is to make the students not only more politically aware but also more "politically active" in Democratic activities.

"It's been proven that if you feel politically effective, then you will be more politically active. People inherit their party from their parents. We're finding here (Villanova) that the student's political views when they graduate are not that much different from when they enter. It is a matter of being exposed to different political experiences."

Balchunis says that a lot of the work to be done by the College Democrats involves reorganization and obtaining more recognition. "The organization is currently targeting potential members, coordinating future activities and attempting to achieve more on-campus visibility.

"The officers in this organization are bright, talented and dedicated," boasts Balchunis. "I'm real proud of them and thoroughly enjoy working with them. While it is not a social club or a social gathering, it usually turns out to be a sounding board for different political discussions."

The College Democrats is comprised of approximately fourteen active members and an executive council headed by Joe Alessandro, president; Bob Donovan, vice president; Jo Ellen Urban, secretary; and John Wilke, treasurer.

Assisting the organization and Balchunis is judicial affairs administrator Joe Burke, whose brother is a member of Congressman Bob Edgar's administration. Burke is handling the computer-detailed targeting, as well as promoting the organization.

Currently, the organization is meeting weekly and is anticipating planning a major function each month.

On Dec. 5, the College Democrats is sponsoring "A Discussion of Grenada", featuring Grenadan expert, Temple economics professor Jay Mandle, to be held at 4 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall with a reception to follow.

Balchunis believes that students' past political experiences within the family structure determine their current political awareness. Addressing this to the makeup of the Villanova student body in comparison to that of Temple and Drexel, Balchunis

Experts Debate Nuclear Arms

By TIM HANLON

A Nuclear Arms Debate sponsored by the Lectures Committee of the Villanova Union was held Tuesday night between Dr. Robert K. Musil, education director of the SANE Educational Fund, and Dr. William J. Taylor Jr., chief operating officer of the Georgetown Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS).

Both men agreed that the U.S. is not pursuing a first strike policy, and each opposed a nuclear war. However, their argument stemmed from the question, "Do you favor a 'nuclear freeze?'"

Musil affirmed a nuclear freeze that is bilateral, mutual and verifiable. He wants to see a complete halt where there is no testing, production or deployment.

Taylor disagreed with this reasoning. He stressed that the question is not "Do you favor a nuclear freeze on nuclear weapons?" but, "How do you deter the use of nuclear weapons?" He insisted that you cannot get a freeze that is mutual and verifiable.

Musil's arguments centered around the idea that nuclear war, as a subject, has been taken way from the experts.

He emphasized that we must differentiate between feeling the threat of nuclear war and wanting to stop it, and simply saying we want to stop it.

Musil backed his argument by pointing out that START (Strategic Arms Reduction Talks) does not seem to be working. "It has been three years now and the Russians are not cooperating. A Build Down policy is now in effect, but before we can build down we must keep building up."

Taylor emphasized that the Russians are back at the Geneva talks and he believes START is working. He explained, "The Russians will continue to negotiate as long as NATO countries stand 'four square' behind the intermediate nuclear force deployments in Europe and that they must be confronted with power and determination."

Taylor explained that we will never get a freeze that is mutually acceptable nor verifiable because it is not in the Soviet realm of acceptance to allow inspections. "The Russians do not accept Western morality, ethics, perceptions, or rationality and logic."

Public morality is the underlying factor according to Taylor. The U.S. government is responsible for all its people, and cannot commit to a freeze because the nuclear arms race is immoral. He says, "The Soviet Politburo counts and not the Russian people."

When asked whether deterrence worked or not, Musil said that it has not stopped the arms race. "It has stopped breakthroughs such as satellite weaponry on either side, but it would keep the constant building of nuclear weapons to be strong and deter the USSR." He continued, "One day the side with the invisible missile/laser will break the ABM treaty and someone will think they have the advantage and use it."

Taylor emphasized that deterrence has worked in the past. There has not been one single accident in the past. He added that Musil must prove that deterrence does not work, the President's policy to threaten option arms reduction cannot work, and that he has a better proposal.

When asked about his view on the movie, "The Day After," Musil comment, "It was not quite as horrible as we were led to expect. I was disappointed; I thought that nuclear war would be gorier.

Taylor commented that the movie was a "waste of time." He said, "Who could doubt how horrible, immoral, irrational nuclear war is?" He pointed out that even the public thought so, too, as seen in a growing support for Reagan's policies since the movie.

In closing, Taylor reiterated the present U.S. countervailing strategy. The U.S. will not wage a nuclear war, and it cannot lie about the nuclear capability to survive a first strike and still be able to launch a second strike. He recapped both views when he said, "I favor reducing now, freezing later, while Bob Musil on the other hand favors freezing now, reducing later."

The debate consisted of both men presenting their arguments twenty minutes each, a one half-hour question-answer period from the audience, and a ten minute closing comment by each debate participant.

Alcohol Policy Update

By WILLIAM H. BURNS

Dr. Richard Neville, vice-president for student life, said that the groups undertaking mediation concerned with the alcohol policy and social life on campus are aiming "to minimize the University's liability and maximize the students' responsibility."

The Office of Residence Life, the Office of the Dean of Students, the Dean's Advisory Council, and the Student Government ad hoc Committee to Restore Student Life, are the organizations most involved in these talks.

The Dean's Advisory Council, which was formed by Dean of Students The Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., consists of the student leaders of the six representative student organizations on campus: the Student Government; the Resident Student Association; the Association of Commuting Students; the Panhellenic Council; the Interfraternity Council; and the Villanova Union.

After the Nov. 9 protest which was coordinated by Jim Kucznski, the committee which grew out of his efforts, the Committee to Restore Student Life, became an ad hoc addition to the Dean's Advisory Council. This addition was at the suggestion of Student Government President Patrick Leahy. Although both Leahy and Tom Belmont, president of the Villanova Union, were concerned that the protest would jeopardize the progress that had been made by the Dean's Advisory Council, both Neville and Stack agreed that that had not been the case. The protest, they felt, was well-run and stayed within the boundaries of school policy, although Neville termed it "unnecessary."

The Committee to Restore Student Life is currently focusing on the alcohol problem; however, their real concerns are much broader. They encompass many areas of student life, including the restoration of football, visitation, the negative publicity that Villanova has gained through media coverage, and other social issues.

As it now stands, the Dean's Advisory Council has submitted a concrete written proposal to the Administration, outlining the needs of the student population and suggesting possible courses of action. Neville, commenting on the proposal, stated that the "Administration has some concerns about the details of the proposal." University civil and criminal liability are among these concerns.

According to Neville, the "climate in Radnor Township concerning alcohol has changed, even in the past two years." Radnor Township now possesses a state grant which allows them to hire two extra men per shift whose sole duty is to enforce liquor laws, including underage drinking, and drinking and driving.

Sometime next week, Assistant District Attorney Arthur Shuman, a Villanova alumnus, will visit the campus to address the student leaders and the administration about current liquor laws and law enforcement in Pennsylvania. With a more full understanding of the letter and the spirit of the law, those involved say, hopefully, that some alternative which "minimizes University liability and maximizes student responsibility" may be found.

Credit Cards

Students are invited to apply for a Sears, Zales, Bambergers or Montgomery Ward credit card on Dec. 6, 7, 8 in the Connelly Center. The Villanova Marketing Society wants to help you begin now to establish the good credit rating you need.

Seminar

There will be a Seminar on Coronary Vascular Hemodynamics by Douglas F. Munch, Ph.D. The Seminar will be held at 4 p.m. on Dec. 6 in Room 218 of the Chemical Engineering Building. Refreshments will be served prior to the Seminar from 3:30-4 p.m.

Test-Anxiety

Frazzled by exams? Now is the time to prepare for Spring Semester! Beginning in February, the Counseling Center will offer a Test Anxiety workshop. Call extension 4050 to set up an interview to find out if the workshop is appropriate for you. But act fast, only a limited number of students can be accommodated.

Rag Sweater Sale

Discount Prices! Get yours wholesale! Rag Sweaters will go on sale Dec. 6 from 11:30-2:30 p.m. in the Connelly Center. Choose from nine styles. They make great Christmas presents.

Leisure Courses

The search is on! We want those of you who have any hobby, skill or talent to share it with others. Teach a mini-course this spring. Applications are available in the Union Office, and the deadline for the return of these applications is Dec. 20. If interested, contact Diane O'Brien in the Union Office at 645-7280.

Administrative Orientation

The Dean of Students Office is now accepting applications for the position of Administrative Coordinator for the 1984 position. Announcements describing requirements and responsibilities are available in the Dean of Students Office, 213 Dougherty Hall. Filing Deadline is Dec. 5, by 5 p.m.

SNAP

There will be a Christmas Party and meeting on Dec. 13 at 7:30 p.m. In Bartley 209. Take a break from studying and join us! Refunds for those who attended the convention will be given. Hope to see you there!

VFL Meeting

There will be a general meeting of Villanovans for Life on Dec. 8 at 4:30 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty.

Micro-computer

The Faculty Micro-computer user's group's second meeting of the year will be held today at 3:30 p.m. in the Haverford Room of the Connelly Center. All interested faculty are invited to attend.

March for Life

There will be a general meeting for the March for Life on Dec. 7 at 7:30 p.m., in the Cinema of the Connelly Center. Molly Kelly, Executive Director of Pennsylvanians for Human Life, will be the guest speaker.

Class Correction

The following is a correction of misprints in the Spring Preregistration Master Schedule (Page 20). The Modern Greek Courses to be offered this spring at Villanova University are:

141-1012-90, Modern Greek II
T R, 6- 7:15 PM Beginning Level

141-2251-90m Reading in Authors II
T R, 4:30-5:45 PM Inter. Level

Those who have had Modern Greek in the past, or others who have been exposed to the Greek Language, are strongly encouraged to join these courses with the instructor's permission. For further information contact Dr. N. Henderson at 885-5971.

Anniversary

On Dec. 15 at 7 p.m. in the Main Chapel, there will be a Mass to celebrate the 100th Anniversary of the laying of the Cornerstone of the Main Chapel. Bishop Louis DeSimone, Auxiliary Bishop of Philadelphia, will be the main celebrant.

All Villanova students, faculty, administration and staff are most cordially invited to attend this festive celebration. There will be no 10:30 p.m. Mass in the Main Chapel on this day.

Sorority Rush

Sorority Rush registration continues, but is quickly coming to an end. Register now in the Student Activities Office in Room 214, Dougherty Hall. Do it now! Remember, it's your chance to BE UNIQUE . . . GO GREEK!

Holy Day

Because Dec. 8 is a holy day, all masses except the 11:30 Corr Hall will be held in the Main Chapel.

Spring Semester Trips

As you know, the Graduate School office and the Graduate Students Council have for several years sponsored trips during the Mid-term break during the Spring Semester. Some of the most successful have been to Bermuda, Hawaii and Cancun.

This year we have three choices:

(1) BERMUDA — Monday, March 5 to Friday, March 9, $449 + $40 Tax and Services

(2) CANCUN — Saturday, March 3 to Saturday, March 10, $539 + 15% Tax and Services

(3) IXTAPA — Monday, March 5 to Monday, March 12, $519.+ 15% Tax and Services

The cost includes round-trip airfare from Philadelphia International Airport, transfers, baggage handling and gratuities, and accommodations. The Bermuda price also includes full breakfast, tea and dinner each day and all gratuities to hotel personnel, including the dining room.

If interested please get in touch with the Graduate Office (Extension 7090). There is a deadline of Dec. 16 for a $100 deposit.

Bon Voyage

Study Skills Workshop

Use your lunch hour to sharpen your study habits and reduce your test anxiety. Especially designed for adult learners, the Workshop will be held from 12-1:30 p.m., Dec. 6 and 8. $15 to UC students, $25 to non-students. Call 645-4310 for reservation. Sponsored by Adult Services, University College.

Villanova Ski Club

The Villanova Ski Club is offering a week of skiing and partying Jan. 8-13 at Sugarbush, Vt. The price of the trip is $245 and includes transportation, lift tickets, and mountainside condominium lodging. Don't miss out. Sign up in the Connelly Center Ticket Office or stop by B-332 (Prof. Klinger).

Philosophy Club

There will be an open discussion held on Dec. 6 in the Common Room (Vasey Hall, Room 10). Handouts are available on the Philosophy Department Bulletin Board. All are welcome.

Amnesty International

Human rights are not secure in many of the nations of the world. Every human rights violation which comes to its attention and might still be remedied before it is too late is acted on by Amnesty International. To join the Campus Chapter of Amnesty International, please contact Joseph Betz, Philosophy Department. (645-4708 or 525-4499). Your only obligation in joining will be to write one or two letters a month trying to protect the rights of some particular person in danger of losing them. Typical cases involve persons being tortured, held without trial, or given stiff sentences for nonviolent political dissent.

College Democrats

The Villanova College Democrats is sponsoring "A Discussion of Grenada" to be hosted by Temple University economics professor Jay Mandle, a recognized expert on Grenada, Dec. 5, at 4 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall. A reception will follow.

Basketball Club

There will be a meeting of the Basketball Club on Dec. 6 at 12:45 p.m. in the West Lounge. Bus tickets for upcoming games will be sold.

Calendars

The "Men at Villanova" Calendars have arrived! They will be available this week and next week.

Scholarship

The National Space Club will award a $3,500 scholarship for the academic year 1984-85. The scholarship is in memory of Dr. Robert H. Goddard, America's rocket pioneer. The award is given to stimulate the interest of talented students in the opportunity to advance scientific knowledge through space research and exploration. The 1984 Award Winner will be introduced to the nation's leaders in science, government and industry at the Goddard Memorial Dinner to be held on March 16, 1984. For further information, please contact the Financial Aid Office at 645-4010.

Faculty Reviews 'The Day After'

By AMELIA McGOVERN

Professors from various departments at Villanova University discussed their responses to the ABC television movie, "The Day After," aired on Nov. 20. The movie, about the effects and reality of what might happen if there actually were a nuclear war, stirred mixed reactions from faculty.

"The movie was poorly done. I was disappointed. I don't have much praise for it," emphasized Dr. Donald R. Schultz, professor of religious studies. "My expectations were much higher due to the amount of press coverage."

Dr. Donald B. Kelley, chairman of the history department, said, "My first reaction from an historical perspective is that a movie showing the past, or in this case, the future, has a tremendous impact far beyond what we can show in the classroom. We recognize the importance and significance of showing a movie of this type."

Kelley added, "The movie itself, the script, was third rate, I did not think it was well done. The first half was tedious."

Dr. Benedict A. Paparalla, a philosophy professor, commented, "I came from a generation who experienced World War II. The devastation of physical property damage, as well as the horrible physical destruction, are some things I was already aware of from being in the service during World War II. There is a difference of impact for different viewers.

"We become engrossed in life. We become neglectful of this reality that nations possess awesome powers to destroy the planet earth. The movie was instructive. It fulfilled its purpose," said Paparella.

Dr. John Logue, director of the Common Heritage Institute, commented, "I thought it was quite useful. Some things were not absolutely clear to the casual viewer. Kansas City was destroyed, but the movie showed people walking around in nearby Lawrence. The movie underestimated the damage of nuclear war."

"I was hoping the movie would be more devastating," commented Schultz. "Even though they stated at the end of the movie 'of course, the damage would be much greater in the event of a nuclear war . . .' I feel people weren't convinced of that. I think people went away thinking 'that's not so bad'."

Schultz continued, "the greatest ill effects were not brought out sufficiently. The psychological effects could have been better depicted. The sense of loneliness that would follow such a devastation could have been highlighted."

Logue noted, "The purpose was to tell us nuclear war is horrible, so we will be motivated to do something to prevent it.

"It is important to suggest things people can do. It is important to use this moment of awareness to persuade people that nuclear war is not inevitable," Logue added.

About the value of the movie, these professors disagree. Schultz claimed, "The number of people who are so sheltered to what's going on with the expose of literature, movies, presentations of development of nuclear war is so small that I doubt this movie would have enlightened many people."

Kelley said, "The film had value in raising the issue. I hope it didn't leave people feeling nuclear war is an inevitable, unpleasant experience."

"It fulfilled its purpose. It wasn't for profit purposes; tremendous profit wasn't made off of it. It did have a message; the motive is sincere," stated Paparella.

"I applaud them for their efforts. This needs to be done. It fell short of producing a first class exdition, though," concluded Itz.

Canon Law Impact

By PAULA SOLLAMI

It has been decided that the Villanova Chapel will not add Saturday evening masses into its schedule, following a recent change in Canon Law allowing such masses.

"Because Villanova already holds seven masses on Sundays, four of which are in the evening, we have no need for the Saturday mass," according to the Rev. Shawn Tracy, O.S.A., director of Campus Ministry. "In addition, it would be difficult to hold Saturday evening masses in the Villanova Chapel because weddings are scheduled through 6 p.m. each Saturday afternoon," Tracy explained.

The change in Canon Law went into effect on the first Sunday of Advent, Nov. 27, 1983. It occurred after the Papal commission in Rome decided to take the authority to allow Saturday evening masses from the individual Catholic diocese, and make it a churchwide law. This means that now, all over the world, masses will be held on Saturday evenings as well as on Sundays.

Although this change does not influence the many dioceses which already have been offering the Saturday evening mass, it does affect the Archdiocese of Philadelphia. Previously, this diocese never permitted the Saturday mass.

Since the Villanova parish will not revise its present schedule, those interested in attending the Saturday evening mass can venture to the St. Thomas of Villanova Church in Rosemont at 7 p.m.

Eating Disorders Affect Students

By LINDA KIKEL

"The American dream to be thin, rich and beautiful must be changed," said Dr. Florence Seaman, clinical psychologist of the Advance Center, which treats eating disorders. "Television actresses and models promote anorexia nervosa and bulimia by portraying this ideal."

Anorexia is a psychosomatic disease. Physical and emotional characteristics of this disorder reinforce one another, posing serious, many times fatal, health hazards. Bulimia, a dangerous counterpart, involves gorging on food, followed by self-induced vomiting and the taking of laxatives. Emotional maladjustments and difficulty relating with parents and peers underlie both illnesses.

"In anorexia people decide to go on a diet; finally it controls them and they cannot stop it," said Dr. John Sargent, pediatrician and child psychiatrist at the Philadelphia Child Guidance Center, 34th Street and Civic Center Boulevard. "It becomes a way of life and habit."

Anorexics and bulimics are primarily teenage girls, but five percent are boys and men. Once rare, young and middle-aged anorexics are becoming common. College campuses have seen alarming increases in anorexic students. "Anorexics and bulimics have rituals which use food as a coping mechanism," said Seaman. "They lose themselves behind food, making it their whole life, so dealing with the real world is unnecessary."

Behavioral changes, reluctance to socialize and refusal to eat with the family are danger signals indicating a person may be anorexic, bulimic or both. Wearing baggy clothes will hide their weight loss. If food is missing from the refrigerator, they may be binging and using the bulimic approach to keep their anorexic weight.

The Advance Center, in Suite 213 of the Great Valley Center in Malvern, treats eating problems through individual and group therapy for victims and family members. "We deal with nutritional issues and focus primarily on psychological problems of low self-esteem, perfectionism and the need for everyone's approval," Seaman explained. "It is an effective [illegible] behavior similiar to alcoholism."

Drugs are not prescribed to help anorexics regain their appetites, but anti-depressants may be used to combat emotional tensions. Ongoing drug use is considered counterproductive, numbing individuals to what they are doing to themselves. When eating is still difficult, only vitamins, C and E for example, are advocated to give their body nutrients.

Patients at dangerously low weights who refuse to eat when hospitalized are fed intravenously. Nasogastric feeding, used in the most serious cases, passes a feeding tube through the nose, down the esophagus into the stomach. "Force feeding is usually necessary at first," said Sargent, "but we try to put the idea in their head that they need treatment. The person must realize anorexia progresses voluntarily, even though they may not feel in control."

Anorexia causes major physical malfunctions. Starvation lowers the body's potassium level, inviting kidney disease and heart failure. Bulimic vomiting damages the intestinal tract and esophagus. There is a 10 to 20 percent mortality rate, so hospitalized patients are discharged only when enough weight has been gained so that they are physically stable and able to function.

Doctors recommend continued therapy for a period after recovery, because anorexia is a physical, psychological and deep-seated disease having long term effects. The Anorexia and Bulimia Association of Philadelphia was established three years ago, and is part of a nationwide program created to counsel recovering and former anorexics and bulimics. Self-help groups led by recovered anorexics and bulimics benefit victims and family members. The organization functions as a therapeutic and self-motivating supplement for individuals along with their regular medical and psychiatric treatment.

"Families, when united, can form a strong unit to combat this disease," said recovered anorexic and bulimic Steve Walk, an Anorexia and Bulimia Association group leader. "Recovery can occur with or without support, but anorexics and bulimics who wish to live must push themselves to accomplish this."

CIA Official Leads Debate

By GARY R. DYER

Arthur Hulnick, from the Central Intelligence Agency, spoke at a debate sponsored by the Political Union Wednesday night.

At the meeting's conclusion, the members of the Union passed the debated resolution, "This house believes that the work of the CIA has been in the best interests of the United States," by a vote of 15 to three with two abstentions.

Hulnick attended Princeton University and graduated from the Woodrow Wilson School of Government. He served in the United States Air Force as an intelligence officer, and after 15 years with the Arthur Hulnick addressing Political Union.

CIA he is now working for the Office of Public Affairs there.

Hulnick said, that although the popular press does project a colored and negative view of the CIA's activities, it must be admitted that "the ethics and morality that apply to individuals, especially to individuals in this society, may not necessarily apply to nations."

According to Hulnick, research has shown that top-level policymakers pay a great deal of attention to the reports they receive from the intelligence community. "But very often policy-makers complain that intelligence is giving them a message that they don't want to hear."

Hulnick thinks these attitudes indicate that the CIA's efforts to be non-partisan have been successful.

Covert activities are only the publicized five per cent of the CIA's work, and, according to Hulnick, they are necessary because of the state of opposition which exists between the United States and some other countries. He said, "Since World War II covert action has been part of the Charter of the CIA. Our Charter, based on the 1947 legislation, says that we should carry out 'such other matters relating to intelligence as the President may from time to time direct'."

Hulnick said that CIA activities are now more than before initiated by the executive powers who require the information. "In the early days of the agency, some covert activity was indeed generated in the back rooms at the CIA and got the tacit approval of the executive, and no legislative oversight (sic) at all. Today the impetus comes from the executive, that what's done by the agency is done at the direction of the President or is very often derived from some committee-level decision."

There are four divisions to the CIA: intelligence, which handles research and analysis; science and technology, which develops the machinery needed for the CIA's work; operations, "the people who manage espionage agents around the world"; and administration, which handles the day-to-day management of the agency.

"It's a really nasty world out there," stated Phillip Caparso, speaking for the conservatives in favor of the resolution. "And though it's very popular and it gets a lot of votes, to apply personal moral ethics to foreign policy just doesn't work." Caparso pointed to the 200 major wars the UN estimates have occurred in the world since 1945 and to the "four major conflicts" now unfolding in this hemisphere — Guatamala, Nicaragua, El Salvador, and Grenada — "all of which are threatening our security in the United States within our own hemisphere."

Dr. Joseph Betz of the philosophy department, speaking when the members of the audience had been invited to address the assembly, cited the overthrow of Chilean President Salvador Allende to buttress his claim that when the United States fails to support democratically-elected governments, "the mischief-maker is the CIA."

Dr. Betz said that Hulnick's introductory remarks, stating that the morals which apply to individuals do not apply to nations, threw his credibility into question. "How do we know he isn't lying to us? That is, if he is talking about the CIA, which concerns itself with important affairs of state, in speaking to us he might find it necessary to defend his agency not simply by varnishing the truth, but lying about it."

Hulnick responded, "I've never been asked to do something that I found to be morally reprehensible or ethically unacceptable. If I did, I would quit. And I think most of my colleagues feel the same way.

"Yes, you should be concerned about covert activities," he concluded. "So are we. So are we in terms of the results that we have. But I point out to you that there are many things going on in the world that many would support.

"Who would argue that a person like Khomeini is an evil force that has to be dealt with? Who would argue that the Afghans fighting off the Soviet invaders probably ought to be helped if they could? Who would argue that a democratically-elected government in Italy ought to be protected against the onslought of Soviet influence through the Communist party? Think about that in terms of making judgments about the five per cent (of CIA activities which are covert)."

New Editors Announced

In an election held Nov. 8, Joseph P. Marusak was voted new editor-in-chief of the Villanovan for the coming year. He succeeds Leonard J. La Barth.

Marusak, a junior with a double major in Communications and English from East Greenwich, Rhode Island, previously served as assistant sports editor of the paper.

Named as new editorial board members were Jayne Stuart, associate editor; and Hank Halter, layout editor. Ilona Gawin remains as managing editor.

Appointed as section editors were Amelia McGovern, news; Charlene Pardoe, features; Nick Anastasio and Bill Santos, entertainment; Mary Agnes Matyszewski and N. John Cavuto, sports; Nikoletta Bekiaris, Jim Engelhart and Claudia Simonetti, business; Julie Mangan, advertising; and John Walsh, photography.

Also named were Gary Dyer, assistant news editor; Michael Irons, assistant sports editor; Kelly O'Neill, assistant entertainment editor; Alesia Duffy, assistant photography editor; and F.Y.I. coordinator, Vince Raimondi.

The terms of the new editors run until December 1984.

Positive Approach to Alcohol Policy

The Aug. 25, 1983, letter from Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for student life, to parents of Villanova students hit home with the blunt statement: "The alcohol policy this year is the same basic policy we've always had. But we're changing it in that we're not going to allow exceptions to it."

In the initial months following that letter, campus weekends have been blanketed by inactivity. Examples: a deejay dance held in the Day Hop earlier this semester drew no more than a dozen students, and only 18 tickets were sold for a Mad Hatter dance held in the Villanova Room on Oct. 14. Both were non-alcohol-related events.

But the sullen mood seems to be changing now, as both the Administration and student leaders are working together to seek solutions to the intricacies of the problem at hand.

Breakthrough No. 1 came on Oct. 19, after a meeting among the student-composed Dean's Advisory Council, Dr. Neville, and the University's legal counsel, Ray Cullen. It was determined then "that criminal liability could be negated as well as civil liability minimized by allowing students with proper IDs to bring their own bottles to parties on campus, rather than have the University provide alcohol for students," according to Patrick Leahy, the student body president.

On Nov. 9, the same day that a protest was held in the area between Sullivan and Sheehan Halls, the Dean's Advisory Council submitted a BYOB proposal to the Administration. It was received with caution, but it appears to have had a positive effect: tonight, the Villanova Union is sponsoring an undergraduate semiformal with the BYOB provisions as outlined in the Nov. 18 issue of the Villanovan.

As Leahy remarked in his Nov. 14 address to the students, "It's not a solution, but it is a beginning."

A plethora of legal questions still remain for both administrators and student leaders alike to solve, but at least the direction on both sides has been positive.

WKVU's Crisis

Although last month's two-week shutdown allowed those involved a chance to step back and reexamine the problems surrounding WKVU, it failed to remedy the real crises facing the campus radio station. However, now that the University has finally decided to step in, some hope remains for the student-run organization.

For too long, those students performing WKVU's day-to-day operations have been forced to labor under low listening audience figures and have had to deal with a dwindling supply of DJs who quickly realize the futility of airing a program across the 640 AM frequency.

The solution to WKVU's plight, as former station general manager Paul Don Vito pointed out in the last issue, is one of conversion. According to Don Vito, the AM Carrier Current system on which WKVU presently relies for its broadcasts is inherently faulty. And the best way out of the mess, he and others say, is to switch the station to the FM dial.

That type of conversion isn't easy. The process is lengthy and requires a professional to oversee the numerous complications that naturally arise in such a move.

As Villanova's Director of Student Activities Lucy Gorski indicated earlier this week, that type of help is just what the University is now seeking. A full-time advisor, she noted, should be on the way by next semester. That person would first look into the FM question, exploring all possibilities and eventually guiding the station through a smooth transition to FM.

Until that time, WKVU will remain entrenched in its current dilemma. At least now, they have hope for the future.

The Villanovan will print "Letters to the Editor" received prior to the deadline, Tuesday at 5 p.m. All letters must be signed, although the editor will withhold a name upon request. Because of limited space, not all letters can be printed.

Letters to the Editor

Response to Student Government

To the Editor:

"To do harm is often laudable, to do good sometimes accounted dangerous folly." Such is the position I now find myself placed in.

In response to an editorial I wrote asking the student government to "take a firm stand . . . on the issue of football" by taking action, the student government claimed that I have cast doubt on any credibility I, or my former editor, Len LaBarth, may have.

I have not cast doubt upon my credibility, nor neglected my responsibilities. Indeed, it is you, the student government, who have done so, by creating a vendetta with two of your constituents while you have more important matters to deal with.

The letter asked, "Where have you been, Jim?" and then claims that because they ran an advertisement in the Villanovan, "we have taken a stand, and there can be no doubt as to our sincerity."

Where have you been? Full page ads and letters do not take the place of action. You paid for an ad, stating your position. Fine. Back up your words with action, because I doubt your sincerity.

The student government's letter said that any student rally on the football issue would be a way of generating "unnecessary bad publicity for Villanova." Which is more important to you, the concerns of the local media or the concerns of the students you were elected to represent?

But then the student government takes credit for "concerted efforts" to institute a fall break and retain the present grading system. These issues have been around for ages, and anything recently achieved is merely the result of the work done by previous administrations.

The letter stated that Len LaBarth and I are not behind the student government. We are behind the students, but when I see something wrong, is it incorrect for me to speak up?

The recent activity by student government to modify the alcohol policy was a good thing, I felt, until certain "student leaders" began to complain that articles I authored concentrated too much on the alcohol issue, and not on the lack of social life. To what do you attribute this lack of social life? Ask your constituents. I'm sure they would tell you it has something to do with the alcohol policy.

The whole issue, though, has been devised to get our minds off football until it is too late. Yes, folks, the Trustees will vote on football in 11 short days, but you won't see anything else done by the student government to let student voices be heard on the issue.

I am not a fool, and neither are Villanova students. All of us know what is going on, and what isn't.

The Villanovan's journalistic principles were also attacked. I can assure the readers of the Villanovan that the news section, while I was an editor and Len LaBarth was editor-in-chief, and the newspaper as a whole, was completely objective. The truth is always hard to digest.

I do not like to write letters such as this, but I felt I had the right to answer in the same manner the student government was afforded. I was personally insulted by the letter, and I would hope that they would apologize to me and the newspaper I represent. Surely, if we had written as many groundless charges we would be remiss if we did not apologize.

Social Issues

To the Editor:

Dear Name Withheld Upon Request ("Wrong Protest" p. 4 and 6, Nov. 18, 1983):

It would appear that you have fallen into the same sewer, or is it bed, with the former editors of the Villanovan. If you had been at our "booze" protest, you would have noticed that the word alcohol was not even mentioned during the presentation. Just because Jimmy D. sees alcohol as the only social issue on campus does not mean we do. We formed this committee to address the entire scope of social life here at Villanova. If you only equate social life with alcohol, I would like to suggest that you attend some session at the Villanova Counseling Center.

As general information to all concerned students, our committee plans to take scientific polls to determine just what the needs of the students are. If the result show alcohol as a concern, we will pursue the issue. However, if the results show that Nicaragua is a social issue here, then I assure you that we will pursue the issue with equal vigor. Other topics to be covered include football, visitation and community relations.

I would certainly hope that the new editors will give us the kind of coverage we deserve and will not

U.S. and U.S.S.R.: No Comparison

To the Editor:

As a teacher, I respect the right to freedom of speech and everyone's personal views. However, any comparison of the American effort in Grenada to the Russian invasion of Afghanistan is counter to all human decency.

Anyone who equates American international actions with that of the Soviet Union understands neither of the two. In this case, one should not lose sight of the fact that it is not the means to an end, but the actual end itself which is significant.

The Communistic interpretation of the word liberation is a true mockery of the word, while Americans have given up their lives and fortunes to liberating millions of people on this earth. For example, the struggle against Imperial Japan and the German Reich demonstrated our unselfish commitment to human rights. The people of France, the Benelux countries, Denmark, Norway, Italy, Austria and Greece, as well as the liberated countries of Asia were able to return to an independent self-governing way of life. On the other hand, countries that were "liberated" by the Soviet Union were forced to replace one tyranny with another. Anyone who doubts this fact should remember the "Iron Curtain," which was established primarily to keep people in and not out of the Soviet."Paradise." How many people have fled the Western world, particularly the United States to settle in the Soviet Union? You could count them on your fingers. But refugees from the Communistic Empires who have settled in the United States, including myself, are in the millions. They also represent a greater population than many of our nations' states.

We have a police force that tries to keep people out and not in, because close to a million people enter the United States each year illegally for the sole purpose of enjoying our democracy. In fact, if we had an unlimited immigration policy the suffering populace of this world would engulf us with their presence. The United States is unquestionably a cross-section of the world and represents, as a nation, a greater moral force than the United Nations ever will. One should never lose sight of the fact that while many of the means are the same, the ends are different. For example, a policeman and a criminal use guns to enforce their will. Both may take lives in their effort to achieve their goals. But no one would question the right of the policeman, who is upholding the law, to be well-armed and protected to carry out his duties. But we condemn and punish the criminals who use the same guns to oppose the law.

The Russians have proven themselves to be an international outlaw, who will use any means, including force to enslave the population of this world. The United States' forces, however, represent the only hope for humanity. Although its use may be controversial to some, it is a beacon of light for the rest of the world, including those under Soviet domination.

In conclusion, at the risk of being misunderstood just as former General Motors Chairman Wilson was, I would like to paraphrase his famous quotation, "What is good for General Motors is good for America," to read, "What is good for America is good for the world."

On Tufano

To the Editor:

After having served as Paul Tufano's appointed Vice President in Student Government for the 1982-83 term, and now serving as an elected senator for the College of Commerce and Finance, I feel compelled to comment on Mr. Tufano's recent letter to the Villanovan.

Paul, and everyone in last year's administration, Myself included, worked very hard for the return of football. Our efforts provided the opportunity for 96.4% of the student body polled to voice their support for the restoration of football.

In the November 18, 1983 issue of the Villanovan, Mr. Tufano cited Student Body President, Patrick Leahy, and his administration, Myself included, as having shirked the responsibility of serving the students of Villanova University. It has been the practice of the present administration to make [illegible] on the facts — not on emotions. The football issue is no exception.

Last year's administration gathered the facts, and those facts have not changed. The student body is still overwhelmingly in support of football, and, in fact, have voted to financially support the program. This information has already been presented to the Board of Trustees. We stand firm in believing that emotions will not help solve the issue, but only hurt the image of Villanova University. The decision will be based upon the facts, not emotions stirred from a rally.

Tunnel vision is a very dangerous thing. Student Government is about more than just football, important as it is. Far from having shirked our responsibilities, we have faced the important issues of Villanova head on. The alcohol policy is, perhaps, the best case in point.

The purpose of this letter is not to put Student Government on a pedestal, but to clarify the questions raised by Mr. Tufano.

dent, student, and current Villanova Law School student, Paul A. Tufano.

It was very hard to overlook the fact that this letter was outlined, and also that the 'title' of the letter, one that I imagine was made by the editor, was in much larger print than the other editorials. After checking four back issues of the Villanovan from the current school year (Sept. 9 and 23, and Oct. 14 and 21) I could not find either of these techniques utilized in the Letters to the Editor section of the paper.

As to the content of the former Student Body President's letter, simply by writing a letter, he seems to contradict his primary intention. ("This is why I, like other past leaders, remain silent after leaving office." Nov. 18)

With this statement I do not agree. I feel that because of the experience Mr. Tufano had gained during his term in office, he could at least offer opinions to the current president — an action that would be nothing but beneficial to the current student body. It is only when a former office holder speaks out against those who should be consideredcolleagues is the responsibility to the student of Villanova, the main concern of all issues, "shirked." It is here that Mr. Tufano is most at fault. Not in speaking out, but in speaking out against the current student government.

Political Paranoia

To the Editor:

In response to the letter penned by Mr. Walt Kramarz (Nov. 11, 1983, the Villanovan): Mr. Kramarz strikes a sensitive philosophic nerve when he suggests implicitly that Mr. Jackson, by virtue of his seditious convictions, is unpatriotic. The suggestion that Mr. Jackson would sooner denounce U.S. actions rather than "march against Soviet genocide," represents a paranoia which, if relied upon to justify decisions, would prove frightening in the ramifications. Mr. Kramarz's decidedly narrow "us v. them" view of U.S.-Soviet relations, seems to be the standard against which he measures the validity of any criticism of U.S. policy.

More importantly, Mr. Kramarz's reaction to the opinions put forth by Mr. Jackson, provokes a question that will linger long after the headlines of today have faded. The question is precisely this: Should articulated political dissent have a place within the philosophical bounds of the American political system?

Certainly, few Americans would argue that freedom of expression should not be tolerated. However, Mr. Kramarz, in an effort to incite patriotism, does in fact threaten this freedom. His illogical assumption that Mr. Jackson is a "comrade," smacks of "McCarthyism," and the paranoia it embodied.

Mr. Kramarz's words go beyond mere mudslinging. The ideas behind his words symbolize a very real threat to the pluralistic society that is America.

Visceral reactions based on unreasonable premises are not the stuff of intelligent criticism. They merely perpetuate parochialism. I urge Mr. Kramarz to exercise foresight before making any more irresponsible accusation. The sword of persecution is doubleedged.

Cartoons

To the Editor:

As you know, one aspect of nearly all newspapers today is the political cartoon. A pamphlet issued by Villanova's Education Department, describing a course being offered next semester on political cartoons, notes that 'It (the cartoon) conveys its message quickly — sometimes subtly, sometimes brashly — but generally gets its point across to more people than do editorials. The cartoon has natural appeal to students, and it serves as an excellent springboard for discussions."

Under the previous editorial staff of the Villanovan, for at least the preceding three consecutive weeks there have appeared in this paper several cartoons, all liberal in tone. The Villanovan, however, is a paper of interest to Villanovans of all political complexions, and as such it should strive for a more balanced approach when allocating space for political art. I am sure that many, of what is regarded as a conservative student body, do not want this paper to become a college version of The Washington Post.

Labor Dispute

To the Editor:

The summer of '82 could have been disastrous for our student body and administration had labor disputes not been settled before the next term.

A possible strike seemed imminent among 225 Villanova workers. Employees of local 473 include the maintenance personnel, housekeepers and electrical technicians. Villanova is very dependent upon these people to ensure a safe and clean atmosphere in which to study and live.

We find it difficult to understand that the administration would allow such an occurrence to transpire. The gravity of the situation is such that it could have had a disastrous effect upon the students' health and well-being, not to mention that the food delivery trucks, though not associated with local #473, would honor any picket lines affiliated with the AFL-CIO. Although most of the food wouldn't have been missed, the administration should have been thinking about the students and the effect a strike would have had on them.

The reason for the strike was that the workers were without a contract for two weeks. This, combined with no real job security, created an atmosphere of animosity between the workers and the administration. Union members requested a 15 percent increase over the next two years. The administration was only prepared to pay a 10 percent increase. At this point, they were almost forced to sign what was handed to them by Union President Michael Matz.

The standard operating procedure for this situation would require union-subsidized arbitration between employer and employee. Instead of this, a vote was taken among the union members to determine the acceptability of the proposed contract. There was a full turnout of voters that day in the Connelly Center. What happened was that there were more votes cast than voters present. The error was immediately noticed and made known to the president. He subtly restored order in an attempt to cover up the issue. The president, who is supposed to represent the interests of his people, took it upon himself to mentally add more yes votes in favor of the 10 percent pay increase. This was observed by union members standing behind him.

An immediate re-vote was called for by the employees. The request was denied by the president on the premise that there is only one official casting of votes. A meeting concerning the validity of the voting was later taken to the National Labor Relations Board. They could only corroborate what the president had said about there being only one official casting of votes. Nothing was ever done to rectify the fraudulent vote, and the workers were left with the administration's initial offer.

Luckily, this all took place over the summertime. However, we students face the same situation in two years, when their old contract runs out. If measures aren't taken to avoid any future problems between management and labor, we the students will surely suffer the indignity of their irresponsibility.

Abortion is a national crisis. At stake is our future and the future of our children. We invite all students who believe in and care about the sanctity of life to join us for the March for Life this year. It provides an excellent opportunity to stand up for what we believe, lobby our congressmen, show the nation we care, and eventually bring an end to this crime against the unborn — this crime against humanity.

Anyone who is interested should come to the March for Life meeting (see FYI this week) or stop by the Villanovans for Life office in Dougherty Hall. We are looking forward to seeing you there!

Square Dance

To the Editor:

On Nov. 12, University Christian Outreach sponsored a square dance in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. It was a huge success, with ninety or so people attending and all seeming to have a great time. It started about 8:30 p.m. with the caller teaching a few basics of square dancing, and gradually adding on to those to form a complete routine.

The second session started with a few more steps added on to those we already knew, culminating in a final square dance of all the techniques we learned. The night ended with a rousing performance of the Virginia Reel. Refreshments of soda, pretzels and popcorn were available throughout the night, and many people stayed afterward to get to know one another. It seemed interesting to me that amid the current furor over the alcohol policy, a large number of people can have a super time on campus without alcohol.

March for Life

To the Editor:

To all students:

On Jan. 23, 1984, Americans from around the nation will meet in Washington, D.C., to participate in the March for Life.

The March for Life is just what its name implies; it is a chance for us to reaffirm our faith in mankind to respect the life of all human beings from the moment of conception to the moment of death. It is also a chance for us to proclaim our resolve to protect the rights of those who have been left unprotected by the shield of the Constitution.

For the last eleven years — since the Jan. 22, 1973, Roe vs. Wade Supreme Court decision — the right to life of the unborn child has been held in callous disregard. Thanks to the Supreme Court a beautiful, fragile life can be extinguished on a whim. Since that fateful decision, fifteen million babies have been murdered. Fifteen Million! That is nearly 13 times the number of Americans killed in wars in our entire history as a nation. It is time to call for an end to this bloodbath.

Why 'sic'?

Editor's Note: The following letter was submitted to June Lytel, a professor of English and the advisor to the Villanovan, who forwarded it to the newspaper.

Dear Mrs. Lytel:

I really must register a complaint about today's issue of The Villanovan. As a bachelor of English who studied journalism at the University of Connecticut and was a feature writer for UConn's Connecticut Daily Campus, I have some conception of what can reasonably be expected of a universitynewspaper. Frankly, The Villanovan doesn't even come close.

The specific matter that prompted me to write was the editor's treatment of a letter written to the paper by W.J. Pezalla. No doubt the editor thought he or she was being frightfully witty by leaving all of Pezalla's spelling and grammatical errors intact and following each with the expression (sic). The fact is that Pezalla had a legitimate gripe, and there was nothing funny about publicly mocking him. What is funny, in a bitterly ironic sort of way, is that the editor, in his vast superiority, included one (sic) following a word that was perfectly correct, and omitted another after an obvious error. This is not surprising, coming from a paper that prints on its front page such phrases as, "Ford will be accompanied by the accorded number of Secret Service men former presidents are usually ascribed," and "As the day's events continue, addressed groups will populate to enable more students to see and listen to Ford."

I realize that, since there is no journalism program at Villanova, it may be difficult to staff the student newspaper with first-rate editors, feature writers, and reporters. However, simple literacy is not too much to ask of any college student writing for publication, and a sense of journalistic responsibility is absolutely essential.

You may wonder why I do not write this letter to The Villanovan. I have no wish to suffer a fate similar to that of W.J. Pezalla. I did feel it necessary, though, to express my opinion to someone connected with the paper, and I hope my comments will be of interest to you.

Lisa Ferraro Parmelee

June Lytel responds: "The Villanovan has been awarded First Place — Special Merit the past two years by the American Scholastic Press Association (ASPA). Of the 1,100 schools in the ASPA, the Villanovan was one of only 17 newspapers awarded First place and was only one of the three repeat First place recipients. In the future, please address all correspondence to the Villanovan."

Underpass Closes; Work Continues

By BETH CAPELLI

On Nov. 9, the railroad underpass on North Ithan and County Line Roads closed.

There has been a severe problem of flooding with each rainfall for some time, causing traffic problems.

The storm-shore line has been progressively deteriorating, consequently causing a major drainage problem at the underpass.

Staff Photo

No. Ithan Underpass, site of construction.

Recently the line collapsed, forcing the complete cut off from both directions of the underpass, according to a construction worker for PennDOT.

Since the cut-off, there have been no major traffic problems, although there have been numerous complaints from those who travel Ithan Rvenue daily.

The construction work was scheduled to be completed by Nov. 30, yet due to the bad weather the work is now backed up at least three or four days.

The underpass is due for reopening sometime early in December.

Until then, travelers will have to use alternate routes.

Striving for Awareness

says that diversity is the main difference.

"At a class I teach at Temple, there is just so much diversity. I have a woman who's 65, an older man who is a police officer, and a number of black students. When they talk about the experiences they had, you open up to new ideas. But when students at Villanova talk, their experiences are all similar, so there are not a lot of differences to learn about and ideas to exchange. So they're not changing politically because they're not experiencing."

Continuing with comparisons, Balchunis, who did her undergraduate work at the University of Pennsylvania and works with the College Democrats there, notes that there are political differences between the two College Democrats organizations, probably based on the location of the two universities.

Their College Democrats are more interested with electoral issues. They have endorsed candidates, worked for candidates, have made up official ballots to give to potential voters and have canvassed for various candidates. Villanova is more issue-oriented-like Grenada.

"For example, the organization is going to sponsor a political workshop in the spring that will possibly feature Goode, Edgar, Democratic presidential candidate Gary Hart and Charles Manatat, the Democratic National committee chairman. The objective is to make students more politically aware about political use of the media, fundraising, political communication, get out the vote, etc. If we make students more aware that they can be politically effective, their political effectiveness will rise. It's been proven that if you feel politically effective, you'll go out and do something," said Balchunis.

The workshop will also feature information from all the Democratic presidential candidates. The College Democrats have received a lot of correspondence and are hoping to get enough material to make complete presentations.

Stressing the importance of student political awareness and activism, Balchunis says that getting into politics at any level can be extremely rewarding.

"You learn so much," explained Balchunis. "When I was an undergraduate, I didn't have enough time to get involved but now I regret I didn't. For example, Mondale's people just called and they asked if we could get students to canvass for them, register voters for them and Jan. 16, the nominating committee is coming down and they want the students to go around and get signatures of the Democrats.

Balchunis also said that Gary Hart's campaign is interested in recruiting students to work for them. "Hart says that if we get enough students, they'll pay for room and board and send a bus up if they wanted to work in New Hampshire the first two weeks in January."

Balchunis, who laughs at the number of times she is mistaken for a student, says that her effort with the College Democrats and her teaching effectiveness has been boosted by her outside work with the Goode campaign, enabling her to relate political experience on a much more practical level.

The next step in the political life of Balchunis has not yet been determined. She has been offered teaching positions at Drexel and Temple and is awaiting word from Villanova. However, Balchunis may forfeit all teaching offers if she is offered a position in Goode's administration, something Balchunis is hopeful of obtaining. Having submitted a resume, Balchunis will know by Christmas, when Goode is expected to finalize his cabinet.

"But if I get a post, I'll still be here helping out the College Democrats. I enjoy it too much to leave. Think of the field trips they'll be able to take to City Hall.

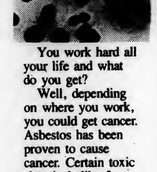
SOME PEOPLE RETIRE WITH MORE THAN JUST A GOLD WATCH.



You work hard all your life and what do you get?

Well, depending on where you work, you could get cancer. Asbestos has been proven to cause cancer. Certain toxic chemicals like formaldehyde and freon are being investigated. If you've worked with radioactive particles or even worked near them, your risk is greater.

And even if you've worked nowhere hazardous, it wouldn't hurt to get a checkup. Because the incidence of cancer after the age of 45 to 50 increases rapidly.

Over the next several years the American Cancer Society will be conducting more research into certain lifestyles and exposures which could increase cancer mortality.

So know the risks.

Don't smoke.

An Open Letter to the Board of Trustees

Without a doubt, Villanova University has not been the same since that morning in April when it was publicly announced that after 87 years the football program had been dropped. There were many who did not agree with the decision or the way in which the decision was reached; but that is past history and we see no benefit in continuing that debate.

In the 141 years of Villanova's history, no single issue has proved to be so divisive and injurious as has this one. The Villanova family has been torn apart and embarrassed in public newspapers and in television news stories, and Villanova has only suffered because of it. The time for this to end has come. The time for healing is NOW.

The Board of Trustees' committee to define an intercollegiate football program at Villanova University spent long hours of hard work to study the different possibilities that might be acceptable to the University. They voted to recommend a Division 1-AA program as it would meet all the criteria set by the Board in defining an acceptable program. There were three criteria. First, financial sustainability; second, attractiveness to the various constituencies within the University community; and third, that it be in keeping with Villanova's mission statement and high standards of academic excellence.

The major reason cited for dropping the program was that it had become a financial burden. But the support pledged in good faith by students and alumni is proof that the program can be not only financially sustainable, but an overall asset to the Villanova community as well.

It was agreed upon that the schools competing at the 1-AA level would be compatible with Villanova and with what Villanova stands for. It was also agreed upon that Division 1-AA would be acceptable to most, if not all, constituencies.

Insofar as the football issue has served to divide us, so can it serve to unite us. There can be no doubt about the need for reconciling the relationships between the Board, the students, the alumni, and the administration, and while the move to restore football cannot be seen only as a means to do this, it would be an undeniable step in the right direction.

Remember that you and I make Villanova what it is. Villanova exists because of its students...past, present, and future students alike. We who are Villanovans, ask you to hear us and help us to make Villanova the best that it can be-on all planes: academically, spiritually, athletically, and socially.

We urge you, not only as members of Student Government, but as students, soon to be alumni, who care deeply about Villanova and about its future, to consider your position as a Board member, the responsibility that has been entrusted to you to guide Villanova into tomorrow, and to vote to establish a Division 1-AA Football program at Villanova University.

Respectfully Submitted,
The Villanova Student Government

Senior Views Lebanon Up Front

Editor's Note: This is a firsthand report by an NROTC student who was stationed in Lebanon for summer break. He is currently a senior majoring in international business."

By BOB SALDUTTI

Norfolk, VA: 1500 hours. Saturday, May 8, 1983. Last night's evening news told of three American ships being shelled off the coast of Beirut, Lebanon. I remember now the strange mix of emotions churning inside of me as I prepared myself to enter a world that, until yesterday, was only as real as the pictures in Time and the lectures in political science class.

Things were happening quickly; I had no sooner finished my last exam on Friday when I found myself walking up the gangplank aboard the USS Austin Landing Platform Dock-4 (LPD-4). It was strange to watch wives and children say their last goodbyes, knowing that they wouldn't see each other for another six months.

The Austin left Norfolk at 10 Saturday morning and arrived at Moorehead City, N.C., almost three hours later, where we began to take on our attachment of marines. Much to my amazement, the 24th Marine Amphibious Unit (MAV) arrived not in green military trucks, but rather in the luxury of a convoy of air-conditioned Trailway buses! They were comprised of some 650 marines and over 2500 tons of equipment and ammunition.

The loading process was done in an amazingly short period of time, and in only a few hours we were again underway to Beirut. The journey that lay ahead would carry us across the Atlantic, the Mediterranean and finally into the Middle East . . . roughly 5200 miles.

The Syrians were holding strong in the north while the Israelis continued to occupy southern Lebanon, with the peacekeeping force strategically centered in and around the city of Beirut.

After almost two weeks at sea, we finally arrived in Beirut Harbor. I was surprised, at first, by the quiet and peacefulness that seemed to surround the area. The Shoufe Mountains came right to the water's edge, giving the city an almost mystical quality; but as we neared the coast, the evidence of a country torn by civil war was undeniable. Perhaps most shocking was that almost every building had suffered some sort of destruction.

"I was surprised at first by the quiet and peacefulness. . . but as we neared the coast the evidence of a country torn apart by civil war was undeniable."

In the two weeks that it took us to cross, many different things happened. I was assigned to the engineering department and placed on various watch billets. I began my first watch that night, and was told to report to the bridge at 4 a.m.

Meanwhile, I had time to stow my gear and familiarize myself with the particulars of the ship. I found it to be quite an experience to go from the life of academia at Villanova to working 16 hours a day aboard Austin.

The feeling that I was a part of something very important was quickly taking hold. Our task force consisted of five ships in all: The USS Iwo Jima, USS Harlan County, USS Portland, USS LaSalle and the USS Austin. We were part of a multinational peacekeeping force assigned to the Beirut area since its inception in early December.

We were anchored approximately two miles off the coast and immediately began preparation for the next day's amphibious landing. At 5 a.m., we were ready to go.

The amphibious operation is regarded as the most complex operation in modern warfare. It employs virtually all types of ships, aircraft, armament, equipment and skills in its execution and requires the closest coordination and training, to ensure that troops and their equipment "hit the beach" on time.

I went ashore aboard a Landing Craft Unit (LCU), along with two Howitzers, two jeeps, two trucks and 55 fully equipped U.S. Marines. After the landing, I returned to the ship as we began to help the marines ashore with everything from fresh water and laundry, to food and medical supplies.

Two weeks later, I made my second trip ashore. This time I was leaving Austin for good. I was accompanied by Paul Pontrello, a fellow Villanovan from the class of 1984, who was stationed aboard Austin for summer training.

Upon arrival, we were happily greeted by a warm and friendly hand: Lt. Col. P.X. Stenner, a 1969 graduate of Villanova. Stenner is now the executive officer of the 24th Marine Amphibious Unit, which is the contingent of marines surrounding Beirut International Airport, a key strategic point in returning Beirut to normalcy.

Stenner led us on a tour of the area surrounding the airport, including the marine outpost and both the Israeli and the Lebanese/American check points. The next two days were spent touring the marine outposts and several Moslem villages. We were quartered at what was formerly the Federal Aviation Building, which was humorously dubbed the "Beirut Hilton" by the marines.

My first view of the city revealed many paradoxes. The devastation seemed to go unnoticed as people throughout the city carried on in what appeared to be their normal fashion. I was struck by the number of Mercedes, a constant reminder of the wealth and prestige that Beirut once knew, which at one time boasted over 75 international banks.

Now, the city is spotted with countless vendors selling everything from Pepsi-Cola to American T-shirts. The Lebanese people themselves were very receptive to us, and would often wave and smile as we drove by. Many children seemed to have a real affection for us. They would approach us throughout the city to shake hands.

Perhaps my rather tranquil life in New Jersey and Villanova, led me to have some very strong feelings toward the situation. In many respects, Beirut was at the other end of the universe from Villanova. The effect of being exposed to Beirut has definitely increased my appreciation for the United States.

Yet the strongest feeling I encountered within myself, was a sense of tragedy and loss at the pain and suffering of the people of Lebanon. They are the ones who pay for the costs of the war, a price too high for too many, and a loss too deep for words.

Editors Invade Washington, D.C.

The following article was penned by the recently departed editor-in-chief of the Villanovan and is a factual account of a recent trip taken by Villanovan editors and the newspaper's advisor.

By LEONARD J. LaBARTH

"Washington is a city where everything, even good intentions, can get lost."
"Tips for Out-of-Towners" NBC News

What happens when eight Villanovan editors descend upon an unsuspecting Washington, D.C.? "Excitement," "chaos," and "fascination" are a few words that could accurately describe the events and experiences encountered by the Villanovan entourage that visited the nation's capital Nov. 18-19 for the annual "Investigative Reporters and Editors' conference sponsored by NBC News.

Departing senior editors Nancy Alberici, Dean Balsamini, Jim DeLorenzo, Joanne Dollymore, Len La Barth, Mary Claire Leahy, John Lynch, new editor-in-chief Joe Marusak, and advisor June Lytel, embarked on a journey to Washington to acquire advanced journalistic knowledge and to do a little sightseeing: taking in the culture and the heritage. Some of the material we picked up will never be found in a travel brochure.

The Amtrak rail system provided us with the means of transportation to our destination. For all of the abuse heaped upon the idea of "training," we found it to be an enjoyable two hour-plus trip that was made more than slightly tolerable by the best feature on the train: the bar car. Not only was the basic fare of variousliqueurs and snacks offered for our consumption, but also delicious sandwiches and other culinary tidbits were made available at a very reasonable cost. We highly recommend the bacon, cheese and egg sandwich on toast ($2), with a Scotch and soda ($1.50) and the microwave-prepared hot buttered popcorn (75¢).

Upon our arrival at Washington's center of transportation, Union Station, the first thing that struck us was the brightness of the city. Emerging from the station, we were dazzled by the pervading illumination. The streets looked as if they had just been swept, as the lights danced on the spotless concrete and macadam. Taking our collective breaths away was the eye-catching display of the lights focused upon edifices that had the appearance of recently being whitewashed. In contrast to the too-often noticeable Philadelphia decay, Washington looked like a city of organized progress.

Being that it was nighttime, proper photomaking was next to nearly impossible, but that did not deter the amateur photographers in the group. Fortunately, we had a cooperative bunch of cab drivers taking us to our hotel who responded to our demands readily: "Slow down, please. Is this an important building? We want to get a picture." Nothing like letting the tourist image stick out like a sore thumb.

Arrival at our abode for the night brought to us yet another pleasant surprise. No dorm-like conditions here. NBC went first class and booked us into The Hotel Washington (see what happens when you're media stars!) The hotel proved to be a spacious and tastefully decorated establishment staffed by courteous foreigners who just nodded in agreement to everything we said and stood there, hands extended, waiting for the customary tip just for greeting us at the door.

Within moments of checking in, our group was ready to assault the Washington nightlife scene.

One of the amazing things encountered on this trip was the fact that so little distance separated the hallowed hall of government and those who run it, and those persons who practice the oldest profession in the world. Barely three blocks separate the White House and the redlight district. Of course, being of the investigative mind, the group decided that an exploration of Washington's seamier side was necessary. However, halfway through this aimless tour, our brave little band of social life investigators decided we had seen enough, including distant views of the movie houses that featured such classics as "Boys in the Lockerroom and "Women and Whips." Following some stimulating intellectual conversation with some of the city's natives; "Hey babe you got a light?" and "Yo man, how 'bout a smoke?" — it was time to take leave of our environment.

Discovering that we were famished from our sociological exploration, we agreed that a light dinner was in order. Hearing of a

Advent is a Season of Renewal

By CHRISTOPHER M. JANOSIK

For how many, I wonder, was the announcement of the first Sunday of Advent this past weekend a surprise? Maybe just a reminder that there were only twenty-eight shopping days left 'til Christmas? Where, I wonder, did an Advent wreath quickly follow the jack-o'-lantern and the cornucopia as simply another seasonal centerpiece in our homes? It is conceivable that we can, these days, be made to think that as we push away from the Thanksgiving Day table, it really must be time to trim the tree and unwrap the packages. But what then of the season of Advent?

It should be an opportunity or an invitation to renew our belief in the glory of Christ's birth and of His second coming. The scripture of the season represents the undeniably clear message of Advent. The words demand a reevaluation of ourselves, our relationships, a comparison of our whole beings with the model left for us through His first coming. "Let us cast off deeds of darkness and put on the armor of light." "Live in perfect harmony with one another." "Reform your lives! The reign of God is at hand." Let Advent, then, be a time for reconciliation, for preparation.

Does any season offer a better opportunity to reflect on the purpose of His coming, His life on earth? Surely He came so that our sins might be forgiven. Yet, no less important, it was through His coming, His example, that a people were challenged to reorganize an entire social agenda. Should it be any less so with us today, as war, poverty and crime dominate our own society? If not, let us renew our dedication to comforting, to caring, to peace, to justice, to action. Let Advent become for us a time of awareness of what is, a time of commitment to what we can be.

But what if we are overwhelmed by the Santa Clauses, the tinsel and lights, the sometimes frantic and often superficial gift giving of the secular season? Even in this there is an opportunity.

In what other season could we more clearly understand that we ourselves are God's gifts? If we focus not so much on things, but on our genuine selves, Advent offers us the realization that we are His best gifts to each other. The challenge? To appreciate ourselves for that which we truly are, and to offer these gifts more completely to all. Let Advent, then, be a time for mutuality, a time for love.

The possibilities of Advent are many. May we use them well so that, like the farmer, having prepared soil, we can wait with confidence and patience, knowing that we are always ready to sing . . . "Joy to the world, the Lord had come!"

Chris Janosik is Villanova's Director for Residence Life.

Pa. Dancer Performs at V.U.

By LAURA FORTUNATO

Imagine, even for one night, the west lounge of Dougherty Hall, a room which silently shelves memorable trophies, becoming the home of such culture as the Pennsylvania Ballet.

Believe it or not, it happened recently. The nostalgic room awakened with the sound of music and the voice of a prominent dancer, Jeff Jones, a soloist with the Pennsylvania Ballet Company, the third leading ballet company in the world.

A short break in his performing schedule has enabled him to make appearances throughout Philadelphia as an instructor. Soon he will return to the stage for the December production of the "Nutcracker Suite."

Showing talents in ballet, modern dance, jazz, tap and singing, Jones brings to the stage 21 years of training. He began his career at age nine, with a scholarship from the Ford Foundation. Later, he attended the American Ballet Theatre School, the Harkness House for Ballet Arts and the North Carolina School of the Arts.

In 1975, he joined Nureyev and friends at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C., dancing in Sir Frederick Ashton's "Marguerite and Armand." Under contract with American Ballet Theater II, he danced principle roles in Toni Lander's staging of Bournonville's "Napoli Divertissement," Kevin Haigen's "Piano Concerto" and the title role in Lucas Hoving's "Icarus."

In '76 he joined the Cleveland Ballet Company as a principle dancer in the following roles: Dennis Nahat's Ballets of "Contra Concerti," "The Gift," "Ontogeny," "Quicksilver," "Ozone Hour," "Us," "Suite," "Characteristique," "Sometimes," "Mendelssohn Symphony," "Brahms Quintet," and the Cavalier in Nahat's production of the "Nutcracker." He also performed in "Ballet on Broadway," a single performance of new works produced by Dustin and Ann Hoffman.

As a principle dancer in both '79 and '80 for the Kenley Players, the leading musical comedy summer stock theatre in the United States, he performed in "Hello Dolly" with Betty White and "Oklahoma" with Dirk Benedict. He was also featured in the Ballet Repertoire Company of New York's production of "Flower Festival," "Icarus" and "Hansen Concerto."

Before joining the Pennsylvania Ballet in 1981, he made a number of guest appearances with the Maryland Youth Ballet and the Tampa Ballet Company. Appearances took the artist from Delaware to Florida and throughout Central and South America. At age 29, Jones continues to see the beauty of art in his future. "The art is refreshing and helps you get in touch with yourself. It also poses a great challenge to go beyond all conceivable limits," he noted.

As a popular guest artist, Jones has taught and choreographed with the Philadelphia Civic Ballet, the School of Cleveland Ballet,

Jeff Jones

Tampa Ballet and Sims Academy of St. Louis. Productions include: "Fast and Fancy" and "Concertto de Otto and Opium." Teaching has been quite rewarding for the artist. "I'm able to give the students another dimension to work with. I really enjoyed the trip here, the dancers were enthusiastic and receptive. I hope to visit Villanova again in the future."

Villanova's dance instructor, Jean Haver, emphasized the prestige of a visit from such a professional. "Jeff was a great motivating force for the group. The intensity of the class along with his dynamic personality brought out the best in everyone. I've never seen the group so enthusiastic."

Editors "Investigate" the Nation's Capital block of restaurants that sounded good, we separated into taxis and left for the upcoming gourmet experience.

A future political candidate getting the votes.

The majority of the group supped at the Tuscon Cantina, a quaint little establishment that grew on us with each passing moment. Featuring Southwestern American food, including chili, burritos, tamales, tortillas and nachos, this restaurant, located at 2605 Connecticut Ave., N.W., had an ambience that lent to the enjoyable few hours we spent there.

If dining there, we recommend the Tombstone dish, consisting of a beef tamale, a cheese enchilada covered with chili and served with rice and refried beans and a beef taco ($4.95), a pitcher of Dos Equis beer ($4.40) and a side order of Guacamole and chips ($2.60). Wash it down with a Gila Monster (tequila, banana liquer and fruit juices) for $3.25 and the meal is complete.

Those editors brave enough to endure further nocturnal activities were delighted to find the Lord Telford Pub located in the rear of the restaurant. Here, a hearty group of four editors were treated to a darts exhibition and spent most of the time trying to distinguish between the Frank Zappa and the Frank Sinatra songs on the juke box (remember, it was 2 a.m. and the drinks were cheap).

Soon, it was closing time (Note: Washington bars stay open until 3) and we were soon on the streets heading home. A few quick stops at the local 24 hour libraries and museums, and we were finished our Friday night excursion.

The 7 a.m. wakeup call found us all bright-eyed and bushy-tailed, anxious to begin the day's activities. Morning presentations featured Robert Dubill from USA Today, Skip Hidlay from The Charlotte Observer, Bettina Gregory from ABC News, Nicholas Horrock from Newsweek and William Marimow from the Philadelphia Inquirer. High noon saw us lunching with guest speaker Washington Merry-Go-Round columnist Jack Anderson.

The afternoon consisted of presentations from Laura Stepp of The Washington Post, Robert Jackson of the Los Angeles Times, Phil "Washington is slime" Gailey of The New York Times and Jack Landau of the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press. All too soon the conference ended. After selling enough subscriptions to the Villanovan to cover the return trip, it was off to dinner at the Old Post Office at 12th and Pennsylvania Ave., N.W.

Stuffed to the gills and now sporting "I Love Washington, D.C. tee-shirts" the editors returned to Union Station, boarded an Amtrak and began the journey home. Once again, the train's bar car did a swift business as our group enticed a Billy Joel/Frank Sinatra sing-a-long that had the other passengers cheering and clapping and the conductor dancing in the aisle.

A Washington hot spot.

As we reflect back on our trip, we would like to thank several people who made the journalistic journey so interesting. First of all, we are indebted to James Polk of NBC News who handled most of our arrangements and took our money. We would also like to thank the Amtrak bar car bartenders, the two Webster's who posed with Dean; the old drunk who lost a drink in John's lap; Joe Marusak for tagging along with his predecessors and in the time there, picking up a lot of new information (some useful); and of course, our advisor June Lytel, who put up with us for 28 hours. Not an easy feat but always enjoyable. Right?

Who knows, who cares

Dylan's 'Infidels' are True to Life

By NICK ANASTASIO

Bob Dylan's new album, "Infidels," has been hailed by just about every critic in the country as his best album in ten years. Many critics are calling it a comeback, a return to form, a rejuvenation of pre-Christian Dylan.

In a sense they are right (this is the best Dylan album in the last ten years), but they are also wrong. The pre-Christian Bob Dylan never went away completely. His three Christian albums — "Slow Train Coming," "Saved," and "Shot of Love," — may have been too preachy, sounding like they were written by Jerry Falwell, but Dylan still considers "Shot of Love" his best-ever album, and the song "Shot of Love" his "most perfect song."

Musically, Dylan's finest album ever.

So what makes "Infidels" so great? First of all, there are the lyrics. Influenced by no one but himself, Dylan accurately takes shots at labor unions ("Union Sundown"), questionable peaceniks ("Man of Peace"), warmongers ("License to Kill"), and critics of Israel's foreign policy ("Neighborhood Bully"), among others. Secondly, and more importantly, there is the music. Musically, this is Dylan's finest album ever.

The album consists of eight songs. These eight were chosen out of thirty songs Dylan recorded during two months in the studios. Mark Knopfler of Dire Straits coproduced the album and played guitar, exerting a strong influence on the music.

Because of Knopfler, Dylan says that "Infidels" is "the easiest record I ever made . . . He encouraged me to go to the studio when I didn't feel like it . . . He helped me make this record in a thousand ways, not only musically, which in itself would have been enough. Mark's a brilliant guy; I can't say enough about him."

"Infidels" opens with "Jokerman," which features Knopfler and former Rolling Stone Mick Taylor swapping leads and ends with Dylan's own distinct harmonica. Next is "Sweetheart Like You," which sounds like a Dire Straits song. Dylan's voice even matches Knopfler's in terms of inflection and accent. With Knopfler on guitar and Dire Straits keyboardist Alan Clark also present, "Sweetheart Like You" sounds like an out-take from Dire Strait's "Love Over Gold" album. As for the lyrics, it is safe to say that supporters of the Equal Rights Amendment would not be appreciative of Dylan's message.

Then there is "Neighborhood Bully." Who is the neighborhood bully? Why, none other than Israel. "When he destroyed the bomb factory nobody was glad/the bombs were meant for him/he was supposed to feel bad" and "Seen his family scattered/people hounded and torn/he's always on trial/for just being born" are two obvious references to modern-day Israel.

The entire song is a defense of Israel's foreign policy and world views towards Israel. "He buys obsolete weapons/and he won't be denied/but no one sends flesh and blood/to fight by his side" illustrates the United States' position.

By a strange contrast, "Neighborhood Bully" is followed by "License to Kill," which is a sympathetic nod towards nonviolence. Dylan is the narrator, criticizing society, but kindly referring to "the woman on my block" who asks "When are they gonna take away his license to kill?" The music is a mixture of "old" Dylan (i.e. "Just Like a Woman") and Knopfler's soft textures.

Side two opens with "Man of Peace," which Dylan calls "Slowdrag blues." The refrain, "Sometimes Satan comes as a man of peace" and Clark's organ gives the song a quasi-religious feel, but Taylor's leads and Dylan's overall message: beware of everyone, especially those who seem leastthreatening — prevent it from becoming preachy.

In "Union Sundown," Dylan's attack on labor unions — "sure was a good idea 'til greed got in the way" indirectly links the unions with American big businesses exploiting the poor people of Southeast Asia and Latin America. "If it costs too much to build it at home we'll build it somewhere else." The lyrics are matched by the driving rhythms of bassist Robbie Shakespeare and drummer Sly Dunbar and Taylor's leads.

Bob Dylan then . . .

. . . and now

The last two songs, "I and I" and "Don't Fall Apart on Me Tonight," are ballads to counter the hard-biting edge of "Man of Peace" and "Union Sundown." "I and I" deals with lovers revealing their pasts to each other and provides Knopfler with the chance to accent the lyrics with his guitar licks. "Don't Fall Apart on Me Tonight" is sort of an appeal by Dylan to his audience. Dylan's harmonica and Taylor's guitar blend perfectly to close the album.

An increasing number of artists have been inflicting their views on the state of the world on the public in the last few years. Yet only Bob Dylan, Pete Townshend, Mark Knopfler, Elvis Costello, and occasionally Joe Strummer of the Clash, have had anything significant to say. Of these five, only Dylan has been able to successfully raise the social consciousness of every generation he has reached; and only Dylan commands the respect and attention of everyone.

Genesis Tour is for 'Mama'

By RICH FLINCHBAUGH

It was Friday night and the Spectrum was packed and ready for the first of three shows from one of Philly's long-loved English groups, Genesis. The enthusiastic crowd stood, as the band took the stage and began with two songs from the "Abacab" album, "Dodo" and "Abacab," setting the energetic tone of the show.

Genesis played at the Spectrum this past week and dazzled their audiences with a spectacular light show. The members are (from left) Tony Banks, Mike Rutherford, and Phil Collins.

Throughout these songs the audience couldn't help but notice the extraordinary light show. Immediately one felt that one was only being subjected to a bit of what the lights could do, and would do, before the night was through. The array was composed solely of "Varilites," which are cylindrical lights that can change colors and move in unison with eyeball-like motions.

In his typical English humor, Phil Collins greeted Philadelphia and explained that after looking through all their selections from over the years, the band chose some "old stuff" and some "new stuff." He ended up with what they would play that night, or to put it in his words, "a pile of stuff!" Since this was their "Mama Tour," they started with one of their already familiar tunes from the album, the title cut "Mama." During this the intense quality of the concert was enhanced by his almost primal screams, highlighted by pale green lights which flashed on his face, similar to the video version of the song.

Also from the new album were "That's All" and "Illegal Alien," made memorable by Collin's introduction. Looking like a Mexican fugitive who just crossed the border, Collins held a radio on his shoulder and tuned in on Philadelphia radio stations as if listening for the news about any police searches for his band of aliens on the run. The audience was prompted to sing along as a spotlight shone on the stage, where a group of roadies repeatedly sang the reprise, "It's no fun being an illegal alien!"

Afterwards, the band continued with more of the later hits from the "Abacab" album such as "Keep it Dark," "Whodunnit?" and "Man on the Corner." Also instantly recognizable because of its distinct introduction, was everybody's favorite "Follow You, Follow Me," one of the earlier Genesis tunes which epitomizes the sing-along quality which makes Genesis what it is.

But for those who thirsted for the really early Genesis; the wait was over as the group, (consisting of Tony Banks on keyboards, Mike Rutherford on guitar and bass, Daryl Stuermer on guitar and bass and Collins replacing Chester Thompson momentarily on drums), peaked instrumentally to perform the classical old Genesis sound in the medley, "In the Cage." Intensifying the dramatic mood of this pace-changing medley was the swimming ocean of lights which formed the cage-like environment on the stage, a spectacle that entranced all the crowd.

This was followed by a drum duet back and forth between Thompson and Collins playing in perfect syncopation at opposite sides of the stage.

After playing some other familiar tunes, ending with one of their best songs, "Misunderstanding," the band left the stage. But it was immediately obvious that the crowd was not prepared to let the band go, if for no other reason than the omission of their most popular song. However, the band returned to satisfy the grateful crowd and performed "Turn it On," during which Collins thanked Philadelphia.

He then led the audience in a sing-along finale of positive lyrics from songs of past decades with the message, "We all need somebody to love."

It gave the ending of the night an emotional high which seemed only appropriate for such a dynamic, entertaining and energetic show. Though the lighting, the musical content, and the band's performance were nothing less than awesome, it was ultimately Phil Collins' humor and magical relationship to an audience of such size that made the show more than just a concert, but a night of entertainment. It was a show that will remain for a long time in the minds of those who were fortunate enough to witness it.

Yes Returns With '90125'

By MIKE MATHIS

Yes is back. After two and a half years of legal squabbles and reunion rumors, a new era for Yes and their fans has arrived.

The combination of virtuoso musicianship, suite-like neo-classic structures, and the three-part high vocal harmonies made famous by Crosby, Stills and Nash, are, like the old Yes music, peppered throughout the new compositions.

The equal importance of both duplication and individualism are part of the new Yes lineup which includes bassist Chris Squire, keyboard player Tony Kaye, vocalist Jon Anderson, drummer Alan White and a virtually unknown guitarist named Trevor Rabin. Together, this combination stands in a class by itself in the annals of progressive rock music.

The "debut" album by the new Yes lineup, "90125," lacks the flashy artwork of artist Roger Dean, who designed such album covers as "Drama" and "Relayer," and has since designed both of Asia's album sleeves. One particular aspect of the cover is the absence of the familiar Yes logo, missing primarily because of the ex-Yes manager's refusal and resulting lawsuit barring the new band to use the logo. But don't let the album cover fool you; "90125" is an album full of fresh, vibrant music that may be just as integral as 1971's "Yes Album."

"Owner of a Lonely Heart" is a typical Yes song. Quick transitions and excellent harmonies are tied together to provide a full sound.

The new Yes lineup continues to utilize the most modern, musical approaches in their compositions. "It Can Happen" contains virtually no guitar at all; instead guitarist Trevor Rabin switches to the harpsichord, which makes the tune sound something like what Bach might have written. "Hold On" explores childhood musical influences; its 1950's type harmonies provide the listener a moving and enjoyable song.
